Later "Hands Up" returns an invalid from the battlefields of France and offers to release Echo from her engagement to marry him. To this the girl refuses to listen and tells him that he has done his duty well and that the bandages are the bandages of honor.

Cecil B. de Mille's New Feature Is Started

Cecil de Mille has started his newest Artcraft feature, "Don't Change Your Husband," and reports from the Lasky studios declare that there is a fine chance for Gloria Swanson to display beautiful gowns expressly designed by Margaretta Hoffman for the picture.

The cast is small: Gloria Swanson, Elliott Dexter, Theodore Roberts, Lewis J. Cody, Sylvia Ashton, James Neill, Julia Faye and others make up the roster of players. Jeanie MacPherson wrote the photoplay and it is said to be an original conception throughout.

Pathe Claims New Mark for Latest Serial

IN a statement to MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week, Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., declared that the new Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," which has been scheduled for release the week of January 5, marks an important period in the development of the sequenced screen story. It is asserted that all of the lessons of construction and effects afforded by the twenty-two previous Pathe serials are so utilized in this work of George B. Seitz and Bertram Milhauser that "The Lightning Raider" is a new sort of serial.

Miss White is featured with Warner Oland and Henry Gsell, well known to the screen, carries the role of a hero. The serial was directed by George B. Seitz and is the product of the Astra Company, which has produced more Pathe serials than any other concern, having to its credit "The Shielding Shadow"; "Mystery of the Double Cross" "The Seven Pearls," "The Fatal Ring," "The House of Hate" and "Hands Up."

"The Lightning Raider' is said to show Pearl White in an entirely new characterization and there is the challenge of mystery in the very first scene. It is her ninth serial. Since "The Perils of Pauline" she has been starred in the three "Elaine" stories, "The Iron Claw," "Pearl of the Army," "The Fatal Ring" and "The House of Hate."

Bushman-Bayne Join Vitagraph

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne Have Started Work on a Vitagraph Production Directed by Houry

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne have started work on a Vitagraph production under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company. Henry-Houry, French playwright, actor and director, has in hand the actual direction of the pair.

Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, the authors of Vitagraph serials and other Vitagraph productions, wrote the play, which is described as a romance of the present day and one in which the stars will be called upon to face many hazardous situations. The title of the production has not been decided upon as yet, but will be given out in the near future, it is announced.

This production, it is officially stated, will be the first of the four special productions to be made by Vitagraph during the ensuing twelvemonth. In his outline of production plans for 1918-19, made some time ago, Mr. Smith stated that in addition to fifty-two five-reel features for the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon program, fifty-two Big V Special comedies, and four fifteen-episode serials, his company during the year would produce four superproductions, these to be made under his personal supervision. This means that the Bushman-Bayne production and the other three promised specials will be of the same importance and excellence as "Within the Law," "Over the Top" and other big Vitagraph productions which were made under the personal supervision of the Vitagraph chief.

Mr. Smith declares that Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne have been provided with an exceptionally strong supporting cast for their production, the more prominent players being L. Roger Lytton, for many years prominent in Vitagraph features; Jean Paige, who first appeared in O. Henry pictures and latterly has appeared with Harry T. Morey, Charles Kent, a Vitagraph veteran, and Julia Swayne Gordon.

Herbert Rawlinson in a Heroic Pose from "The Common Cause," the Blackton Production Soon to be Released by Vitagraph

Henry-Houry, who is directing the starring combination, is a Frenchman who attained prominence in Paris as a legitimate actor, producer and manager before going into motion pictures, and he was said to be rapidly taking a place in the front ranks of the cinema producers when he abandoned his work and enlisted in the army.

He is a veteran of many battles, including the first battle of the Marne.

Until now he has directed Corinne Griffith in Blue Ribbon features, having been responsible for the production of "Love Watches," "The Clutch of Circumstance" and "Miss Ambition."

Select Secures "Woman the Germans Shot"

PLUNKETT AND CARROLL'S production "The Woman the Germans Shot," in which Julia Arthur made her screen debut, has been secured by Lewis J. Selznick, of Select pictures, and the latter concern takes over the exclusive booking privileges throughout the entire United States.

Since the week's showing at the Strand theatre from October 27 to November 2 of this life story of the martyred British Red Cross Nurse Edith Cavell, upon which data the production is based, it is said that the producers have been accorded a most unusual number of applications for both negative purchase and also for the exclusive booking privileges.

"It is rare," said Mr. Plunkett, "that such competition for the control of a production is exhibited in motion picture manufacturing circles.

"What success is to be accorded the production will be vouched for by the unqualified and sincere endeavors of the New York motion picture theatre going public, who during the exhibition of the production at the Strand theatre unquestionably placed its stamp of absolute and thorough approval on this production."

New U. S. A. Series to Be Released Dec. 23

The World Film Corporation, which is to distribute the new "U. S. A. Series," which will comprise twelve two-reel pictures, to be produced by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has notified its exchanges that the first picture, "When Your Soldier's Hit," which visualizes the work of the field hospitals in a new and interesting way, will not be released until December 23.

G. L. Tucker Talks About "Virtuous Wives"

George Loane Tucker is the director of "Virtuous Wives," produced by Louis B. Mayer and starring Anita Stewart. This will be distributed through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"I ask any exhibitor," said Mr. Tucker, "to estimate the percentage of married couples who are patrons or prospective patrons of his theatre in proportion to the unmarried clientele. Then add to that approximation an estimate of those who expect to be married sooner or later, and he will find that 'Virtuous Wives' as an altar-starting story has an appeal for every type and class of individual.

"The story of 'Virtuous Wives' is one of those unusual themes which contains a genuine appeal for the three most important features of a production. It gave Miss Stewart a role which fits her exactly and in which she was interested to the point of extravagant enthusiasm. Its situations and action are such that it offered me, as the director, unlimited opportunities for exceptional results, artistically, technically and photographically."

"Marriage" Released on November 25

The release of the third of the Frank A. Keeney productions, "Marriage," will occur on November 25. "Marriage," with Catherine Calvert and a cast, including David Powell, Thomas Holding, Ida Darling, Walter Hiers and Hazel Alden, has just completed a week's engagement at the Broadway theatre, New York, where Mr. Keeney declares it played to one of the biggest week's business in the history of the theatre.

"Marriage" has been directed by James Kirkwood and will be distributed through the William L. Sherry service, as have the other two Frank A. Keeney productions, "A Romance of the Underworld" and "Out of the Night."

"Beyond the Law" Ready for Release by Southern Corporation

Emmett Dalton, general manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, producers of "Beyond the Law," announces that the production has been completed and will be ready for release throughout the world at an early date.

"Beyond the Law" was written by Emmett Dalton, and is an adaptation from the original story which appeared in serial form in the Wide World Magazine from May to September, 1918.

The story is founded on the exploits of Emmett and his three brothers, who were at one time known as "bad men" of the rolling prairies. Emmett Dalton appears in the picture, and portrays the parts of his two brothers.

The picture, which has been re-edited, retitled and reassembled at the request of Mr. Dalton, will soon be ready for a public screening.

George Randolph Chester for Vitagraph

George Randolph Chester, author of the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories, has been engaged by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, to assist as literary adviser at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn. Mr. Chester assumed his duties last week and is now actively concerned in giving to scenarios the same snap and sparkle as the Chester writings.

Mr. Chester is not treading new ground when he takes his place as literary counselor for Vitagraph, because he has been a frequent visitor there since the production of his novel, "The Enemy," and "The Message of the Mouse." The latter was an original story written by Mr. Chester and his wife, and was produced by Vitagraph some time ago with Anita Stewart in the leading role.

Ever since the production of his first story on the screen Mr. Chester has been a keen student of motion picture construction and production, and henceforth he will divide his time between fiction writing and motion picture work.

The acquisition of Mr. Chester is the latest step by Albert E. Smith to perfect "the story" of the motion picture. The Vitagraph president has been one of the leaders of the industry in demanding clean, clever stories.

More than two score of popular fiction writers are represented in current Vitagraph features and several of them, such as Robert W. Chambers, Cyrus Townsend Brady and James Oliver Curwood, are represented on Vitagraph's release list by numerous productions.

Frederick Bennett Joins American Film Co.

Frederick Bennett, novelist and contributor to leading magazines and former war correspondent, is now publicity director of the American Film Company. Mr. Bennett spent two years in California with some of the principal studios, wrote the Helen Holmes serial "The Lost Express" and many other stories.

He is a graduate of New York and Chicago newspaper offices and was for some time general manager of the International News Bureau for all Europe. Mr. Bennett is now at work on a special campaign for Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher.

"Topics of the Day" Handled by K. W. S.

The K. W. S. Distributing Corporation announces that they have consummated a deal with the publishers of the Literary Digest, through their representative, Mr. Siegel, so that they now have the national rights to "Topics of the Day," which until recently was distributed by the Literary Digest people themselves.

The Literary Digest publishers report that so instantaneous has been the success of "Topics of the Day" that it has become a part of many theatre's programs.

"Wives of Men" Booked Direct in Ohio

Although he declares that some very attractive offers were received for the State rights to "Wives of Men" for the Ohio territory, Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Film Corp., decided that it was best to open an office and do his own booking.

Consequently he visited Cleveland recently and as a result of his trip the Pioneer Film Corporation now has offices in the Sloan Building, Cleveland, in charge of Mr. Burnside and Miss M. A. Smith.

All bookings for Ohio and Kentucky will be made through the Cleveland offices of the company and the same office will carry a full line of paper and advertising helps.

Fred Mitchell, general booking manager for the Loew Circuit, is said to have told Mr. Hirsh that "Wives of Men" has proved one of the very best film attractions that they have booked for their houses.

"Maori Romance" Claims Much Uniqueness

"A Maori Romance," the third in the series of Rothacker "Outdoor" pictures released by Mutual, is said to be in reality a production of unique character, being, it is claimed, the first picture drama produced by a semi-barbarous tribe.

Only a little over a half-century ago the Maori tribe, which is isolated in the Kings County of North Island, known as the Hot Lake District of New Zealand, were cannibals, and no white man dared venture within their domain. To coach a bunch of purative cannibals to simulate realistic action for the camera, is literally "flirting with death," but this camera-man was endowed with tact and nerve, and got away with a whole skin, the story goes.

There is said to be a real love story in "A Maori Romance," which is treated as a Maori version of the ancient myth of Damon and Pythias.

The titles for the first four "Outdoor" pictures, produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, released through Mutual exchanges, have been selected, and are "Flatheads and Blackfeet," "Bad Men and Good Scenery," "A Maori Romance" and "Peaks, Parks and Pines."

Miscellaneous Notes

The famous Alaskan malamute who was passed from Peary to Douglas Fairbanks to Charlie Chaplin to Tom Geraghty to Wallace Worsely, has changed hands again. Mr. Worsely, who directed Louise Glaum's latest production for distributtion by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, entitled "The Goddess of Lost Lake," found another unsuspecting soul who took a fancy to the big sled-dog, and now he is installing a new set of screens at his house and harvesting as much of his potato garden as the dog saw fit to leave.

Mr. Harry O. Hoyt, who was formerly on the scenario staff of the World Pictures, has turned director, and his first picture will be "The Hand Invisible," starring Montague Love.

Director Burton King reports that he has averaged 25 scenes a day in making the Houdini Serial, "The Master Mystery." This is unusually fast work, and has been done in spite of the fact that Houdini is just recovering from a broken wrist, Marguerite Marsh has been ill for several days, Floyd T. Buckley has a fractured finger, and most of the other members of the cast have been ill at recent intervals.

The story for Viola Dana's new picture for the Metro Company will be a picturization of Van Zo Post's novel, "Diana Ardway." It is an entertaining story and should afford the clever little star an opportunity for some unusually good work. John H. Collins will direct the picture.

Ralph Kellard, formerly a Pathe star, is now playing the lead in "Over Here," by Oliver Barley, at the Fulton theatre.

Frank Mayo, now co-starring with Jane Elvidge in "The Love Defender," for World Pictures, has announced that in the future he would like to have all requests for his photographs accompanied by 25 cents. These donations he will present to the Red Cross, and collectively they should buy quite a few more miles of bandages.

Morey is a good card and should be played up as a strong, manly actor. If you want special stories or lines about him recall the fact that he has been with the Vitagraph Company ever since its inception, that he has appeared in some of this company's most successful productions and that he is the only actor in the art who has remained stationary and remained a star while many others have come and gone in the meantime.

Caruso has finished his second Artcraft picture, "Prince Cosimo," and following a rest will soon start on his preparations for the coming season at the Metropolitan Opera House. The final scenes of "Prince Cosimo" were taken on location at Larchmont, and Caruso seized upon the occasion to entertain the entire company at luncheon.

Mutual reports that "His Birthright," Sessue Hayakawa's first picture made by his own company and distributed by Mutual, has broken the house record at the Strand theatre, Denver. A. F. Meagahan, the manager of the house, has written his strongest endorsement of the feature.

Star theatre, Portland, Ore., reports to the Mutual general offices that it did record business with "A Hoosier Romance," a picturization of the James Whitcomb Riley story made by Selig and featuring Colleen Moore, Thomas Jefferson and Harry McCoy.

"Stolen Orders" Does Well In South

The Southwestern Film Corporaation of Dallas, Texas, has reported in a letter to Motion Picture News that William A. Brady's production, "Stolen Orders," has proven a money-maker for exhibitors in the South. The film is being handled in Texas, Oklahoma and Arflansas by the Southwestern organization.

The new L. and A. theatre in El Paso, Texas, which opened November 9, used "Stolen Orders" as the opening attraction, as did also the new Liberty theatre at Beaumont, which opened the same day. Another theatre to use the picture as the opening attraction is the new Princess at Orange, Texas.

The Southwestern Film Corporation declares that never before has a state rights production proven so popular among the exhibitors of that territory as "Stolen Orders."

General Appoints Henry in Denver

It was made known through the General Film Company publicity bureau this week that General has bulletined its organization that a change has been made in Denver, where the office is now in charge of T. Y. Henry, who had been connected with General for long periods during the last six or seven years in the Denver territory.

After a long service with General, he became manager of the Paramount office, later branching out with an office of his own. In renewing his service with General Film Company he does so as a sales executive already in intimate touch with the field, in which he has a most extensive following.

Will Intensively Exploit "After the War"

OFFICIALS of the Argosy Film Company, which has just established itself for a sales campaign in the state rights field, believe they have stolen a march on their competitors. The Argosy's newest film is "After the War," and they declare it to be the first real production treating international conditions growing out of the world conflict.

"This picture is the timeliest subject on the market," said M. H. Hoffman, the sales manager for Argosy. "It is precisely as important in relation to public interest at this time as were 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' and 'My Four Years in Germany,' when the latter were issued during the war. But this production is distinctly not a war picture.

"It not only brings forward intensely interesting revelations of conditions produced by the war, but it tells a remarkable story of love and romance. The problem that 'After the War' projects upon public attention is embodied in the question, What shall become of the women of the war-ridden countries who have suffered the supreme wrong at the hands of the invaders?

"How will society treat these women and their undesired offspring? is the vital problem of today. Yet the film is so strongly romantic the problem idea does not obtrude."

What Motion Picture News Reviewer Thinks of Picture

"AFTER THE WAR"

(Argosy Film Co. Length, 5 Reels. State Rights)

THIS is one of the strongest dramatic offerings released lately, the direction end having been handled in a convincing manner.

The picture contains some situations with heart interest as well as some with thrills, but the most predominating entertaining element in it is mystery. Pictures based on this element rarely, if ever, fail to have popular appeal, due to the peculiarity of human nature, which always seeks to delve into the unknowable.

The element of suspense is also splendidly maintained because of the intelligent construction of the story, which never gives away the action in advance.

As the title clearly indicates, the fundamental idea of the plot consists of after the war events as conceived by the author.

At the opening, the picture shows the hero and the heroine in an Italian village happily contented. The war breaks out. The hero is called to the colors. The country is invaded. Unable to get away, the heroine remains.

During a battle, the hero is taken as a prisoner and is about to be executed. Becoming aware of the fact, the heroine begs the enemy commander to spare his life. He agrees to do so provided she submits to his wishes. To save the hero from further tortures, she gives in. The hero, not knowing the exact reason for his liberation, feels grateful to the German officer.

The scene now shifts to Washington, at the period after the war. At a reception in the Italian Embassy, in which the entire Diplomatic body is invited, a famous prima donna is to sing. At the sight of the German Ambassador she is overcome. The Italian Commissioner, the hero of the story, recognizes his sweetheart in the person of the famous singer. After the performance he seeks to meet her, but, having also recognized and wishing to avoid him, the heroine rushes away. He calls at her home and begs her to renew their love and marry him, but she refuses, calling herself unworthy of him. Demanding to know the cause, she relates what had transpired between herself and a German officer, and that that officer is none other than the present German Ambassador.

The Ambassador's wife, who had noticed the strange conduct of her husband at the reception, calls on the heroine, in order to find out, if possible, if there is any connection between him and the prima donna. The heroine explains all to her, pointing to a child as the evidence. At this moment, the Ambassador enters, having come with the purpose of renewing relations. The wife then shoots and kills him.

Assuming the blame for the murder, the heroine saves the woman from being prosecuted. The latter begs of the heroine to be given the child. Her request is granted, and there being no other barrier, the hero and the heroine wed.

Some people might not approve of a mother giving up her child, since she is not guilty of immoral conduct, but this will be chiefly a matter of individual taste.

The picture, of course, cannot be called unsuggestive, but it is timely and, owing to the peculiarity of the subject, the number that might object to it will possibly be a limited one.—P. S. Harrison.

Here are some of the newspaper ads. which were photographed before they were entirely completed, the reading matter not having yet been inserted where the lines are drawn. The one in the center comes in double and triple columns and the other two in both single and double.

"After the War" Links Up With Peace Revelations in Europe

"AFTER THE WAR" is a picture that lends itself to starting discussion, and it is likely to prove one of the most sensational that has been shown. And it is distinctly an "after the war" picture, for it portrays action some years hence, referring back to incidents that occurred during the hostilities.

It is largely founded on one of the most terrible evils that came from the policies of the Huns—the attacks on women. It is an unusually tense production and holds the interest tight to the very end. It is a picture that is very frank, and you will have to be frank in advertising it. It is going to startle the spectators during its showing, and, though the ending is a happy one, it is going to create no end of talk.

It is built on the brutality of the Hun, and it is a picture that is going to convince anyone that has any doubt that our fighting has been in vain. But it is not a picture of armies, but of individual brutality and lust. Only a very small group of soldiers are shown at any time. There is not a shot fired in the picture, except the one with which the Austrian woman kills her husband.

WHILE the picture is not a war picture in the sense of fighting, it will arouse still further the hatred of the officer group of Prussians who misled all Central Europe and plunged the world into terrible conflict.

Grace Cunard is the star in this picture, which was directed by Joseph DeGrasse. Miss Cunard has a big following over the country for her appearance in a number of serials and other productions under the banner of Universal is going to create interest in her work in this picture of the Argosy Film Company.

Her name and the title are the two things to feature in the advertising, but we repeat that this is a picture that should be treated as sensational to get the fullest box office return. It ought to arouse as much discussion as "Where Are My Children?" and similar productions, because of the sensational things that it shows and because of the immense amount of debate that it has caused.

ARGOSY FILM is preparing a big exploitation system along these lines. Some of it is illustrated in these pages, but all of it has not been completed. There will be advertising in all sizes and a lavish array of paper, together with a wealth of scene pictures, many of which are reproduced here and in the advertising section.

This picture is to be sold to state rights buyers, and therefore it is important to exhibitors that they should be able to get the material, for they have found in so many cases in the past that after they have booked a picture they have had no material with which to exploit it. Argosy promises in this case that there will be no lack of this matter, and certainly, from the evidences given in the matter reproduced here, the matter that is crowded out and that in preparation, the promises are borne out. The exploitation is being handled by one of the most successful men in the business of motion picture exploitation.

And therefore the exhibitor who takes this picture should do so with his eyes open and knowing that the way to make money out of it is to get the whole of his community talking about it. There will be disagreements of opinion, but it is such disagreement that has been responsible for putting over most productions of this sort. Pictures that have aroused the same sort and volume of discussion have played engagement after engagement in the same

PLAN IT AHEAD

Exploitation of This Picture Worth Studying In Advance

WHILE this picture is to be sold by Argosy Film Company to States Rights buyers and you, as an exhibitor, probably do not know yet whether you are going to get it, it will do you good to study the exploitation of this picture ahead of time. Even if results that you do not get the picture the time that you spend in considering how you would put over one of these special is worth your while.

This is a picture that should be gone to with a whole heart in getting publicity. In these pages there are a number of suggestions made for advertising it and you are going to have all sorts of aids to work with while the picture itself can be made to link up with the news from Europe after peace has been signed.

You need to "hit it a wallop" in your advertising. There is a chance for earnest work here.

At left scene where hero thanks the Hun for saving his life, in ignorance of the attack on the girl he loved. At right the opera singer at the height of her glory.

city because of the big exploitation that they got on the first showing and the large amount of word-of-mouth advertising.

WHILE the story of "After the War" is fiction, the same story has been paralleled to a greater extent in thousands of cases in France and Belgium and Italy, where girls, hitherto innocent, have become mothers of children whom they hate because of their brutally enforced Hun fatherhood. For the plot of this picture hangs around this incident, and the way it is worked out is going to cause still more talk.

It is certain that the news after the signing of the armistice which will come from Europe will increase the fury against the Huns in this country and the rest of the civilized world. We have heard already of many such cases of these attacks on women, but they have been to a greater or less extent impersonal. The Huns swept over this territory and their deeds have been hidden away for a time and there have not been the enforced mothers to tell their stories.

BUT now the Huns are getting back out of their territory and the terrible griefs of these people will be revealed. And then there are the thousands of young girls whom the Huns carried away with them back to Germany. Under the terms of the armistice every one of these people must be repatriated before the first word of the peace discussion can be said. And their stories will float through the press to the world. The talk from now on is going to be "after the war" talk, and the stories of the terrors and the wrongs are going to form a big part of this discussion.

And when these do come the exhibitor will do well to take advantage of the news that his papers are printing and to link up this picture with it. And, as we have said, the showing of this picture is going to cause a great wave of discussion in every community.

The heroine of the story is an innocent Italian girl who yields to a Hun officer to save her sweetheart from torture, which she is forced to witness. It is as delicately told as can be done, and then only in a flash, but the main developments of the story hang around the fact that a hated child is the result and seems to bar her marriage to the lover, that she has found again after the war.

BUT there is another element that the picture brings out. We hear lots of times that these acts have been due to the madness of the war and that it is not the nature of these people to do such deeds unless they are crazed in the shedding of blood. Yet one of the things that this picture brings out is that the spirit still lives in that Prussian caste after the war, for he is shown attempting to make the same proposal to his victim again.

And, while the war is over and peace signed and the relations between the former enemies is resumed again, we are shown the Hun type again in this man. He does not need the uniform to stamp him. The face and the bearing and the manners of his are those of the tribe that the last four years of history have aroused us against. If Prussianism continues to exist in any form, this picture will serve to keep up our enmity of it.

Striking twenty-four sheet showing the principal characters.

Big Chance Afforded to Stir the Interest of Women

EXHIBITORS showing this picture will do well to make a big appeal to the woman element of the community and especially to the mothers. With little exception the women of all nations, apparently even those of our enemies, have been largely good women. The spirit of the women in this war stands out as one of the glories of it.

It has been the men who have been responsible for the brutalities and the destruction, while the women have borne the crosses of suffering in a wonderful manner. There have been hundreds and thousands of them in France and Belgium who have been victims of the Hun brutes, and their suffering appeals to the great womanhood of America, who know only part of the terrors of the conflict, because no Hun soldier landed here.

And one of the things that struck us when we saw the picture was that even the wife of the German was a good woman, moved by a woman's feelings and actually winning out sympathy in the end. It is true that in a fit of jealousy she shot her husband, but only after she had heard his story from his own lips in her hiding place and because she heard him seeking to break his martial vows. Every woman will sympathize with her after they have seen the picture.

THERE is another thing that is going to arouse a lot of discussion—and that is when the enforced mother of the child which she hates because of its fatherhood yields to the plea of its father's widow and slayer and gives the child into her keeping. It is suggested to us that there will be much discussion of a mother giving up her own child. It looks to us that the child had in its body not only nothing of love, but of intense hate, at the time that it was conceived, and the title makes plain how she loathes it. And it was perfectly proper that it should go back to the nation from which it came, for under such circumstances the boy when he grew to manhood would have the same Prussian brutality in his being.

But we know that it will cause discussion and this is a point to encourage to get the word of mouth advertising. There may be a few that will condemn her action, though we doubt it.

IF your city is of sufficient size to warrant it, why not give a private showing of this production to one of the mothers' clubs and use their opinions in at least one of your advertisements.

In the heading you could ask the question:

"If an enforced mother of a child whose father was a Hun and loathed it, would she give it to another, the widow of its father, when its existence with her kept her from happiness and the man she loved?"

This is an exceedingly frank question, and we would advise you not to put the personal element in it because it may offend some. But you don't need to do that, because everyone will get the point.

If such a plan is impractical in your city we would use a circular campaign with this same question elaborated and going ahead to state that this is one of the debatable events shown in "After the War," giving the name of your theatre and the date.

But be careful that this goes only to the married women of your community. You need not worry about the woman, for the rest of them will hear of it, but don't even suggest, even by the slightest thing that might be construed into an inference that any woman who is not married would discuss what she would do in such a case.

REMEMBER in all your exploitation that the woman is the strongest element in your community. The pictures that she comes to see the others will want to look at and so it is well worth while when you have a picture with the woman punch in it to put it over as strong as possible.

This is going to make a big appeal not only in the city where you have a chance to put over the private showing or in some other way get the quotations from the leading clubwomen of the city and use it in one of your advertisements, but in the smaller town and the neighborhood theatre as well provided you show it for more than a day. In such communities gossip travels fast and it's a pretty sure thing that this subject will be the main discussion of the day.

And in dealing with this subject in any way, do not put your emphasis on the act that brought the child into the world, but the consequences from the birth of the child. In that way you will avoid any charge of appealing to mere sensationalism, for then you are putting it squarely on the correctness of the action of the picture. You needn't worry much about that result.

LET US KNOW

AS you know the Exhibitors Service Bureau seeks to record the best things that exhibitors of the country are doing. This work is for the benefit of others and the general prosperity of the industry.

Outlined in these pages is the character of "The Talk of the Town" and some general suggestions for its exploitation. Perhaps you have better ones that you are using to get increased business. We would like to print every one of the valuable hints.

GRACE CUNARD
IN A VIVID PICTURIZATION OF
AFTER THE WAR
AFTER THE WAR
"ONCE A HUN ALWAYS A HUN"
A PRODUCTION SUPREME WITH GRACE CUNARD AND A BRILLIANT ALL-STAR CAST
"AFTER THE WAR"

Here is some of the striking paper for "After the War." At the left is a one sheet, in the center a three sheet and at the right a special plate paper poster. Besides this there are other one and three sheets, a six sheet and a 24 sheet, window cards, etc.

Keep Telling the Public Just What This Is About

HERE is another picture where you want to keep the title the dominant thing. You will note in the specimens of advertising that will be supplied by the Argosy Film Company that this idea is carried out, and properly so. The smaller type explains the timeliness of the picture.

But aside from the bigness of the production there is another point that you want to keep bringing out, and that is the humanness of it. That appeal is essential to get over, because you do not want your public to think that this is another feature that shows a bunch of fighting.

As a matter of fact we know of no better way to exploit this picture than to use liberally in every way possible the scenes that are reproduced in the advertising pages There are punches to all of these and if you are making your own designs you can attract attention with a series of these.

BEGIN your advertising well in advance of the showing of the picture. We would not advise a teaser campaign on this one, for it would be much better to devote the space to straight-out exploitation of the production. In this case talking about the picture itself will arouse more curiosity than any possible stunt stuff.

Every conceivable form of paper is being supplied with the picture, including the regular sizes, special lobby displays, heralds, window cards and the like, so that the exhibitor who has the use of billboards should resort to the circus style and cover the territory. The 24-sheet is especially striking and curiosity-arousing.

WE would advise you strongly to go to your newspaper and lay the story of the picture before him. Promise him that you are going to do big advertising and urge his editorial cooperation. In most cases you will be able to get it and more of the word-of-mouth advertising that we have referred to will come from these stories.

Have them liberally illustrated from cuts made from the still or use those which will be provided by Argosy in both cut and mat form in all sizes and great variety.

At the same time keep smashing your advertising over. If you want to put this picture over to the biggest possible business you are going to keep hammering away on it. No one believes that a picture is a real sensation unless you keep telling the public that.

Slides should be used in your house well in advance. Before the showing you should use special slides coupling the picture up with the news events of the day. These you can make yourself, and the more that you associate the film with the things that are happening in Europe today and tomorrow, the greater interest you are going to arouse.

FOR selling lines we can offer you no better lines than to keep the picture as closely associated with the events that we have indicated and to keep the human element always at the top.

It is a picture that will sell itself on just what it does contain, and that is all you have to tell the people.

Another thing that you can assure the public is that this is a most dramatic picture, that it is splendidly made and that it will surprise every one by the turns that the story takes. There have been no productions anything like this, because it deals with the events of the war only incidentally and with the consequences of the Huns' acts as the main theme.

HERE are some lines that will help you if you want others than those contained in the lavish exploitation campaign that Argosy has arranged:

"She had a child that she loathed, and it kept her from marriage with the man she loved because a Hun was its enforced father. And when her suitor begged for her the Hun returned and showed himself the same creature that he was during the war."

"Vengeance came to the Hun who sought to repeat the horrors of the war at the hands of his own wife. And she saved the girl who had become his victim that she might enjoy the life of true love."

"After the war scores of women of France and Belgium and Italy have cause to remember the Hun. And what of their children, fathered by force by these Huns? What will be the answer from their lips to the suitors who courted them before the war? And what of the men who loved them and find them the victims of the Hun terror?"

REMEMBER to play up Grace Cunard strong. She has a great following and though it has been quite a while since she has been seen on the screen, that should increase the desire to see her. She has never had a more brilliant and powerful role than she has here.

Get into your advertising that she plays the part of an opera queen worshipped by Paris; that she wears wonderful gowns and is the center of an intense drama of events after the war.

In "A Romance of the Air" with Edith Day and Lieutenant Bert Hall, Carl E. Carlton presents a War Picture That is Decidedly Different

"Romance of the Air" Plays the Rivoli

THE pre-release at the Rivoli theatre in New York the week of November 11 of Carle E. Carlton's "A Romance of the Air," featuring Lieutenant Bert Hall, the American aviator of the Lafayette Escadrille, and Edith Day, the prima donna, proved one of the big surprises of the film world, according to reports. With praticalally no heralding this seven-reel production drew good houses at the Rivoli and it is reported that exhibitors all over the country have been keeping the wires hot in Mr. Carlton's offices in the Times Building.

It had not been intended to release "The Romance of the Air" until a careful advance publicity campaign should be worked out, but such favorable reports of the picture were circulated that it was given a showing for S. L. Rothapfel even before the last title had been written. Mr. Rothapfel booked the picture immediately, leaving only two days for the final cutting and assembling.

"A Romance of the Air" was picturized by Franklin B. Coates from the book "En L'Air" by Lieutenant Bert Hall. This book has been syndicated broadcast in serial form in two hundred newspapers of the United States and is fast rivalling in popularity Guy Empey's "Over the Top." Many of the amazing and tremendously exciting true experiences related by Hall in his book have been skillfully reproduced in the picture which is by far the most faithful portrayal of actual air fighting ever shown on the silversheet.

An exhaustive publicity campaign is now being planned by Mr. Carlton and an announcement of the plans for releasing this production will be given out by the En L'Air Cinema, Ltd., this week. The business offices of the En L'Air Cinema, Ltd., are on the 12th floor of the Times Building. Beulah Livingstone, for the past two years personal representative for Mme. Petrova and in charge of the magazine and syndicate publicity for the Petrova Pictures Company, has been engaged to handle the publicity for the company.

Walraven with Lehrman

J. Hesser Walraven, formerly publicity director for Paralta Plays, is now at the head of the press agent department for Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedies. Mr. Walraven has been on the West Coast only a few weeks having made his first stop at San Francisco where he handles some theatrical work upon the completion of which he came to Los Angeles.

Influenza Hampers Much Studio Work

The influenza epidemic has greatly hampered production of the several companies who have continued at work owing to an order of the health department of Los Angeles, which provides that masks should be worn by all members of the producing organizations, and that no producing unit should consist of more than sixteen people working together at one time, unless a special permit for use of a greater number was issued by the health department. The wearing of masks must be complied with both at the studio and on exterior location about the city or county, at all times except when the players are appearing before the camera while the actual scenes are being made.

All companies working on exterior location within the county have been required to notify the police department, and have a member of the police force accompany the players. This step is taken to insure that an officer will be present to prevent the gathering of any crowd during the epidemic, and thus to aid in preventing the spread of the disease.

Sylvia Day Returns to the "Frolic"

Sylvia Day, ingenue lead in a number of comedies produced on the Coast, has returned to New York and to her old love, Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolic," although she is doing some film work the other twenty-three hours of the day. Miss Day's first picture was with Bill Parsons, the Goldwyn comedian, in "Birds of a Feather." Subsequently she attracted Henry Lehrman's attention, and so she joined the Fox comedy company, appearing in "Roaring Lions on a Midnight Express" and "The Fatal Marriage," among others.

E. and R. to Sell Foreign Rights

Announcement was made this week by Messrs. Edwards and Rounan, owners of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company with studios, office and laboratories in Los Angeles, that they will dispose of foreign rights on twenty single reel comedies featuring Napoleon and Sally, the chimpanzees. The list includes such well known subjects as "From Jungle to Trouble," "Two Chimps and a Chump," "Teacher's Pet," "Jungle Brats," "Haunted," and others.

All of these comedies have been remade to a more or less extent, with many new scenes. The titles and sub-titles have all been remade and brought up to date.

When E. & R. Comedies were first introduced, they made a very satisfactory impression on the entire trade. There is nothing like them on the market to day, inasmuch as they feature the only educated chimpanzees that have appeared in pictures. The two chimps, Napoleon and Sally, impersonate people in all of the films.

Desmond Begins Work for Hampton

William Desmond, who has been in the East for the past month and a half, has returned to Los Angeles to commence work under his new contract with Jesse D. Hampton.

R. William Neill, who directed most of the Dorothy Dalton-Paramount pictures for Thomas H. Ince will direct Desmond's first product which carries the temporary title of "For the Love of William."

The Desmond pictures will be distributed in this country, as well as abroad, by the Robertson-Cole company.

Jesse Hampton has just put the finishing touches to a big special feature with J. Warren Kerrigan in the chief role. It is called "The End of the Game."

Lee A. Ochs Returns to New York

HAVING completed a tour extending to the Pacific Coast in the interests of the exhibitor-members of United Picture Theatres of America, Lee A. Ochs, vice-president of that organization has returned to his executive desk in the Mecca building.

"In the three months that formed the period of my tour," said Mr. Ochs, "much of importance has transpired in the film world and it has been an enlightening and extraordinarily interesting experience to gather the views and different shades of opinion entertained by exhibitors in general on those topics throughout the breadth of the country.

"United is now not only vigorously strong from the point of membership but, and as a result of that strength, already has a splendid nucleus of stars under contract and pictures on the point of release. To have organized United into its present position, to have brought together our present strength of exhibitor members and already to have in readiness to serve those members such product as "The Light of Western Stars," and "Adele" and "A Man in the Open" about to be completed by Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum respectively—all this progress is regarded by the many exhibitors whom I met and talked with as no mean accomplishment in the young history of United, and as a gratifying indication and sign of United's success.

"In the list of theaters—and it is a long one—that have embraced United principles and United membership during the past three months appears the new 'California' theatre to be opened this month in Los Angeles, and the Rialto theatre in San Francisco, and Turner & Dahnken's 3500 seating theatre in Oakland.

"A visit to the Brunton studios in Los Angeles showed Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum hard at work upon their United superpictures under the personal supervision of Mr. Brunton."

Brunet Praises Director of Gaby Deslys Film

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., declares that Louis Mercanton who directed the Special Feature, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, has reached an artistic achievement in presenting this picture, produced by the Eclipse Film Company.

Pathe has planned a specially active campaign for "Infatuation," which will be released the week of December 1.

The advertising material includes posters, one sheet, two 3 sheets, six and 24 sheet; portrait slide in colors, two 2 column scene cuts, line cuts, ad sheet, two 1 column portrait cuts, Gaby Deslys and one 2 column cut of the star; sets of 12 black and white photographs of star and scenes, 22 x 28 sepia of star, lobby display in sepia, 3 styles of large hand-colored portraits for lobby use.

The campaign book of "Infatuation" will have a cover design in three colors, the portrait of Gaby Deslys in the 24 sheet being reproduced. In it will be bound a one sheet, four-page insert on calendered paper, made up of half tone cuts of Gaby and selected scenes from the play.

Metro Announces Plans for New Studio

Announcement has been made of the completed plans for the big new studio to be established at Hollywood, Cal., by the Metro Pictures Corporation, and work on its construction was begun this week. The new studio will be situated at Romaine street and Cahuenga avenue and will occupy an entire block. The site for the new studio is diagonally opposite the present studio, which is to be retained by the company. The two big studios will give ample facilities for all of the Metro forces, as all of the pictures of this concern are to be made in Los Angeles hereafter.

The administration building will be erected on the new site and will front on Romaine street. It is to be of Colonial style of architecture and impressive in appearance. There will be three large stages, two open and one enclosed. The open stages will be 70 by 100 feet and the enclosed stages, for "light effects," will have an area of 70 feet by 195 feet. There will also be four projecting rooms.

Arrangements will be made for fifty dressing rooms, including the elaborate apartments to be occupied by the stars to the less pretentious rooms used by the extra people. An important feature will be a complete carpenter shop and mill, electrically equipped. For the technical department and scenic artists there will be ample accommodations with huge paint frames.

One of the first sets likely to be built upon the new site will be an elaborate Asiatic market place and street scene, as a background for Mme. Nazimova's first picture to be made on the West Coast. This picture is "The Red Lantern."

A restaurant of the cafeteria style will be built and equipped by the company on the new site, so that executives, stars, players and other employes will not be obliged to leave the grounds for meals.

Entirely Different Ones

Owing to confusion that has arisen in the past, Elliott J. Clawson, scenario editor at Universal City, has issued a formal statement to all screen writers that the Universal Scenario Corporation, a Los Angeles enterprise, has no connection whatever with the scenario department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Los Angeles Sidelights

CHARLIE CHAPLIN began work on his new production Monday, November 4, a title for which has not yet been selected. The picture will be of the rural order, however, and Charlie spent several days among the farm lands of Southern California making friendly advances to the cows, horses, chickens and ducks as well as establishing friendly relations with the pump handle and farming implements. At the Chaplin studio work is progressing rapidly on the many sets required in the making of this picture, which will require many weeks.

Charles H. Christie, general manager of Christie Film Company, will leave in a few days for a trip, which will include all the principal cities of the country, in the interest of Christie comedies.

There were some wet and chilly actors around the Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedy studio the first few days in November. A company under the direction of William Campbell had been working on a water comedy which required the players to work in water for several hours each day. During the hot spell work was generally sought by the members of the cast, but with a sudden drop in the temperature of Los Angeles water scenes were far from popular. Billie Ritchie was among the lucky ones. The comedian completed his aquarial work before the cool weather appeared, but some of the supporting cast were not so fortunate.

Henry Lehrman, vice-president and general producer of Sunshine Comedies, has engaged George Ovey to enact leading roles. Vera Stedman will play opposite to Ovey in his first comedy. Work will be started shortly by Charles Avery and Billy Watson, who will co-direct the farce. Hampton Del Ruth cooperated with Mr. Lehrman in the preparation of the scrip.

Alfred Reeves is again the manager of Charlie Chaplin's interests. Years ago Reeves, who came from England with Chaplin in Fred Karno's "Night in a London Music Hall," became manager of the company while Chaplin played in the cast. Later Reeves, who is a brother of Billy Reeves, came with Charlie and after a visit to his home in England returned to America and again entered the employ of the comedian. On November 1 Mr. Reeves was made manager of the Chaplin studio.

Tom Mix, who has been a patient at the Clara Barton Hospital, Los Angeles, returned to his home, 5841 Carlton Way, on Thursday, November 7. Mix had an operation performed on his left knee. Years ago while in Texas he was shot and the bullet flattened against the bone. The wound healed and for a long time the actor suffered no inconvenience. For several months the knee began to give trouble and early in October he decided to have the cause removed. He went to the hospital where he spent several weeks.

Robertson-Cole Closes Foreign Deal

Robertson-Cole closed a deal last week for the series of eight J. Warren Kerrigan pictures for France, Belgium, Switzerland and Egypt.

For the West Indies and Central America Robertson-Cole has sold "Raffles," "Nine-Tenths of the Law" and "Those Who Pay." In France has been placed "Nine-Tenths of the Law," "Just a Woman" and "The Grain of Dust," with Lillian Walker. "The Fringe of Society," Florence Reed's "Struggle Everlasting" and the patriotic serial, "The Eagle's Eye" have been sold for England.

In the Scandanavian countries Robertson-Cole sold "Her Man," in which Elaine Hammerstein starred, and four J. Warren Kerrigan pictures, numbering "A Burglar for a Night," "A Dollar Bid," "Prisoners of the Pines" and "Three X Gordon." "Raffles," Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson's "Passing of the Third Floor Back," "The Struggle Everlasting," "An Accidental Honeymoon," with Robert Warwick, "The Eagle's Eye," "Nine-Tenths of the Law" and "The Eleventh Commandment" have been sold for Argentina. Brazil has taken "The Eagle's Eye" and "Raffles." "The Eagle's Eye" has been sold for the Dutch East Indies.

Australia will see "Raffles," "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" and "The Accidental Honeymoon" through the Robertson-Cole placing.

Norma Talmadge Returning to New York

A message received at the Norma Talmadge Studios, at 318 East Forty-eighth street, this week stated that Miss Talmadge, her director, Sidney A. Franklin; Thomas Meighan, Gladden James and other members of her company would start for New York on November 12th, having finished "The Heart of Wetona," Miss Talmadge's next production.

Miss Talmadge intends to stop off at the Grand Canyon a day or two to get one or two location scenes for the following picture, "The Probation Wife." She will produce in the East for the winter, and following "The Probation Wife" will do a series of original stories by Eugene Walter, the playwright.

"When a Man Rides Alone" Is the Mysterious Title of William Russell's Next Picture for American Film Company

"Woman" Receives Approval of Many

Maurice Tourneur Productions, through Hiller & Wilk, this week announced that "Woman," produced by Maurice Tourneur, has received the unanimous approval of the trade press, many classing it, it is declared, as the most artistic production of the year.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., selling agents for "Woman," announced this week that the method of releasing the picture would be made known very shortly.

The announcement, it is said, will be as striking as the releasing of the first Tourneur production, "Sporting Life," which was immediately secured by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation following the New York premiere. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation broke all precedents in taking "Sporting Life," it being the first time that they had ever purchased any independent production.

All United Stars Are Reported as Busy

Officials of United Picture Theatres of America report that all their stars are very busy on new productions or finishing other pictures, despite the "flu" scare.

Leaving no intermission between the almost completed "Adele" and the commencement of her second United picture, Kitty Gordon is already occupied with preliminary work upon the drama made from a play by William Anthony McGuire.

The scenario is by Jack Cunningham, and, as in the case of "Adele" the work will be under the direction of Wallace Worsely, and over all Robert Brunton will exercise his supervision.

Binney Escapes "Flu"

It was announced this week that Harold J. (Josh) Binney has recovered from an attack of influenza, and that the Vangie Valentine production which was interrupted will be resumed immediately.

Re-Made Film Deceptions Scored

Adolph Zukor Scores Deception of Public in Exploiting Re-made William Hart Films as New Productions

AS an evidence of the extreme lengths to which certain unscrupulous purveyors of re-made film productions will go in order to humbug the public, and as an example of the effect such methods have upon those whose confidence they have outraged, a letter published in the last issue of Photoplay Magazine without comment is deemed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to be worthy of attention.

"The letter in question is signed by a St. Louis man, S. M. DeHuff, who evidently has been sadly deceived by misrepresentations concerning some of William S. Hart's pictures made before Hart became identified with Artcraft Pictures and which are now being put out as new pictures in the face of every kind of protest from Mr. Hart himself," said Mr. Zukor.

Mr. DeHuff's letter follows:

"Have the photoplay industry's gigantic breakers of success petered out into rivulets of a catch-penny affair? Is it possible that producers have reached that point where it becomes necessary to filch money out of a gullible public by deliberate misrepresentation, or, to use a more applicable term, by false pretense?

"Permit me to explain my ravings.

"A few evenings ago in our little city (which is not so little that we are unaccustomed to the best in moving pictures) I paused in front of one of our theatres to study the posters. A canvas flared across the entrance bearing the following inscription:

"Wm. S. Hart Pictures Corpn. present W. S. Hart, supported by an all star cast including Robert Edeson and Rhea Mitchell in 'The Preacher and the Bandit.'

"Puzzled, yet interested in the incomparable cast, I was possessed of a vague feeling that somewhere and at some time in the distant past I had seen that picture before. The feeling could not be dispelled, yet, curious, I was unable to resist and entered, incidentally paying twenty cents for that privilege. After witnessing two reels of the picture I left the theatre. Just two, or possibly three years previously I had seen the same picture: only at that time it was produced by Triangle and entitled 'On the Night Stage.'

"At another theatre in our city there is advertised for production in the near future a picture entitled 'A Lion of the Hill,' with a cast consisting of Hart, Markey, Mitchell and Glaum and sponsored by a concern calling itself The Sunset Pictures Corpn. I fear I shall have to do my bit toward defraying the rental of said picture if only to learn just when, under what title and how many years previous I have seen the same picture.

"Again, may I ask, is it possible that a concern that has been in existence but a few months (The Wm. S. Hart Pictures) would be so unscrupulous as to lend its name to a picture several years old and masquerading under a second title with no other object than to deliberately mislead the public to whom it owes its welfare?

"Is it possible that Hart and Ince, themselves, have arrived at that stage where they are deluded into believing the public wants them at any cost or under any conditions?

"That expression of Barnum's about the great American public taking delight in being humbugged doubtless still holds good but there arises in my swallowing apparatus an unswallowable obstruction when I think to what a plane the greatest of all American amusement institutions has deteriorated.

"But perhaps, my dear Mr. Quirk, like a well-known cereal, 'there's a reason' for it all."

Commenting upon the above letter, Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, said: "If the statements made by the writer are correct—and I can see no reason to doubt what he says—certain parties are guilty of flagrant misrepresentation. Mr. Hart has suffered probably more than any other star in pictures from this form of piracy, for while the industry generally is aware that he is being victimized, it is a difficult matter to acquaint, the public with the truth, Mr. Hart wired me requesting that I deny for him any connection on his part with the distribution of the pictures in question. Moreover, I can say the same for Mr. Ince. The presentation quoted—if correctly quoted—is manifestly an attempt at cheap deception through playing upon the name of Mr. Hart's present producing organization. If any such company as 'Wm. S. Hart Pictures Corpn.' exists, Mr. Hart has no connection with it. The name of his producing organization is 'William S. Hart Productions, Inc.' I trust that exhibitors will help us in our efforts to wipe out this evil practice. They can at least decline to pass along the deception to the public, and by so doing will enhance their reputations for honesty and fair dealing with their patrons."

J. S. Woody Promoted by Select

Former Field Manager of Select Pictures Corporation Is Made General Sales Manager, with Offices in New York

J. S. WOODY, former field manager for Select Pictures Corporation, has been appointed by General Manager Arthur S. Kane to the more important position of General Sales Manager, with offices in the Home Office at New York. Mr. Woody is a Seattle man and is known to many motion picture exhibitors and producers of the country, having had a long career as a distributor.

New York exhibitors will recall Mr. Woody as Sales Manager of the New York Triangle Branch, while the Chicago trade will also remember him, as he managed the Triangle Branch in that city.

Out on the Pacific Coast, which is Mr. Woody's old stamping ground, he is perhaps better known than in any other place. In 1912 he started with the General Film Company where he worked in varying capacities from salesman to District Manager, changing later to Mutual where he held the same office, that of District Manager.

It was while he was working with Triangle that General Manager Kane appointed him Pacific Northwest General Manager for Select. It was only shortly afterward that he was made Field Manager, and then comes his latest, jump to General Sales Manager.

Mr. Woody broke into the motion picture business back in 1911, under the direction of Mr. Kane, when the latter was Special Representative for the General Film Company in Seattle. His present field of endeavor will carry him to every Select Branch in the country, although six months of the year he will be at his desk in the Home Office. The remainder of his time will be divided equally among the different branches.

"Collier's" Confirms Cromelin Conclusion

FROM the Inter-Ocean Building, 218 West 42nd Street, New York, the publicity department points to a statement by President Paul H. Cromelin printed in last August which Collier's Weekly, in a special article on the international value of the motion pictures, sees fit to verify as it stands.

Mr. Cromelin's August statement in this paper was occasioned by the remarks of Chairman Hurley of the U. S. Shipping Board before the National Security League of Chicago. Commenting on this speech, Mr. Cromelin said in MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"Chairman Hurley declares that this merchant marine must not be allowed to go to rot in peace time. He told the assembled business men that they must plant American wares so successfully in the foreign market that all the new ships would keep busy. Meantime the American film is acting as publicity agent for this superb idea. It is showing in all neutral lands, familiarizing them with American success-tools. The demand for these tools exists wherever ambitious men are forging to the front. This, I think, takes in every land! Establish American supremacy thus and the orders for American goods will flow in. And what channel other than our films could get such a result? A paid advertising campaign that would attain anything like it would cost our manufacturers a billion dollars."

This point is taken in its entirety by Collier's in its article dated October 19 and entitled, "Internationalizing the American Idea," even the Hurley statement being used in connection therewith.

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation is sending copies of these remarkably similar MOTION PICTURE NEWS and Collier's statements to a list of prominent Government officials as part of a plea that increased shipping facilities should be accorded exports.

The Fifth Rainbow Comedy Is Released

With a new subject every other week, the Rainbow Comedies, made at the United States Motion Picture Corporation's studios in Wilkes Barre, have now reached their fifth release as a General Film offering. The current Rainbow picture is "The Camouflaged Baby," and the favorites of this series, Lillian Vera and Eddie Bouldon, are in the leading roles.

Production of Rainbow Comedies is said to be well ahead of schedule, since the next November subject and the first December subject are ready and only await the date of release.

Reports to General Film Company indicate that the nature of the Rainbow single-reelers already distributed makes them very acceptable to exhibitors. The titles are: "Nearly a Slacker," "Some Judge," "My Lady's Slipper" and "How She Hated Men."

Declares Custom House Should Be Thanked

"The export division of the New York Custom House deserves a vote of thanks from the film exporters of America," declares one of the officials of the Department of Motion Pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company.

"General war conditions had necessarily made the work of the Custom House one beset with tremendous difficulties and problems. The restrictions which were made were, of course, necessary to the conduct of the war. The enemy might easily have obtained valuable knowledge through films, for instance. That was but one of the many problems of the Custom House.

"But, through all the months of our participation in the war, the New York Custom House has gone about its business thoughtfully and understandingly. I wish to especially compliment Deputy Collector Lamb. He is entitled to a great deal of credit for the admirable handling of the film export problem. In the days when the war-time rules made the conduct of business irksome Mr. Lamb always did his utmost to facilitate matters and aid the exporter.

"He has met the exporter fairly and squarely. Never once has he deviated from his policy of making the exporting of films as easy as possible. The Robertson-Cole Company has appreciated Mr. Lamb's handling of the situation."

Inter-Ocean Corrects an Error in Sales Item

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation recently notified MOTION PICTURE NEWS that Messrs. Brock and Schlesinger of its sales staff had sold "Inside the Lines" in England.

This was due to a typist's error, Managing Director John H. Taylor of London Inter-Ocean having really handled the negotiation with Granger's Exclusives, purchasers of the British rights.

"The YELLOW DOG"

PRODUCED DIRECT FROM HENRY IRVING DODGE'S GREAT SATURDAY EVENING POST STORY

IN the greatest patriotic drama ever produced you'll see the fiend that takes American pay by day and earns his German master's filthy murder wage by night.

You'll see the slackers and the klackers—Americans. You'll see the spies and the incendiaries—Germans. You'll see the man who knocks Liberty Bonds and defends the sinking of the Lusitania. What Goldwyn Is Doing

SEVEN producing units will be at work making Goldwyn productions by November 18, according to plans perfected by A. Lehr, vice-president and general manager of the Goldwyn Film Corporation, who with many of his producing staff, numbering thirty in all, has arrived in Los Angeles. As recently stated in Motion Picture News, the Goldwyn Company has leased the Culver City studios built by Thomas H. Ince, from the Triangle Film Corporation, and took possession of the plant on November 1. Preceding the arrival of Mr. Lehr and party, Mae Marsh and Tom Moore arrived in Los Angeles. The Moore Company has been at work two or more weeks, and have produced, under the direction of Harry Beaumont, the first western made subject titled "The Tenderfoot."

Owing to illness of Mae Marsh no work has been begun by the company which she heads.

The officers accompanying Mr. Lehr are Hugo Ballin, art director; Mason Litson, manager of Production; Joseph Cohen, business manager; Leon Britton, assistant to casting director Clifford Robertson; Director Reginald Barker, who has just completed filming four Goldwyn plays starring Geraldine Farrar, and Clarence Badger, who has been directing Mabel Normand.

Tom Santchi arrived early this week and Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Milton Sills and others are expected within a few days. J. G. Hawks, recently engaged as head of the scenario department, has taken up this work and will have plays for all companies in readiness within a week or ten days.

Brunton Studio Notes

CHANGE of title for the first Matzene Production starring Mme. Yorska has been announced, and this photoplay will be named "The Infernal Snare" instead of "The Infernal Net." Story for this was written by Mme. Bernhardt in French, and the French word in her title means either net or snare. The former was preferred by the producer, but on suggestion from Mme. Bernhardt the name has been changed. Continuity was written by Jack Cunningham. The producing company, which is under the direction of David Hartford, expect to complete work this week.

Filming of the second Kitty Gordon play for United, adapted from a story by William Anthony McGuire, with continuity by Jack Cunningham, was put in production by Director Wallace Worsley this week. Mahlon Hamilton plays the role opposite the star in this drama of society and the underworld and W. Lawson Butt has been cast for the third point of the triangle.

ACTIVITIES in production work generally were to start in Los Angeles studios about November 18, but the complete producing organizations will not all be working until early in December, according to plans of practically all of the studios who closed down recently pending the opening of theatres throughout the country. By extending the time to this date, it will be possible for all units to delay production at least one month. In the meantime, the technical staffs of the several studios will be put to work so that everything will be in readiness for production.

The close-down has not affected the producing organizations of the Thomas H. Ince studios, the Mack Sennett Paramount Comedy plant, Griffiths organization, the Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet companies. With but one or two exceptions the several companies working on leased space at the Brunton studios continued activities. This list includes Dustin Farnum and Kitty Gordon of the United, Bessie Barriscale, Mme. Yorska and the Mission Productions, Inc. The Vitagraph Company closed its plant for two weeks only, and eight companies resumed work Monday of this week.

Vitagraph Close-ups

ANOTHER bright, animated spot in the Hollywood film colony is the Vitagraph plant on Talmadge avenue. Eight companies begun work Monday, November 4, after several weeks suspension.

Earle Williams and Grace Darmond have gotten started on their new vehicle, "The American Ace." Nell Shipman is working on the continuation of the two-reel Wolfville pictures under her new director, Otto Lederer. William Duncan has started his new picture, a title for which has not yet been selected. Antonio Moreno and Carol Halloway have begun to film the new serial, "The Iron Test." Bessie Love and Frank J. Glendon are very busy in the midst of making "The Enchanted Bond," which will be the next release of Miss Love.

There are three comedy companies hard at work. Montgomery and Rock will shortly announce the title of their new production, while Larry Semon is shooting "Pluck and Plotters," which will be completed about the middle of December.

Paramount-Artcraft

CHARLES RAY, under the direction of James Storm, is putting the finishing touches to "Greased Lightning" at the Thomas H. Ince studios. This production may not be released until January, but preliminary exhibitions of the film will be arranged the latter part of November.

Dorothy Dalton is busily at work under the direction of Victor Schertzinger at the Ince studios, on a new picture, the title for which has not been announced. The story is by John Lynch and concerns a woman of the large city with an insatiate desire for clothes, who lives beyond her husband's means. She finally brings about his ruin. A dream forecasts for her the crisis and thus warned she fortifies herself for a supreme sacrifice. Thus in her husband's eyes she redeems herself for all her past selfishness. In the supporting cast are Charles Clary, leading man; J. Barney Sherry, Donald Macdonald and Phile McCullough.

At the Griffith Studios

A CHANGE has been made with respect to the release of D. W. Griffiths Artcraft subjects, and now it is definitely stated that "The Greatest Thing in Life" will be the next release, coming early in December, instead of "The Romance of Happy Valley." The former subject has Lillian Gish and Robert Harron as principals.

Mr. Griffith has begun work on his fourth Artcraft contribution, as yet unnamed. This will be a noteworthy release inasmuch as Mr. Griffith promises that it shall contain the first pictures made under the new process which give a stereoscopic effect on all close-up scenes. His experimental laboratories have been working on this process for a long time and now have it so well perfected that the producer feels certain of the results, and will introduce effects made possible by these experiments.

The propaganda film on which Mr. Griffith has been working for months is not to be an Artcraft release it became known this week. How it will be handled is yet to be decided. The subject will consist of probably eight reels, and a unique feature is that every member of the cast has brown or dark eyes. Included in the players are Robert Harron, Richard Bartholmus, Carol Dempster, a Los Angeles girl; Claire Seymour, who has been in comedy; George Fawcett, Katre Bruce, Adolph Lestinie, Syn de Condi and others.

Society of Motion Picture Engineers

THE exact date for the postponed meeting of the society of Motion Picture Engineers has not as yet been definitely set. Due to the influenza the meeting in Cleveland scheduled for October twenty-first and twenty-second was cancelled. The original plans will be carried out during the latter part of November and it is hoped that the Society may benefit by the postponement by having a larger attendance.

There is one question of considerable importance which will be taken up at the coming session. This deals with the appointment of a committee to wait upon the Fuel Administration. This committee is an important one as it can be of active and immediate help to the Government purely in an advisory capacity as fuel saving will be as necessary for a considerable time after peace is declared as it is now.

The Society in the past has been quietly working within the industry for improvements which, though coming slowly, are bound to be brought about in the end. Now is the time for us to show to those on the outside that the society is an organization which is in a position to do things—with a membership which, through its trained and technical men, can be of service to the Government in a way which is impossible of accomplishment through any other branch of the industry.

This committee must be composed of men versed in illumination — current control — and other technical branches which fall directly under and relate to the Fuel Administration's activities.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, under date of October 19, published a list of recommendations for the saving of current which in turn if carefully carried out will have a far-reaching effect upon the fuel supply. These recommendations were sent to the Fuel Administration and from acknowledgments which have been received were considered timely.

The Fuel Administration has gone further and expressed a desire to go into the matter more exhaustively. This can and will be done though we personally feel that here is an opportunity for the Society to take hold of an important question and cooperate in such a way that it will redound permanently to its credit. One thing, however, must be remembered and that is that any committee which is appointed must be named with the idea of including only men fitted by training directly for the undertaking. The committee must not be cumbersome as the recommendations which it will be called upon to make will be definite, and only certain branches of the membership are in a position to make them, with a minimum of waste energy.

The tendency of the motion picture industry is to pull out the "old axe" and "have a grind" every time the opportunity arrives. This, thus far, has not happened in any way in connection with the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and we feel sure that it will not, therefore, we hope this committee will be elected or appointed with all possible haste, in the regular way, in order that it may be organized and in working order with the least possible delay.

Another matter of interest to the industry at the coming meeting of the Society is that the annual election of officers will be held. For this reason it is our hope that every member of the Society will be present. The plans for the coming year will be discussed at length, and should prove not only interesting but of the utmost value.

The papers which are to be presented at the coming meeting will be presented and distributed by the President of the Society, C. Francis Jenkins, 712 Eleventh Street, Washington, D. C., prior to the meeting so that all members should come to the meeting prepared to discuss the various subjects from every angle. We would suggest that this be done carefully by all, for by this method alone can the full value be gotten out of them.

Special Notice

Although it is above stated that the Cleveland meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers had been indefinitely postponed; we learn, at the instant of going to press that the meeting will be held on Monday and Tuesday, November 18 and 19.

The Society's headquarters, during the Cleveland meeting will be, as previously announced, the Hotel Winton, and in addition to its executive sessions the Society will be entertained by the National Lamp Works and the National Carbon Co., whose vast plants will also be open for the inspection of the visiting members.

Operators

Thus far since announcing the prize competition for articles on various subjects connected with projection we have had several letters and the assurance of considerable interesting data.

These letters, however, have not been as numerous as we would like and we feel sure that there is much latent ability which has not as yet come to the surface. We suggest that every man in the industry who feels capable of handling these subjects at once sit down and prepare the data in the form of an article and send it in.

Communications of this kind should be sent to Mr. A. S. Cory, Editor of the Projection Department. If any one has any questions to ask as to added details he should write at once.

E. K. GILLETT.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Perplexities of Projector Optics

Mr. A. G. Smith, Dresden, Tenn., propounds the following series of questions:

"I use 110 volts from the line through a compensarc with no name plate and five throws, which, I judge, range from 20 to 60 amps, and I have to use it on the last two throws to get enough current. No ampere or volt meters in town, so I can't make a test. The house meter reads 100 V. 50 Amp. 60 Cycles.

"The throw is about 64'. The distance from front condenser lens to aperture plate is 20½" and the lamphouse as far back as the frame will let it go. I use two 6½" plano-convex condensers and it is about 3½" from arc crater to back condenser. Gundlach-Manhattan projection lens 4" E.F. Diameter of lens about 2". Shutter 2⅝" from front of objective. The shutter has two blades. Size of picture about 11' 2" wide. Powers 6A machine.

"Question: When I hold a card in front of the lens about 3" away from shutter I seem to get the smallest circle of light; should not the shutter be there? And why is it smaller there than right at the lens? I get more flicker than I like. Can you suggest any changes? I get pretty good light on the screen when the current is good. Have a bought screen, which looks like it was painted with aluminum. What is a good thing to dust or clean it with? There are two splices in it and they show plainly. My pictures move sideways at times, like it was in the film. I have lined everything up and intermittent sprocket seems tight enough sideways, allowing for expansion. Now the tension shoes can be shaken from side to side quite a little, and it seems to me dirty film might cause them to shift from side to side. Outline the numerous causes for such crazy actions. Suppose you publish a diagram of the light from the arc to the screen, where it crosses the image, etc. I have talked to several operators in these small towns and not one could tell me for sure if the light crossed itself between the condenser lenses and aperture, or if it was crossed between the two condensers. Where and what is the aerial image, and where and how do you find the dissolving point? How do you find out how far the lamphouse should be from the aperture? What is a multiple reel?"

In reply: Our correspondent has favored us with well nigh complete information concerning the present adjustment of his projector optical system, and we are therefore enabled to set him right without indulging in extensive conjecture.

For the condenser combination, two 6.5" lenses, used by the correspondent, a distance of 20.5" from condensers to aperture is far too great, and the image of the arc crater is brought to a focus before reaching the machine aperture; thus the film picture at the aperture is, in the correspondent's case, being illuminated by a diverging instead of a converging beam, and the result is an absurdly excessive waste of light. It should not, however, be assumed from the foregoing that an ideal condition will prevail if the crater image, or "true spot," is focussed upon the film picture at the aperture, for, while such an arrangement represents better efficiency than the correspondent's present adjustment, it is nevertheless more wasteful of light than is the case when a condenser combination of proper E. F. is selected and so focussed as to illuminate the picture at the aperture with a converging, or at least a parallel, beam.

We therefore recommend that the correspondent use a 6.5" and 7.5" condenser combination, and materially decrease the distance from condensers to aperture, judging the most suitable position for the lamphouse by a study of the evenness and intensity of the light upon the screen. The various tables of condenser distances, etc., published to date, are not to be relied upon if efficiency is desired, as they have been formulated by propounders of some weird assumptions regarding optical action, which are not at all in conformity with the laws and facts of the subject.

When the condensers are sufficiently close to the aperture to supply the maximum illumination which can be collected and transmitted by the objective, it will be frequently found that the rays issuing from the front of the objective are diverging, and in such a case the small cross-section of the beam noticed by the correspondent at a short distance in front of the objective, with his present arrangements, will no longer be in evidence. We will return, further on, to the consideration of the best distance from the objective at which to locate the shutter, but in reply to the correspondent's query as to how he can reduce the flicker in his picture; this results from the use of the two-wing shutter and would not be improved by the installation of a three-winger when the current is 60 cycle A.C., because the three-wing shutter gets into synchronism with the current alternations at most every useful projecting speed, and a stroboscopic pulsation results which is even worse than the flicker with the two-wing shutter. The only methods by which the correspondent can, therefore, reduce the flicker, so long as he uses the A.C. arc as light source, are (1) to increase the projecting speed, which is not conducive to a proper interpretation of the action in most pictures, or (2) to reduce the brightness of the projected picture, which may or may not be advisable, according to the circumstances.

Not knowing the make of the metallic coated screen used, we could not definitely advise as to how it should be refinished, but any attempt on the part of the correspondent to recoat it would probably end in disaster. It is claimed, however, by the makers of most all types of metallic-surface screens, that these surfaces may be cleaned by washing with soap and water. If the screen appears to be dirty, we would suggest the experiment of carefully and evenly washing the surface, which should considerably increase its reflecting power. Unless the washing operation is painstakingly and slowly carried out, the screen will show dirty streaks, due to uneven application of the soap and water.

Regarding the occasional sidewise movement of the picture on the screen, this could fairly be blamed upon the films, if of rare occurrence, but if it is frequently noticeable, the adjustment or mode of installation of the projector is surely at fault. The correspondent's report of his intermittent movement adjustment appears rational, and we can assure him that sidewise play in the tension shoes would hardly be responsible for sidewise movement of the picture on the screen, as the forward pressure (exerted by the shoes) on the film is, in general, the only function of the gate tension devices which has appreciable influence upon the projected picture. However, it may be that the correspondent's machine is not rigidly anchored to the floor of his projection room, or that the floor itself is subject to vibration, and we recommend that he investigate these matters.

For the present we decline the invitation to publish a diagram showing the passage of the light rays from arc to screen, as it occurs in projecting motion pictures, but the exact characteristics and mode of action of optical projection systems have been the subject of our recent and precise investigation, the results of which will appear in due course, prefaced by a sketch of the real properties and action of lenses, which have not been taken into consideration by the majority of "light ray artists" who have published diagrams in the past.

Coming now to the "aerial image" and the "dissolving point;" those delightful concoctions of the amateur theorists, these are, in a sense, one and the same thing, as the "dissolving point" of the projected beam is situated at the plane of the "aerial image." In simple language the facts are as follow:

For any object on one side of a positive lens there will be formed a corresponding real image at some distance from the other side of that lens. In the case of the motion picture projector the object is the bright surface of the front condenser lens (or some portion of that surface), as seen by the projection objective through the rectangular opening in the aperture-plate. An image of the bright forward condenser surface, as seen by the rear element of the projection objective, is therefore formed on the other side of the objective; that is, in space, out in front of the objective. As it is a real image, it can be received upon a screen, such as a white card or piece of paper held in the light beam, and the image thus noted on the paper screen will be a faithful picture of what the rear component of the objective sees, looking backward through the picture aperture. In studying the form and size of the image received upon the paper in front of the objective, the diffused and scattered light surrounding it should be left out of consideration, as this scattered light is due to reflections from the lens mounting and surfaces, and plays no part in the formation of the image under observation (the so-called "aerial image").

Now, according to the optical laws of conjugate foci or distances, the size of the "aerial image," and also its distance in front of the objective, will be governed by the distance between the front condenser surface and the objective; thus, the shorter the distance between the condensers and the objective, the further out in front of the objective will the "aerial image" be formed, and, likewise, the larger will the "aerial image" become.

It is, therefore, frequently not feasible to place the revolving shutter so that it cuts the projected beam at the exact position of this "aerial image," or "dissolving point" of the beam, but when the shutter is placed at this point the interesting effect is noted on the screen that, as soon as the shutter blade commences to cut the projected beam, the illumination commences to be reduced simultaneously all over the screen, and is so faint that the picture is indistinguishable before the shutter blade has passed entirely through the light beam. Thus the light is not cut off abruptly from one side of the picture to the other when the shutter blade intercepts the beam, but is diminished gradually in a manner similar to the dissolving action of an iris diaphragm, hence the origin of the term "dissolving point."

The reason for the simultaneous diminution of the screen illumination at all parts of the projected picture, when the shutter blade intercepts the projected beam at the plane of the "aerial image" (the so-called "dissolving point") does not appear to have occurred to the various experimenters on this dissolving effect, but we supply the explanation here, as it will doubtless interest all students of projector optics.

It is a fact readily capable of experimental confirmation that any single point on the front surface of the condenser system can project a complete image, or picture, of the entire arc crater, this picture of the crater being, in the case of the motion picture projector, the true spot, which, of course, is formed somewhere in front of the condenser system, and is a magnified picture of the arc crater. When such a spot, or true image of the entire arc crater, formed by the rays proceeding from but a small point or element of the front condenser surface, is examined, it is seen to be very feebly illuminated, as might be expected, since the light projected by all of the rest of the condenser surface has been stopped off, and cannot contribute to the formation of the spot.

The ability of any small element, or point, on the surface of a lens to form a complete, although feebly illuminated, image of an object situated on the other side of the lens is a general and fundamental property of all lenses, and is not merely confined to the condenser system of an optical lantern, which is the case here under consideration.

Optics further shows us that the image of a luminous object formed by an optical system will be endowed with the characteristics of the object itself, so that we can expect the image of the front condenser surface which is formed in front of the projection objective (the "aerial image") to be possessed of all the characteristics of the luminous front condenser surface itself. Thus, as it is known that stopping down, or reducing the area of, the front condenser surface does not prevent it from forming a complete image, but merely lessens the intensity of the resultant image in exact proportion to the manner in which the operative lens surface is diminished, it is apparent that any point or portion of the "aerial image" (which behaves the same as the front condenser surface), can likewise form a complete picture on the projection screen, which picture will vary from the maximum brightness to vanishing intensity, according as the entire area of the "aerial image," or only a portion of its area, is sending rays to the screen. The shutter blade passing through the projected beam at the plane, or position, of the "aerial image" is thus seen to act the same as would a gradually closing iris diaphragm before the front condenser surface, and a complete image is still formed upon the screen so long as any portion of the "aerial image" is still unmasked by the shutter blade, but as the illumination of this screen image diminishes in direct proportion to the reduction in

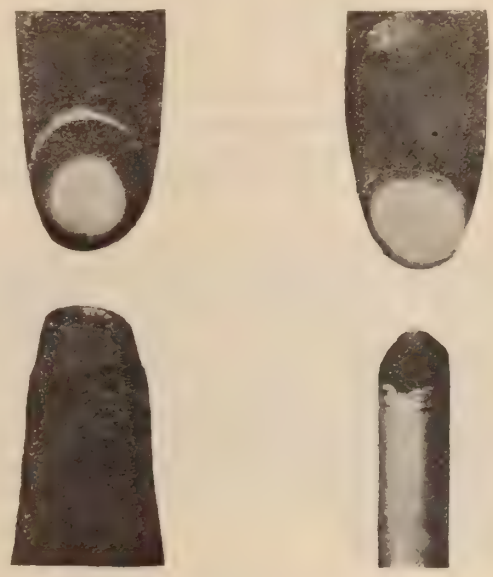
SILVERTIP

DIRECT CURRENT

Motion Picture Carbon

The Silvertip is the standard negative carbon for direct current projection. It is of small diameter and is heavily plated with metal to give it a high current carrying capacity. When used with the Columbia upper it gives a pure white light of high intensity.

The illustration below shows clearly the difference in size of the Silvertip negative and the old negative carbon. The great improvement in positive crater is also shown.



The blunt point of the negative carbon in the old system permits the negative spot to wander, since the spot covers but a small portion of the point. The negative spot on the Silvertip covers the entire point with the result that the arc cannot wander and cause a flicker on the lens and screen.

effective area of the "aerial image," the screen picture is so faint as to be hardly observable by the time the shutter blade has passed two-thirds of the way through the projected beam at the plane of the "aerial image," and the analogy between the action of the shutter blade cutting the beam at this point and the action of a gradually closing iris diaphragm in front of the condenser system completely accounts for the dissolving effect.

A study of the foregoing will convince the correspondent that the answer to his question as to how the proper lamphouse distance is determined will best be learned by experiment, and, as for his concluding query, a "multiple reel" is the highbrow term for a film subject which is in excess of 1,000 feet in length, and is therefore supplied on two or more film reels.

Movies Essential to Happiness of Men at Front

ON November 6 the members of Local 306, I. A. T. S. E. had the pleasure of listening to an interesting talk by William Horton Foster, vice-president of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, which organization has charge of all motion picture activities in the various army camps in this country and overseas. Mr. Foster is making an appeal for experienced operators for this service, as more are required in addition to the several hundred already employed.

Mr. Foster has a most intimate and complete knowledge of the overseas work of the Motion Picture Bureau, and he related a host of extraordinary experiences which befall the motion picture operators in the vicinity of the front line trenches, but the most convincing proof of the value of motion picture exhibitions to the jaded fighters is given by the boys themselves, as they are always hungry for new pictures and cheer the operator to the echo when he makes his regular appearance.

A letter recently received from one of these overseas operators, Mr. Harry E. Southard, who is a member of Local 306, gives an insight into the character of this work from the viewpoint of the operator. Mr. Southards' letter says:

"As to our work, there is no end of it. I am in charge of what is probably the largest area in France and am going night and day. We have no use for watches or clocks and though I am working harder than I ever did before, I enjoy it and would not change jobs with a bank president. That we are doing the most important work (aside from actual warfare) that is being done here, is pretty thoroughly recognized over here, though from letters I got it does not seem to be at home.

"I am going tonight to a little island where a few hundred men are without a canteen, without a 'Y'; in fact, with nothing except my weekly visit. I must drive over the most impossible roads four hours to reach them, and tonight the trip will be made in a pouring rain and through mud hub-deep, but if you could see my reception when I arrive and they know they will get their movies; if you could see the send-off I get in leaving, you would know what appreciation really is and you would envy me my rain and mud and my wet clothes, and you can well believe that when I feel those wet clothes off about 4 o'clock tomorrow morning and turn into my bed, I can go to sleep with a smile of real happiness. So if anyone tells you that there is anything more important to the soldier than his movies, you will know it isn't true.

"In closing I can only say that my one regret is that you and all my friends can't be here with me."

Cleveland Operators Active in Fourth Loan Drive

MOTION picture operators of Cleveland, no less than other members of the industry, devoted all of their time, during the recent Liberty Loan campaign, to stimulating and acquiring subscriptions. Frank Masek, Harry Holmden and Jack Pendergast constituted a committee of operators, which saw to it that ten operators were appointed every evening to direct the ten community shows that were given from the backs of army trucks in the different neighborhoods of the city. The men went on at 6 P. M. and worked under the most disadvantageous circumstances. They had to put up and take down their shows after each performance. They were salesmen when the occasion required, and they even took the stand and made speeches when the regular speakers failed to appear. Mr. W. E. Lusk, who had charge of the distribution of Liberty Loan films for the Fourth Federal Division, was enthusiastic in his praise for the help rendered the committee by the operators.

Local 306 Has New Headquarters

WE are advised by Local 306, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., that they have vacated their former office in the Columbia Theatre Building and are now located in the Gaiety Theatre Building, No. 1547 Broadway, New York.

A large suite of rooms has been acquired by the organization on the sixth floor of the Gaiety Building, which will greatly facilitate the transaction of its business affairs, this step having become necessary on account of the steadily increasing number of new members recruited from all over Greater New York.

Educational Institutions Install Motiographs

THE Enterprise Optical Company, Chicago, Ill., report that the demand for Motiograph projectors by schools and commercial institutions has been very heavy of late.

They advise us that "De Luxe" Motiographs have recently been installed in the public schools, Clayton, New Mexico; the Grafton High School, Grafton, Wisconsin, and by the American Agricultural Chemical Company, Pierce, Florida.

The Reticulation of Gelatine

By S. E. SHEPPARD and F. A. ELLIOTT

Experimental Production of Reticulation

A TYPICAL case, which has the advantage of following ordinary photographic procedure, is as follows: A Seed 23 plate is "flashed," developed in a standard pyro soda developer for 4 min. at 80° F., then rinsed, and fixed in a standard hypo-bisulfite fixing bath at 80° F. Reticulation was then found to depend upon the temperature of the wash water as follows:

Temperature	Reticulation
70° F.	None
80° F.	None
90° F.	Faint
100° F.	Strong

Instead of water, stronger and more definite results were obtained by an after-treatment with the following solution:

50 cc. 95 per cent Ethyl Alcohol
40 cc. 5 per cent Formaldehyde
110 cc. Water

In this case the following factors may have played a part:

1—Prehardened gelatine in the emulsion.

2—Tanning agents produced in development.

3—Excess swelling pressure in hot developer, etc., and particularly in washing.

That reticulation can be produced by the combined action of both a swelling or softening agent and a hardening or anti-swelling agent to restrain this is shown by the production of reticulation by the following combinations:

No.	Hardening Agent	Softening Agent
1.....	Tannic Acid	Acetic Acid
2.....	Quinone	Acetic Acid
3.....	Chromic Acid	Hot Water
4.....	Mercuric Iodide	Potassium Iodide

All of these combinations produce reticulation, but 1 and 2 have only a theoretical interest, as they are difficult to control. The other two pairs are more susceptible of control, although it must be emphasized that in any case the balance between hardening and softening agents must be delicately adjusted, and that the measure of control is limited. Further, the occurrence or production of reticulation is in a very large degree dependent upon the nature of the gelatine. The so-called "hard" gelatines tend readily to reticulation, while the "soft" ones only give transient signs of it.

An experiment on this point gave the following results:

Gelatine	Coating Per Cent	Reticulation in Potassium Mercuric Iodide
A-Hard	8	Strong, permanent
B-Hard	8	Strong
C-Soft	8	Very faint, transient
D-Soft	8	Very faint, transient
E-Soft	8	Very faint, transient

The following results were obtained with combinations of softening and hardening agents 3 and 4:

Chromic Acid and Hot Water—Chromic acid is, of course, a well-known hardening agent for biological tissues. Working with 8 per cent hard gelatine, machine coated on glass, a 10 per cent solution of chromic acid at 20° to 22° C., followed by washing with water at 56° C., was found to afford the best conditions.

Potassium Mercuric Iodide—The solution of mercuric iodide in potassium iodide known as Brücke's reagent was found to be a convenient strength for use. According to the formula for this, 120 g. of mercuric iodide are to be dissolved in a solution of 50 g. potassium iodide in 500 cc. of water, and the whole diluted to 1000 cc. We found, however, that under these circumstances only about 72.6 g. of mercuric iodide could be dissolved at room temperature; nor was this result much affected by heating to 50° C. It should be noticed that these quantities are near to those necessary for the double salt, $2KIHgI_2$ or K_2HgI_4. In this combination, the softening agent is the iodide, or more specifically the iodion, I^-, while the hardening or coagulating agent is the mercuric salt, or, again, the mercuric ion Hg^{++}. Attempts made to increase the proportion of mercury were without success. A saturated solution of potassium iodide at 18° to 20° C. was made, containing 128 g. of potassium iodide to 100 cc. of water, or 56.2 g. in 100 g. solution, which agrees fairly with the value 59 per cent at 20° C. given as the solubility in Landolt-Börnstein. This solution was saturated at 20° C. with mercuric iodide, taking up 64 g. In this the ratio of 2KI to HgI_2 is 0.69, whereas the actual double salt would call for 0.73. This solution was used as a saturated stock solution and Brücke's reagent is equivalent to 10 parts stock saturated plus 90 parts water.

Working with the 10 per cent saturated (Brücke's reagent) and hard gelatine, 8 per cent machine-coated, the following results were obtained:

Duration of Treatment, Minutes	Effect
2¾.....	Small pock marks about 1 mm. apart produced in 40 sec. followed by reticulation which was much lessened in drying.
3½.....	As before, but reticulation somewhat more persistent on drying.
5	As before, but with continued treatment reticulation became fainter and vanished on drying.
10	As before, but the whole surface finally softened and could not be dried, softening and running.
10	After treatment, this was chilled 15 min. on ice, then immersed for 2 min. in 3 per cent formaldehyde. This conserved the reticulation.

The formaldehyde after-treatment seems generally necessary with this agent to "fix" the reticulation. Using soft gelatine, 6 per cent solution machine-coated, and a wide range of concentration of the potassium mercuric iodide solutions, only slight and transitory reticulations were observed in the higher concentrations, giving way, however, to a general softening and liquefaction. Attempts to overcome this by preliminary hardening with formaldehyde were not successful. Prehardening with chrome alum showed better results. In the case of the mercury-potassium iodide combination, while it is not possible to increase the mercuric iodide ratio above a certain limit, other permanent or temporary hardeners may be added. In particular it was found that Brücke's reagent with the addition of 6 per cent of saturated Na_2SO_4 solution gave very fine, uniform reticulation.

Sodium sulfate used in the reticulation process makes the "grain" finer, while after-treatment with formaldehyde increases or conserves the depth of the wrinkles.

An important conclusion from these experiments is that apparently reticulation may start in more than one way. Thus with the Brücke reagent, and with chromic acid followed by hot water, reticulation proper was generally preceded by the appearance of small pock-like markings of about 0.2 to 0.3 mm. diameter. These would sometimes align themselves in "streaks," and in any case seemed the foci of the subsequent reticulation. On the other hand, in the reticulation produced by the use of hot water after development and fixation, these initial markings did not appear.

Effect on the Silver Image

It is noteworthy that when the reticulating film contains developed silver particles—as in negatives after fixation—there is an apparent migration of the silver particles, the ridges being denser, the valleys much less dense or even quite clear.

The question arises, whether reticulation is simply a puckering of a sheet grown larger by lateral dilation, larger than the support boundaries, but retained on this by local adhesion, particularly at the edges, as is indicated in Fig. 4, or is a mosaic-like alteration of hardening and softening effects, the ridges being more swollen, the valleys more tanned, as suggested by Fig. 5.

It is evident that in the first case the excess in the ridges is simply due to the total thinning (by the lateral dilation) plus local thickening due to folding of the increasing sheet. In the other case, the greater density in the ridges would be due to an actual migration of silver due to tension, similar to that occurring on the drying of moisture spots, when the tension in drying softens the gelatine and forces the particles into the periphery of the spot. This effect is shown in Fig. 6, a drawing made by Mr. M. B. Hodgson from microscopical observations. In the latter case we should have in reticulation a great and increasing number of microscopic replicas of such "moisture spots," tending to run into each other and form one system, like cracks in a drying mass.

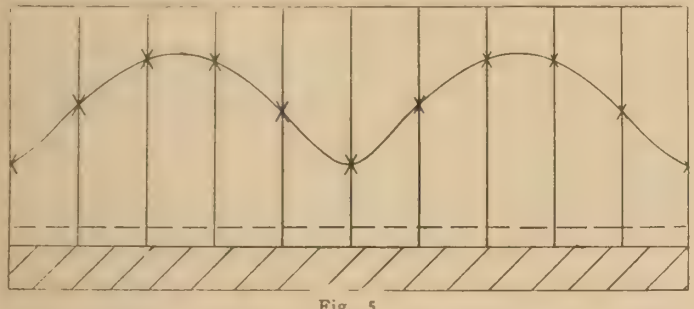

Fig. 5.

The theory of alternate softening and hardening, or of differential swelling, couples up readily with the fact already noticed that in many cases reticulation starts from a number of isolated points. When softening and tanning agents are present together in a gelatine gel, a certain amount of selective adsorption and differential diffusion will occur. A molecule or ion having a tanning action will tend to be adsorbed or fixed in situ, and its own specific diffusion will be hindered. Molecules or ions having a softening action may modify the action on tanning agents, but their diffusion will be facilitated by their hydrating and softening action on the gelatine.

It is easy to see that we should have then a condition of rhythmic coagulation of the gelatine very similar to that shown in the well-known Liesegang rings. In this latter case, when two salts which react to form a precipitate are allowed to diffuse together through a gelatine gel, the precipitate, such as silver chromate or silver halide, is not deposited uniformly, but rhythmically, in alternate rings or layers.

Actually it is observed that reticulation generally starts in one or more regions and fills up by the spread of these; in some cases from isolated foci. It seems then that reticulation in its earliest stage involves something like the nucleation of a crystallizing solution. In such a solution, crystallization may start either at nuclei already present in the solution or by the formation of new ones, but in the latter case there is required a higher degree of supersaturation for crystallization to start. At what point in such solution or melt the first nuclei appear is a matter of pure chance and it is apparently much the same with the start of reticulation.

The Connection Between Reticulation and the "Graininess" of Negatives

In one important case where it is very probable that incipient reticulation is at work, foreign nuclei are available. This is in the case of the ordinary development of a photographic emulsion.

It is known that, apart from differences in emulsion, different developing agents and treatments affect the "graininess" of the developed image. By this is not to be understood the elementary plate grain, but such clumping in second order aggregates as is liable to be objectionable in projection. This granulation depends upon development, and in the same way, resolving power depends upon development and the developer[1]. It is hardly to be doubted that we have in this case a selective adsorption and differential diffusion of developers, producing what amounts to incipient reticulation, nuclei being formed by the developed silver particles, with their tendency to adsorb the colloidal reaction products of development, which have tanning or coagulating properties. Consideration of the great change in the swelling equilibrium shown on passing from an alkaline to an acid condition (Fig. 2) shows also that the operations subsequent to development are very liable to develop still further any sub-microscopic reticulation, and again to coarsen the "grain" of the image. It is hoped to follow this up experimentally when time permits, instruments having been devised for measuring both granularity and minute swellings.

The Sun-Light Arc

By J. Justice Harmer

FROM time to time, we hear it said by producers, directors and cameramen, that while the Sun-Light Arc is a beautiful Light with an immense volume and value of color, having all the wonderful effects of pure sun-light, that it is good for exterior lighting only.

This wonderful Sun-Light Arc that illuminated Madison Square Garden, can also be used in a small set and for close-ups, with most wonderful artistic effects. This light can be shaded or directed from one source into many directions.

It is not necessary to use other lights for diffusing this light in either small or large sets. For this reason the volume of light is so vast that by placing a shutter hood over the face of the lens of this light, would cut out every particle of light. But having eight shutters on this hood that work independent of each other, these shutters can be opened at several different angles in order to direct a certain quantity of light on the subject desired or on a number of subjects at the same time.

The Sun-Light Arc Company extends an invitation to all producers to visit the Sun-Light Arc Company's office, and have their cameraman and director direct a scene in this small studio, which is 12 x 38, and make a test of close-ups and the various gradations of light obtained through this method of illumination.

It is bad policy to rely on hearsay. Test and give yourselves a practical demonstration of the workings of this light, and the results that are proven to you by this test, will be such as to forever set all your doubts aside as to the efficiency of the Sun-Light Arc, in all kinds of lighting effects; interiors or exteriors.

Call up or write and make an appointment when you would like to make tests in our studio. Some of the illuminating successfully accomplished with most pleasing photography: Hotel Biltmore, M. P. D. C. Ball, 2 lights. Hotel Astor, 2 lights, Annual Pageantry Ball, showing 300 couples dancing. Metropolitan Opera House, 2 lights, used by Famous Players in Caruso picture.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits | Music | Musical Equipment

What Is a Real Music Cue Sheet?

THE importance of appropriate music for the motion picture is an established factor, and there is no necessity to dispute this matter. The enormous variety of subjects presented on the screen, the wealth of possibilities from a musical standpoint, and the acknowledged increased effectiveness added to a motion picture through appropriate music, was and is the only factor that has created the so-called music cue sheet.

I firmly believe that many musicians or orchestra leaders playing pictures are capable of compiling music cues, providing a chance is given to them to view the picture ahead of the opening performance. This was the first reason for music cues—briefly to acquaint the leader with the character of the picture he was to interpret with his music in the event of him being unable to see the picture before the performance.

Such music cues, however, as designed by the average theatre musician are of course only of use to himself. Many display excellent thoughts and ideas and are worthy to be noted and commended upon, but the question is "Are these men as a body capable of serving the film companies so that these cue sheets can be duplicated and distributed as a guide to all musicians?" To condemn the work of these men is quite a risky statement unless some reasons are set forth which will sufficiently convince my readers on this subject.

The theatre musician compiling the cue sheet for his own particular requirements is bounded by his library. Whether it be large or small, it always consists of music which he personally approves of. In other words, no musician will add to his library a composition which he does not like. Again the average musician is bound to restrict his library to the particular instrumentation he is using and furthermore to the grade or ability of his men. Hence, what would be the good of a cue sheet suggested by a man whose orchestra consisted of a mediocre quintette? His ideas must naturally be confined and hampered by his own scope.

The principal requirement of a man who sets music to pictures is EXPERIENCE, not only as a musician, but experience from a librarian's angle. In other words, he must be acquainted with every publication on the market irrespective of whom the publisher may be. He must know where it can be obtained, what instrumentation it is published for, whether it is solely practical for the large combinations, or so cued that is adaptable for the lone pianist or even violin and piano. This is the vital requisite which so few men engaged today in preparing music cue sheets possess.

We reiterate that a musician's cue sheet consists in every instance of music which he has accumulated and reflects his personal tastes and in the majority of instances is totally unsuited to meet the requirements of any instrumental combination from the lone pianist to grand orchestra.

To review the work of those men who are, we might say, professional cue sheet writers or musical experts for the film, there are only two whose work stands out and conclusively proves their practical and artistic worth.

In order to substantiate this claim, we would like to acquaint our readers with the following facts. Both these men have been associated with almost every important production. Their names have been time and again used as part of an advertising campaign. The leading film companies of today after consulting reputable leaders throughout the country are placing their work in the hands of these men. Both of them are musicians of repute and experience. One was associated with the house of Carl Fischer for over ten years and the other established the Motion Picture Department of G. Schirmer and has since been responsible for placing upon the market a series of Incidental music which has been recognized as revolutionizing film interpretation.

The experience which these men have gained cannot be duplicated by any other man claiming to be a musical film expert. By this statement we solely mean that they have the experience and ability to compile such a cue sheet of material that is available, practical for all combinations, and is not confined by personal tastes or limitations.

All musicians are aware that time and again the music which has been suggested by certain so-called experts can never be obtained for the combinations they desired, and as a glaring example, a certain ballad was suggested and when an effort was made to obtain same from the publisher, it was then learned that it was for voice only. Nevertheless, the gentleman had suggested it as the THEME for the picture to be played by the orchestra solely because he liked the ballad and made an orchestration for his own use, not even taking the trouble to find out whether it was published for orchestra or not.

Another example of gross incompetence in the preparation of musical cue sheets has just come to hand in Douglas Fairbanks's latest picture "HE COMES UP SMILING." It is suggested at the opening of the picture that "MARCH BIZZARRE," by Walter Simon, be played for nine minutes. This composition consists of about eighty measures, the tempo being an allegro 2/4 which would possibly take about one minute and a quarter to play. Still we are told to play it for nine minutes. Later in the picture we are to repeat it for four and a half minutes and again for six and a half minutes. The projection of the entire picture is fifty-four minutes, so that we shall practically have twenty minutes of "March Bizzarre," or play this number nearly twenty times during the performance of one production. Such is another example of why these pseudo professional music cue experts should be eliminated. It is logical to surmise that the gentleman who made this suggestion was not even acquainted with the length of this number, but perhaps might have heard it played at some time or other, thought it was a good composition and took a chance and stuck it in.

The majority of those compiling music cues are daily, like the horse race sport, taking chances, suggesting music from a catalog without having the ability, knowledge or opportunity of acquainting themselves with the compositions, and hence tearing down instead of building up an absolute requirement in the film industry, the association of good music with good pictures.

"Nipponese" Published by Fischer

"NIPPONESE," the Japanese dramatic theme writer for Sessue Hayakawa by Joseph O'Sullivan, Director of Music Service of Mutual, will be published by the Carl Fischer Music Publishing Co. of New York. Orchestrations, both full and small, will be available at an early date.

The piano transcription of two movements of this theme was used as a special insert with the press-book issued by Mutual on "His Birthright," the first Hayakawa Production. That this service was appreciated by exhibitors throughout the country was evidenced by the numerous letters received by Mutual requesting that orchestrations of the theme be sent without delay.

On account of the lack of characteristic Japanese music of dramatic mood, these dramatic themes should find a place in the library of every orchestra making a sincere effort to interpret motion pictures.

"Nipponese" was dedicated to Sessue Hayakawa by the composer, who has completed a Japanese Elegy, scored for full orchestra, which will be published in the near future.

Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Kathleen," an allegretto, by S. M. Berg, might aptly be described as a surprise waltz. The first movement is marked molto lento and is constructed similar to the recognized form of French waltzes. There is a pleasant surprise which occurs in the second movement and the trio from which the composition derives its name. The counter-point in the opening movement is of considerable interest to the musicians. Played in straight tempo, it is an excellent dancing waltz, and with the markings noted, an entertaining concert number. It is also published for piano solo. This can be obtained from Belwin, Inc.

2—"Prudence" (Entr' acte) by Ernst Luz. A number in gavotte style, effectively arranged. Illustrates romance. Lends itself easily to different tempos, making it valuable for playing to the photoplay. A melodious number throughout. (Published by J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th St., New York City.)

3—"Source dans Le Desert," Idyl by Marguerite W. Horton. Some most interesting songs by this composer have already been published, and this new Orientale for piano is worthy of them. It is one of those exotically colorful bits of Eastern impressionism which, without making too great demands technically, allows intelligent interpretation and a skillful use of the pedals on the part of the pianist to secure a maximum of effect. (Published by G. Schirmer, 3 E. 43rd St., N. Y. City.)

4—"Love's Melody" (Reverie) by Shannon. A charming slow movement with a most delightful melody, most appropriate for love scenes. (Published by Vandersloot.)

5—"Astralita Serenade," by Mabel A. Whaley. A number which deserves to be owned by any orchestra leader or piano player. (Published by the Red Star Music Co., Red Star, Ark.)

6—"After the War Is Over," by James A. Casey. Leaders who are in search for something distinctly novel and pretty should send for this number which in its typical march rhythm is a sure success with any audience. (Published by the Echo Music Co., New York and Seattle.)

7—"Over the Top, Boys." Patriotic march by S. M. Berg, found for its origin the well known adage, "Necessity is the mother of invention." When the musical expert made the score for the picture "Over the Top," in which Arthur Guy Empey starred, he found it necessary for the latter to have an original theme and so the above was created, which is an excellent allegro, march theme, portraying plenty of enthusiasm and whole-hearted action to characterize the daredevil, Empey. (Published by Belwin, Inc., Columbia Thea. Bldg., New York City.)

8—"Harbor of Dreams," Reverie, by J. R. Shannon. A composition opening with a melodious "¾ espressive movement," finishing with an exceptionally fine trio—most appropriate for love themes. (Vandersloot Music Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

9—"When the Yanks Come Marching Home." One-step by Jerome and Furth. A worthy song to go with our great hit, "Over There." A wonderful over-night success. You never played a better dance for orchestra. (Published by Jerome Pub. Co., New York City.)

11—"At the Yankee Military Ball," fox-trot, by Harry Jentes. The most popular and most often requested fox-trot and exquisite dance number which every music lover will appreciate. (Leo Feist, 44th St., N. Y. City.)

12—"Blue Devils," by Sol P. Levy. One of the finest French patriotic marches that has ever been published. It is full of timely enthusiasm determination, courage and Victory! (Published by Belwin, Inc., Columbia Theatre Bldg., 47th St. and 7th Ave., N. Y. City.)

Chicago House Buys Bartola

IT was announced this week that the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, of Chicago, has sold a large Bartola to A. Zilligen, Jr., of the Rosewood theatre, Chicago, and it is taking the place of a five-piece orchestra. The Bartola Company also sold a Bartola new style Grand to Neal Duffy, of Appleton, Wis. The latter is installing his instrument to take the place of a six-piece orchestra which he has had in his theatre for several years.

THE BARTOLA

Balaban & Katz of the Riviera and Central Park Theatres, Chicago, say every wide awake exhibitor should have a Bartola. Investigate it. Send for catalogue.

The Complete Plan Book

Compiled by Peter Milne

Index to Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors' Box Office Reports

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to September 1, 1918.

"WOMAN"—MAURICE TOURNEUR

Artistic, Surely; But Maybe "Over Their Heads"

THAT this is an artistic production no one will deny. It is a tribute to the vivid imagination and untiring zeal of its creator, Maurice Tourneur.

Judged solely as an illustration of the technique and art of the motion picture it is a contribution worthy of unstinted praise. But, as explained in the Advance Review on page 2896, in the issue of November 9th, it is doubtful whether the story will prove popular. The story is episodic, and the theme consists in showing five arguments to convince the spectator of the bad influence of Woman, and a closing one in her favor.

Pretty women, beautiful scenes, and direction, which is that of a master, are the points that impress one during the seven reels of the production.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

George Moore said: "We (men) forget women for a little while, when we are thinking about art, but only for a little while. The legitimate occupation of man's mind is woman."

Maurice Tourneur, producer of "The Blue Bird," "Sporting Life" and "The Whip," has turned his hand to an entirely different picture in "Woman." "Woman" is his contribution to screen literature just as "The Birth of a Nation" was Griffith's. There are few pictorial gems such as "Woman." Don't miss it.

Women! See yourselves as others see you. You are weak, wicked, frail, vain. You are exposed in "Woman."

It took courage to produce "Woman." Maurice Tourneur did it. You will believe him courageous after seeing "Woman."

"Woman" is destined to rank as a real screen epic. It was produced by Maurice Tourneur, master of his art. It is without a doubt the most beautiful picture even screened in any theatre.

AD TALK

Maurice Tourneur, that highly artistic director who gave us such fine pictures as "Sporting Life," "The Whip," "A Poor Little Rich Girl," with Mary Pickford, and the first series of Elsie Ferguson pictures for Artcraft, is the producer of "Woman," the feature which the ——— theatre will offer on ——— of ——— week. Let it be said here and now that "Woman" is by all odds the most unusual feature ever offered by the management of the ——— theatre. And it is unusual in more ways than one. Mr. Tourneur has taken for his principal character: woman. Woman from the beginning of the world to the present day. He has exposed the frailties and shown the power. He both condemns and praises.

It is not possible for us to relate the story here. Or stories, we should say. Such a task we will leave to the more artistic story teller, Mr. Tourneur. Beyond a doubt he has surpassed himself in striving for and achieving artistic effects. Some of the individual pictures in "Woman" are superior to those painted by the artist's brush. But it is not only in this respect that Mr. Tourneur has scored such a notable success with "Woman." In mass effect, in pageantry and in his conception of the vast enigma of the title, he has scored such a decisive record for himself that his name will go down in the annals of the films for all time.

In no small measure was Mr. Tourneur assisted by Charles Whittaker, who prepared the manuscript on which the picture was based, by a pair of cameramen who were able to secure the best of photographic effects and by a cast that is appreciative from first to last.

THE STORY

The opening episode of the picture is the oldest story of the world, the story of Adam and Eve. Eve tempted Adam and they ate of the apple, to be driven from the Garden of Paradise for ever more.

Next there is the less known, though vastly interesting story of Messalina, wife of Emperor Claudius of Rome. It is also Massalina, the woman, who caused the ruin of Claudius. After a riot of pleasure she takes another man to herself and literally snaps her fingers at Claudius. But there is retribution for her. Too weak to take her own life when so commanded by her husband and mother, she is pushed on the sword by the emperor's soldiers.

Again does woman, this time a woman of undoubted purity caused the downfall of a man. She is Heloise, he Abelard, sworn to the church. His vows are forgotten in pleasure.

And then there is fickle woman portrayed. Cyrene she is and married to a young fisherman of Brittany. But there is a longing in her heart for freedom, for something else than her rather dull married existence. And once while her husband is away she takes the form of a seal and joins the others in the water.

Woman's vanity is told in a story of Civil War times. A youngster in her teens hides a Union soldier, but when a Confederate officer, in search of the man, dangles a watch before her eyes she immediately points him out. She relents only after she has heard the shots of the firing squad.

But the woman of today is noble and heroic in the work of war.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture demands high class, impressive exploitation. Don't try to get by with any stuff you might use on a howling sex picture. For advertisements for your lobby and front, we would suggest that you use just the title and the name of the producer. The former certainly will awaken curiosity in the passerby—in any passerby. It is a name that might imply anything and for this reason it might be well just to let it go at that. Curiosity will be aroused to such an extent that people will want to come in and see what it is all about. As for Tourneur's name, that certainly carries weight after all the magnificent things he has done for pictures.

In your lobby use stills of the picture which the exchange handling "Woman" will be ready to supply you. They will have a full line of these stills and as they are some of the most beautiful photographs ever made try to get a lot of them and make your display in this line as liberal as possible.

Your musical presentation will count a lot on this production. In MOTION PICTURE NEWS, issue of November 9, page 2846, you will find some

"TELL IT TO THE MARINES"—FOX

If Your Patrons Like the Lee Kids This One Will Please Them

IF offerings starring the Lee children have pleased your patrons in the past, "Tell It To the Marines" will also please them. The little stars are made to portray the same kind of a mischievous nature, the same inclination for deviltry. Most of the picture depends on that element to amuse.

The most entertaining part of the contribution, however, is the last two reels. It is the enactment of the present war in miniature, signifying the struggle between the Huns and the Allies, in which the combatants are puppets, or animated tin soldiers, their different movements being ingeniously co-ordinated. The battle in the air, in particular, in which aeroplanes as well as Zeppelins participate, is very realistic. This part of the picture was reviewed on page 208, in issue of July 13, of this year, under the title, "Outwitting the Huns." Apparently Harry Raver, who owned it, having imported it, has sold the rights to the Fox Corporation, who have joined it to this picture instead of releasing it individually.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Jane Williams.....Jane Lee
Katherine Williams.....Katherine Lee
Harry Williams.....Charles Slattery
The Butler.....Edward Bagley
Story and direction by Arvid E. Gillstrom.

THE STORY

It may be a perfect day for the Lee Kids, but there's nothing perfect about it so far as the grown-ups are concerned. Nothing short of modern warfare, with skyrockets and fire crackers as ammunition, content Jane and Katherine Lee in "Tell It to the Marines." Their perfect day consists in scaring a butler nearly to death.

Daddy has guests, and the children see to it that they are well drenched with water before they leave. Then the two young rascals have a wild ride in an automobile to complete the day's fun.

Such a "perfect day" cannot help having its after effects at night. Jane dreams on about the day's fighting—about two mechanical toys, Trik and Trak, who lead armies of mechanical dolls against each other. Trik is the head of the Allied army. Trak is the Hun leader. Every incident of the present war, including Hun atrocities, the dropping of bombs from Zeppelins, the Kaiser reviewing his troops, is faithfully reproduced by these doll armies, in mechanical work that it required months to perfect and photograph. And then Jane wakes up to find it all has been a dream.

AD TALK

The Lee children, Jane and Katherine, come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in their latest Fox comedy entitled, "Tell It to the Marines." This is a picture which combines those outrageously funny pranks for which the Lee children are famous, with some of the most remarkable trick camera work ever presented on the film. Jane and Katherine, after having a hard day of it playing pranks on the servants and their parents' guests, finally doze off to sleep and dream of the war.

Their dream is subsequently pictured. They see two entire armies advancing against each other, battling, firing cannon, fighting in the air, constructing bridges, in fact, doing everything that one of our soldiers does over there. But all this is pictured by doll-like mannikens. The armies are under the leadership of Trik and Trak. These little puppets have been made to move with marvelous co-ordination. They are next to being human.

It took much patience and finally six months' work for the director to perfect the scheme whereby the mannikens were made to act life-like. It is probably one of the most amazing accomplishments of the picture. And, of course, there are the Lee children themselves! So with this combination the man or woman who comes to the ——— theatre during one of the days that "Tell It to the Marines" is playing, will have an extra fine treat. Arvid Gillstrom, producer of the previous Lee picture, was in charge of the direction of this one and the supporting cast includes Charles Slattery and Edward Bagley.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course if your patrons take delight in Jane and Katherine Lee, bill these little actresses heavily. "Tell It to the Marines," however, offers you some unusual advertising possibilities in the trick mannikens that are used in the children's dream. If you want to get the new angle into your advertising play up these mannikens. For a lobby decoration you might have your artist draw a map of the European battle ground and have Jane and Katherine on either side, sitting and watching the map intently.

If you play the attraction specially for children, which will be a specially good practice to follow with the production inasmuch as it is novel, you could use toy soldiers as lobby decorations or you might go further and present some cheap toy soldiers to the purchaser of each ticket or else make a lottery out of it.

"HIS BONDED WIFE"—METRO

Average Dramatic Offering of Program Type; Depends on Plot

THIS is only an average dramatic offering of the program type. It depends a great deal on the plot action, also on the fairly tense element of suspense, to hold the interest. There are hardly any situations in it with heart interest.

The basic idea of the story is the aversion of the heroine to marry any man who is after her money; also the disinclination of the hero to marry a rich girl.

The heroine, a young wealthy girl, stops at a summer resort. She meets the hero, a young construction engineer, spending his vacation, and they fall in love.

Their meetings continue after their return to the city. They decide to marry, but, being informed that his sweetheart is a wealthy girl, the hero nearly breaks the engagement. The father saves the situation by evicting his daughter, in pretense.

The young folks marry, but shortly afterwards friction arises as the wife, unable to any further tolerate want, spends the money her father gave her. This results almost in a break up of their home, but the situation is saved as the hero earns a large amount of money by drawing certain engineering plans. Thus he is able to provide for his wife with his own money.

CATCH LINES

A refreshing romance, in which the daughter of a copper king and a struggling young architect are the principal protagonists.

Emmy Wehlen, the star, who is a true delight to behold, in one of the sweetest roles of her career.

She wanted a man who would fall in love with her for herself alone—not for her money. So she took an assumed name and met "the" man. But then when she wanted to tell him all about herself, she suddenly saw that it would put an end to everything! See this romance of the rich girl and the poor man at the ———— theatre, where "His Bonded Wife" is now playing.

When a man rescues a girl from drowning at Atlantic City, he must just as well write "benedict" after his name. Such a romantic meeting in such a romantic spot cannot be ignored by mere man.

AD TALK

Emmy Wehlen, the charming Metro favorite, will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her latest picture entitled "His Bonded Wife." This is an original story prepared particularly for Miss Wehlen by Lois and Arthur Zellner, and has as its central figure Doris Morse, the daughter of a copper king. She tires of her existence as a society butterfly, and the men that seek her apparently only for her money disgust her, so after a while she beats a retreat to Atlantic City, and there under an assumed name sets out on a modest existence indeed. Then comes Philip Hazard, a young architect. And Philip comes just in time to save the young lady from perishing in the waves.

A rescue from drowning at Atlantic City is always the prelude to romance, and so it happens that Doris and Philip fall very much in love with one another. Later they are married, but not before Philip has discovered who Doris really is, to be bitterly disappointed and disheartened over it, but—. Well, to tell the rest of "His Bonded Wife" would be spoiling a very good story. The authors have handled their plot material so cleverly, and the leading parts have been so delightfully interpreted by Miss Wehlen on the one hand and Creighton Hale on the other, that the picture certainly marks one of the bright stars in Metro's banner.

Charles J. Brabin, who can handle this sort of a subject excellently, was in charge of the direction of the picture, while others in the cast are Frank Currier, John Terry and Warda Howard. Other features on the bill at the ———— theatre for the same days are ————.

THE STORY

Doris Morse, daughter of a copper king, tires of her existence, particularly as she is sought by men only for her money, and as a result takes a room in a cheap boarding-house at Atlantic City under an assumed name. Here she meets Philip Hazard, a young architect, and the two are soon in love. In order to carry the deception through she says that she is a clerk in Macy's. On their return to the city they keep up their acquaintance. Doris meets the people with whom Philip lives, Tom Lloyd and his widowed sister, Kate. One night when she dines with them she learns how strongly Philip is opposed to a poor man marrying a rich woman, because this situation happened to bring on a tragedy in the lives of his father and mother.

Philip eventually discovers that the girl he loves is none other than the daughter of the copper king. He hastens to her home and denounces her. Her father, a wise man, assumes great anger, and gives Doris to understand that if she is low enough to meet Philip clandestinely, she is no longer a daughter of his. This has the desired effect, and soon after the two young folks are married. Leeds, president of a big milling firm, comes to Philip with plans for a new factory to be prepared. He is so happy working on them that he keeps the news from Doris, as he wants to surprise her.

Doris' existence begins to pall on her. She accepts some bonds sent her by her father. Philip, believing that they will interfere with their happiness, attempts to steal them. He is shot. In Kate's apartment he receives attentions for his wounds, and, while at first Doris believes him unfaithful to her, everything is soon straightened out. The plans are later successful, and the young couple is the happiest in the world.

SUGGESTIONS

This is essentially one of those pictures in which the dominating note is heart interest. Make your appeal by bringing out this note in all advertising that you do. This type of story has always been and ever will be one of the most popular, so be sure to strike its essential line of action somewhere in your announcement.

For stars you have both the featured player, Emmy Wehlen, and Creighton Hale, long a serial leading man. If you have played any of the Pathe serials of the past, you might play Hale up big, for he has undoubtedly gained a good reputation for himself in this line of work.

"LAFAYETTE, WE COME"—PERRET-AFFILIATED

Perret Production Will No Doubt Have Universal Appeal

TO an American there can be no more appealing subject put in pictures than the one that reminds him of Lafayette's help. This picture has been produced with the object of showing our gratitude toward France, the native land of Lafayette, and that we have not forgotten to RUSH to her assistance in the hour of her need.

A love story has been interwoven in the basic idea,—A young American falls in love with a veiled Princess, a mysterious woman. One day she leaves him unexpectedly and without explanations. Thinking he is jilted, he enlists in the American army and goes to France. He is wounded, and while recuperating in a French resort, he again comes across the veiled Princess. In the end it develops that she has been serving France in the secret service department. All misunderstandings having been removed, a reconciliation takes place.

The scenes showing how the American boys are treated in France ought to prove a source of joy to American mothers and to all those who have a relative or a friend in the army "Over There."

This attraction ought to have universal appeal.—Screen time 90 minutes.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

As was mentioned before, all paper and cuts on this production are designed with the idea of indicating the union of France and the United States. In any advertising that you do follow out this idea. The title is such an inspiring one and it means so much that the people are certainly going to think that you have an unusual picture. So play right up to them by further inspiring them in your newspaper advertisements and lobby decorations.

The management of the Strand theatre in New York got up some good paintings for the lobby. One showed a figure of Liberty drawn in such a manner so that it appeared she was jumping right out at you. Her mouth was open and the title of the picture above fitted in very well. Another painting showed an American officer (Pershing), his back toward the spectator, saluting a body of French troops dimly seen in the background carrying the tricolor of France.

AD TALK

Next week the ———— theatre will present Leonce Perret's unusual patriotic feature, "Lafayette, We Come," costarring E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli. This picture presents M. Perret's idea of America's answer to the heroic French nation, who stood by us when first we fought for Liberty. "Lafayette, We Come!" is the cry—"Pershing, 1917." The production is filled with the spirit of patriotism, with the spirit of faith and good will which unites the nations of France and America, with the spirit of hope! And, contrary to what might be expected, it is not the usual sort of war picture.

Perret, a Frenchman and long a producer of pictures in the land of his birth, took a lighter theme on which to base his picture than is present in the unusual war play. There is none of the morbid horror of war revealed on the screen. Instead spectators will be treated to a swift-moving, mysterious story in which a loyal girl by aiding her Government when called upon, completely baffles her sweetheart, a member of the army fighting for democracy. How he finally becomes suspicious of her actions and eventually convinces himself that she is a traitor, and how after that he discovers that she was rendering her country a great service makes a photoplay full of surprises and electrifying suspense.

The production is lavish, the producer, having spared neither pains nor expense in making it realistic from every angle. Mr. Lincoln makes an extremely likable hero, and Dolores Cassinelli's rare Latin beauty stamps her as a most unusual, yet at the same time, adorable heroine. You will be missing a real treat if you pass up "Lafayette, We Come."

THE STORY

Leroy Trenchard, an American, is in love with Therese Verneuil. One day she mysteriously disappears, and hunt as he will Leroy is unable to find her. Then at a concert given by Princess Sonia, whose envied position in the music world is due to the fact that she never appears before the public unveiled. Leroy believes he recognizes the girl he loves. The eyes of the princess strangely resemble those of the lost Therese. But with the war on Leroy has other things to do besides think of love. He enlists in the ranks of the country he loves, and goes into battle. In a fierce engagement he is temporarily blinded.

On recovery he learns that Therese has cared for him all through his siege of blindness, but again she disappears. The young man is heartsick, but, seeking a clue, he visits the home of Princess Sonia in Paris on learning of a reception to be held in her quarters. He conceals himself behind the curtains and watches intently. He sees Sonia, still veiled, admit two secret service men, and turn over two of her "guests" to them. After they have departed the woman removes her veil, and Leroy sees that she is really Therese. He realizes that she is a spy, and is sick at the thought of it, but later revelations disclose that Therese has been serving her country.

The real Princess Sonia was a German spy. On her capture Therese had taken her place in order to assist the Government in rounding up her confederates. Leroy had seen her complete her task by trapping the last two of the band. Leroy begs her pardon for having doubted her, and Therese is only too glad to grant it.

PAPER:—Two one-sheets; two three-sheets; one six-sheet; one twenty-four sheet. Additional paper is also supplied that the exhibitor may make a combination twenty-four sheet out of his three's, one's and the six. All paper has been designed to convey the spirit of good will and friendship that exists between the United States and France. The good part about the majority of the paper is that it "tells a story." Few people will pass it by without looking twice, and after they have looked they will think and wonder. It is this sort of paper that gets the business.

CUTS:—There are good star cuts of both Mr. Lincoln and Miss Cassinelli, as well as an assortment of advertising cuts. There are two effective one-columns and cuts. These have been made carrying out the same idea as that expressed in the paper. Mats and electros can be obtained on all cuts at exchanges handling the production.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—The usual assortment of lobby photos in the standard sizes is provided for the exhibitor to choose from. Scene and star stills make up the assortment.

OTHER ACCESSORIES: Two styles of slides have been provided, as well as a press book and music cue sheet. A snipe is provided for use in connection with billing. The distributors have also gotten out buttons bearing the slogan, "Lafayette, We Come!" which the children will seize upon eagerly if past performances count for anything.

"MILADY O' THE BEANSTALK"—DIANDO-PATHE

Baby Marie Osborne Wanders Through Five Reels of "Film"

CERTAINLY this does not serve to improve Baby Marie Osborne's average. "Milady O' the Beanstalk" is short on plot and long on padding, and what little story it does possess is quite banal. The little girl serves to reunite her mother with the man she had really loved in the past, etc.

For a climax the producers turned to the old standby of the prize fighter going in the ring against the girl's wishes in order to secure money to save Baby's life. And they handled it poorly at that. The doctor who tends the child after her fall immediately informs the watchers that Specialist So-and-So is the only man that can save her life and that Specialist So-and-So's lowest fee is one thousand dollars. Then the perfectly obvious conclusion.

The best part of the film is the Jack and the Beanstalk stuff which Baby dreams. Sambo, ducklings, a cat and kittens and a dog are some of the accessories to the cast, and while the black-skinned, sharp-eyed youngster who has done yeoman service in so many of these pictures, is funny and cute, the "film" embarrasses him.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Baby Marie Osborne, the child star of Pathe pictures, will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her latest production. "Milady o' the Beanstalk," an original story by Elizabeth Burbridge. This is a highly interesting and amusing feature in which Baby Marie, after dreaming of Jack and the Beanstalk, elects to climb the fire escape to see whether she can find a giant possessed of bags of gold. So she climbs and climbs and eventually winds up in the room of "Giant" Jim, a prize fighter, but of the gentleman variety. "Giant" Jim has no bags of gold concealed about him but he has a heart of gold just the same, and it happens to a heart yearning for Baby Marie's mother, whom he loved before her marriage and whom he still loves.

How Baby Marie brings about a reunion between her mother (now divorced from her worthless husband) and her new found friend, makes a story full of real entertainment values. The climax with Jim fighting in the ring in order to obtain money to save the little girl's life by an operaton is of real thrill caliber and for intensity and dramatic force has never been equalled in other of this star's pictures.

Baby Marie is supported by little Sambo, the dark-skinned fellow who has done such great service playing with her in previous pictures. Probably some day Sambo will grow up to be a minstrel or a vaudeville comedian but he will never better his performances on the screen. He is a genuine delight to watch and the director of this production has discovered that he is almost as funny as Charley Chaplin when running pell-mell down the street. And Baby Marie herself contributes another one of those natural, refreshing performances that have made firm her present position in stardom.

THE STORY

Baby Marie's mother has faced poverty ever since being divorced from her worthless husband. For a long time she has searched for work unsuccessfully. One day "Giant" Jim, a prize fighter, sees her. Her face recalls memories of the past when at a barn-dance he severely trounced a drunken ruffian who had attacked her, only to have her reprimand him afterwards for his brutal conduct. She had later married the man who turned out a good-for-nothing. Jim sends Sambo, the janitor's son, to see where Marie and her mother live. For this Sambo gets a silver dollar and he invites Marie to dine with him on the proceeds. She gets sick from the feast and Jim's landlady goes to her aid. In this way she meets her mother and secures employment for her in a florist's shop.

Jim and Marie become fast friends when one day she climbs the fire-escape to his room, emulating Jack of Beanstalk fame, of whom she read the night before. He takes her to the beach and does many little things for her. And in this way Marie brings the old lovers together again. Jim promises not to fight any more and for this the girl agrees to marry him. But Marie has a severe accident. She falls from the fire escape and sustains injuries that only an expensive specialist can cure. And so Jim goes in the ring and wins his fight to get the money.

And the girl, while at first inclined to condemn Jim, soon sees that he broken his promise for a righteous cause. Soon afterwards, with Marie well again, the little family is established in a country house with Jim providing all the comforts of a real home.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—There are eight 11 x 14 photos provided with a title card for lobby display. These are generally light in character and well illustrate the type of production. There is also a 22 x 28 of scene and one the same size of star.

Slide and music plot also furnished at Pathe exchanges.

SUGGESTIONS

Pathe makes the suggestion that you have a special "kiddies' day" for this picture and this seems to be about the best way to exploit it. At least children's matinees could be given. With its child star and the old fairy tale on which the picture is based, it should be able to arouse a good deal of curiosity among the youngsters of the neighborhood. In your advertising you might make the "beanstalk" idea the central one. You should be able to dress up some unusual advertisements using this as a working basis.

Pictures Reviewed In Advance

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under this heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

Houdini in "The Master Mystery"

(B. A. Rolfe Serial in Fifteen Episodes)

THE first four episodes of Mr. Rolfe's serial, "The Master Mind," built about the marvelous capabilities of Houdini were given an advance showing last week. Not only are they highly absorbing episodes but, to our mind, will prove better than any other serial attraction for the exhibitor. Houdini's fame as an "escape artist" is known the world over and his marvelous feats have been well incorporated in the action of the story by the authors, Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue. He performs these stunts full before the camera and there are no "cuts" when to use such would give the spectator the impression that there was a fake.

Reeve and Logue are names well known to the exhibitor who has played other serials. They have followed the accepted plan of action with respect to "The Master Mystery" and have written a story with plenty of mystery, romance and melodramatic suspense. Who, on leaving the theatre after the fourth episode with the spectacle of Houdini thrown overboard in a packing case, will not come back and learn of his escape? And each of the other three episodes already shown end at some such critical point. The star's straight-jacket escape and a stunt in which he frees himself from a heavy diving suit under water are others that are brought into play.

The authors have also provided the mysterious character, present in the majority of serials. He is a giant automaton, supposedly carrying a human brain in a body of iron. It is this person who menaces the welfare of hero and heroine. Such a character is new to picturegoers, although they may possibly remember him from certain Sunday funny sections. As played by Floyd Buckley, who was recently seen as "The Hooded Terror," he too performs marvelous feats, such as battering down solid doors with a single stroke and flooring his opponents for the count with a single rap on the head. The automaton's function in the building of the story is to furnish the mystery and this he certainly succeeds in doing with a vengeance.

Margaret Marsh is seen as the heroine and a very attractive one she makes. Ruth Stonehouse, William Pike and Charles Graham are villains three, while others who appear are Jack Burns and Edna Britton. Burton King directed the production with the cooperative services of William Haddock.

And we cannot close without another word regarding Houdini. He is not a great actor to be sure, but his sincerity of purpose and his great powers of escape serve him as well as a ranking one hundred per cent histrionic ability. It affords one pleasure and excitement to watch him on the screen in the admirable vehicle prepared by Reeve and Logue.—Peter Milne.

"A Romance of the Air," with Lieut. Bert Hall

(Carl E. Carlton Prod.—7 reels. Directed by Franklin B. Coates)

UNLESS the ending of the world strife creates an aversion for war offerings among the picturegoers, this contribution ought to please fairly well. It is a strong melodrama, in which some of the situations are very improbable. For instance, to quote one or two of them, it is incredible that a German woman spy should land in French territory and roam about unhindered without the keen eye of the French intelligence system discovering her real identity, when we well know that nothing can escape its searching eye. Also, that a German spy should masquerade as an American correspondent and get by with it, thus obtaining the freedom of the battlefields, will tax heavily our credulity. But, as the story holds the interest well, due to a novel situation introduced—that of the hero's escape from Germany on a German aeroplane, having previously exchanged identities with the German aviator he had downed—ought to prove a satisfactory entertainment.

The several dare-devil airplane stunts will also interest picturegoers, as they are re-enactments of the kind the hero used as a Lieutenant in the Lafayette Escadrille while fighting in France.

The heroine, Edith Day, a young Minneapolis girl, handles her role very well. The supporting cast includes Stuart Holmes, Herbert Standing and Florence Billings.

"Fan Fan"—Fox

(Five Reel Story with Child Players)

THE chief asset of this contribution is artistry. As a rule, in portraying Chinese atmosphere, most of the directors have shown great aptitude towards this end, especially when climate and scenery such as California is blessed with are placed at their disposal.

There is little heart interest in the offering.

The plot of the story resembles greatly that of the opera "Mikado." In fact, some of the situations in it are almost identical. For instance, the hero's attempt to hang himself on a tree by a rope; the appointment by the Emperor of the villian as a chief executioner; the Emperor's decision to have him executed for his failure to find someone to behead; his pardon, at the last minute, for consenting to marry the Emperor's ugly daughter.

Barring the role of the Emperor, all other chief parts are played by juveniles.

This picture will hardly have universal appeal. Length, 5 reels. —P. S. Harrison.

"Little Women"

(Brady—6 reels. State Rights. Directed by Harry Knoles)

FROM a production angle, "Little Women" may be classed as "Just good." It will satisfy picture-goers, but not exult them, because, first, the continuity is a little faulty, as an attempt has been made to tell too much of the book in the short length of six reels; secondly, the heart interest, which is so abundant in the book, occurs only spottily in the picture; and lastly, the plot is slow, being so constructed as to depend in a great measure on the subtitles for its unfolding. Whatever entertaining features it possesses, then, are derived mainly from the comedy element in the cleverly written subtitles, and in a smaller measure from the human element in those situations which it possesses.

But the chief value of this production to you lies in the fact that it is based on the book by Louisa M. Alcott, one of the first women in America to gain recognition and fame as a writer. This author has written several books mostly around children, because she understood their nature so well; but, owing to the human interest of her works they appeal to grown-ups as much as to younger minds. Little Women, however, is considered as the best of them all by a large circle of adults and younger minds. It is a classic of American literature.

As a rule, pictures based on a book-story please those who are familiar with the book more than those who are not, for the reason that it fascinates the human mind to watch the characters, whom it has visualized and adored, assume human form; also to recognize localities it has formed definite and cherished pictures of. This fact naturally adds to the value of such productions.

This attraction will appeal chiefly to the literary element.—P. S. Harrison.

"The Sheriff," with Roscoe Arbuckle

(Arbuckle-Paramount, Directed by Arbuckle)

THIS picture proves that, no matter how old situations may be, if handled intelligently, taking in consideration the gradual, although unconscious development of taste, they can always be depended upon to make an entertaining picture.

"The Sheriff" is a far better attraction than anything contributed by Mr. Arbuckle on the Paramount program. For one thing, it is free from vulgarity and sloppiness. The classic kick shines with its absence. For another, comedy though it is, the situations have been developed logically, producing maximum fun out of minimum action. Every move in it counts.

The hero of the story is a sheriff, who, having often seen Douglas Fairbanks in pictures saving the heroine at the risk of his life, aspires to emulate him. At last his opportunity comes when the village schoolma'am is abducted by "Bad men."

The little colored boy of the cast is comical. But the dog may be justly classed as a star in his own rights. His entry into the lonely cabin by digging below the wall, in order to save the heroine, is a feat that will win sympathy and a good round of applause.

This offering should appeal to all. Length, 2 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

NOV. 16, 1918 NEWS MORE NEWS

Billy Hart's Home.

Bright and fair—sleeping under blankets the year round.

Charley Chaplin made several scenes for another comedy this week.

Seven weeks have passed and no new rumor concerning H. C. Davis has been heard.

Bill Duncan is home from gay New York, and went to work the day he arrived back.

Lee Moran has been heard from. Not that he has disappeared or anything, but in these days of unasked for vacations, it is easy to lose track of old acquaintances.

In these days of farmerettes, etc., Brunton studio P. A. Chapman has created the word "cowpuncherettes" meaning, HOOKUM presumes, the female of the species which punch cows.

A. Lehr, who has the right to add vice-president and general manager of Goldwyn Film Corporation to his name, has come to our town to live among the flowers and sunshine.

It is now claimed the phrase "the surface has not been scratched" is obsolete. In fact, some believe the closing of theatres has not only scratched the surface of the industry, but caved it in.

Another board was put on the buildings for the new Tom Ince studios at Culver City this week, and the producer expects everything will be in readiness for occupancy of the new plant in thirty days.

Jack Kerrigan believes in cycles of three doctrine. Three years ago he killed Jack Richardson, and Richardson liked it so well he waited three years to come back for another killing. The make-believe murder was committed right in Hollywood.

It requires five languages and a lingo to produce the Matzene subject at the Brunton studios. In the cast are French, Russian and Italian. English is the fourth language, and studio slang makes the fifth. Director David Hartford expects to be some linguist by the time the subject is filmed.

K. McGaffey, P. A. of F. P.-L. Corporation, and greater part of the family, Elizabeth Brock McGaffey, librarian of said corporation studio, have deserted our town for a period of ten days which they will spend at Idyllwild. Just why a place of this name was selected is not known, it being suggested that either the first or the last half of the town's name might have had some effect upon the Irishman.

The impossible has happened. The Goldwyn Company made an announcement recently on November 1 they would take possession of the Triangle studios on lease, and the managers of the company arrived a day ahead of time, and a week passed before arrangements were made to take down that gigantic flickering electric sign on the top of the highest Culver City studio building which spells out "Triangle Films."

Flu masks are said to be very inconvenient for the players as well as detrimental to the make-ups, but in these days of the Flu our set is condescending like little heroes and heroettes to many unpopular things. Wearing a Flu mask all the time one is at the studio and not appearing in scenes, does not in any way improve the temperament which many of the film colony are said to possess, but all have sacrificing dispositions.

Volumes could be written about the wonderful experience of Sessue Hayakawa, Al and Charles Christie, Mason Hopper, George Beban, Scott Sidney, Dal Clawson and others, who went to Elizabeth Lake last week to bag all the ducks. Statistics show that seven birds were secured by the firing of 150 shells. Scott Sidney lost his new gun, and there is a wild rumor that the party found a moonshiner's cabin where hard cider was served. Beban was appointed guide of the party. A pleasant time was had by all.

WHY THEY TURN BACKWARDS

After delving into the realm of drama, melodrama, tragedy and what not, HOOKUM's entire staff this week sought an answer to the eternal question, "why do wheels turn backward in motion pictures?" And of the scores that were interviewed, no one gave as concise and understandable answer as Henry Lehrman, general manager of Sunshine Comedies. From the answer one can tell that the surface has been more than scratched. Mr. Lehrman has gone to the scientific byways and made a thorough research of the annals of experimental work of the fillums.

"The wheels turning backward," Mr. Lehrman said, "symbolizes to the exhibitors that the growing need of today is longer runs, and therefore the turnings of the wheels backward should indicate to them the advantage of re-booking films that are worth while."

HOOKUM has therefore found another man who is in hearty sympathy with the doctrine of Motion Picture News editorials—"Fewer Pictures, Better Pictures, Longer Runs."

Fond du Lac Theatres Reopen November 4 to Business Below Satisfactory

THE Fond du Lac Board of Health lifted the ban on motion picture houses Monday, November 4, after it had been in force just 24 days and after it had cost the various managers from $500 to $1,500 each. However, the managers accepted their loss in good part and considered it one of their contributions to the community's welfare. It was hoped that the ban might be lifted in time for the Saturday night and Sunday shows, which are invariably good business bringers, but the Board of Health had no discretion in the matter. The State Board of Health early in the week had issued an order to the effect that on and after Monday, November 4, it was optional with the local boards of health whether the ban should stay on or be lifted. While Fond du Lac had not suffered seriously from the "flu," it was necessary for the ban to stay on here till Monday as well as elsewhere in the state. At Oshkosh and Green Bay, where the "flu" had been more serious, the boards of health decided on Monday that the ban should be continued for another week.

The managers of the Fond du Lac theatres had hoped that the lifting of the ban would be a signal for a rush of business. In this they were disappointed, doubtless because there was still a feeling of anxiety on the part of the public. Monday night's business was light, but Tuesday showed some gains.

The theatre which was hit hardest by the ban was the Henry Boyle, which had a large booking of high-priced pictures, all of which were expected to poll a heavy business. It is Manager Vollert's policy to run his heaviest programs in the month of October, and in keeping with this policy had made unusually strong bookings. He estimates his loss on the Henry Boyle and the Idea at $1,500 each for the twenty-four days that the theatres were dark.

The fact that all the Fond du Lac theatres were booked up full for the entire three weeks made the burden just that much heavier.

The season was most unfortunate for the closing of the moving picture houses. October is Wisconsin's one best month of the year. And this year the weather man was positively on his best behavior. Every manager had planned on October as the big money-maker to help him tide over the winter months when the weather is inclement and the moving picture fan is loth to venture out. Every house had a big program for the entire month and the pictures paid for—each manager has his eyes glued on a deficit today instead of the plump surplus he had anticipated.

At that the managers of the moving picture houses gave the city health authorities such splendid co-operation that they were complimented on it the day the ban was lifted. What was more, they were vested with police authority and given instructions to bar from their houses all persons believed to be afflicted with influenza or even a cold. A sneeze, it was understood, meant the ejectment of the sneezer. And the managers used their authority. Signs weer posted and warnings thrown on the screen—persons suffering from influenza or even colds were thus advised they were not desired and must leave the audience or suffer the embarrassment of being asked to leave. Few were asked to leave. The afflicted ones all took the hint.

Dubuque Rejoices as Picture Theatres Reopen to the Public

THE reopening of Dubuque theatres on Sunday, November 3, was royally welcomed. Since October 13, Dubuque had been under a rigid quarantine, and joy reigned throughout the city when City Attorney, Matt Czizek, announced on Wednesday, October 30, that theatres would open the coming Sunday, providing that every building had been thoroughly fumigated and disinfected under the supervision of the Board of Health and capable druggists.

During the last week of the quarantine manager Rosenthal, of the Majestic, had the entire interior of his theatre redecorated, and it is now one of the handsomest and most sanitary theatres in Iowa. On Wednesday afternoon the fumigation of the theatre began and was followed by a thorough cleaning and airing. "There can't be any germs in the Majestic unless they are buried in the concrete floor," Mr. Rosenthal said Saturday night. "If ever a theatre was properly cleaned and fumigated, I'll say it's the Majestic. I don't see how there could be a more sanitary building."

J. E. Boyle, of the Dreamland, decided that since he couldn't make money during the quarantine, he would spend some, so he had his theatre painted and redecorated both inside and outside. The Dreamland was always a good looking picture house, and with these new improvements, it would be harder to find a more attractive playhouse.

Harry Wilbur put up his winter lobby and had his theatre building painted. The princess, Grand and Family theatres were all disinfected and slight improvements were made so that all of them were prepared for big business on the opening day.

Nor were they disappointed for on Sunday every theatre has a splendid day, with the Dreamland and Princess leading with the biggest crowds, as well they might, for the Princess put on "Viviette," with fascinating Vivian Martin, while the Dreamland had that very popular male star, George George Walsh, in "On the Jump."

Katterjohn Declares Producing Methods Must Change

COMMENTING on present day standards of motion picture production and their effect on the welfare of the individual exhibitor, Monte M. Katterjohn, head of the newly organized producing organization, Katterjohn Films, said:

"There must be a radical change in production methods," says Mr. Katterjohn. "It is a self-evident fact which has long been recognized, but one to which producers have persisted in closing their eyes. Inasmuch as present methods have returned a good profit to the producer, it has been considered advisable to let well enough alone, and the exhibitor is the one who has felt the effect of this mistaken policy.

"It is an axiom that the success or failure of every film production is dependent upon the story of the picture. Exhibitors are sadly aware of the disastrous effect on box office receipts when the item of story is placed subservient to the mere name value of the star. Even the greatest luminaries of the screen begin to lose their drawing power when the stories with which they are supplied show evidence of a lowered standard. The exhibitor, more than anyone else, is familiar with this condition, and will be able to name various stars whose drawing power has been lessened solely by the type of stories in which they have been presented.

"The remedy for this unfavorable state of affairs lies in a decision to create stories rather than to simply manufacture them—to recognize the story as the basis of any picture's entertainment value, and to insist that before production is undertaken on any story, it shall be established definitely that the material is worthy of filming. Let the producer set his standard higher than something which will merely 'get by.'"

Affiliated Distributors Corporation Entertain

A MOST enjoyable exhibition luncheon was given at the Hotel Sherman, Wednesday, November 6, at which time about one hundred exhibitors were entertained by the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, with a showing of "Lafayette, We Come," at the conclusion of which an elaborate luncheon was served in the Crystal Room. Everything was handled to a nicety, an orchestra played the music of the picture which coupled with the stirring scenes of the production brought round after round of applause from all the managers present.

The consensus of opinion is that "Lafayette, We Come" will prove a strong box office attraction.

Ford Educational Weekly Shows First Pictures of Ford Eagle

AMONG the forthcoming releases of the Ford Educational Weekly will be a series of two reels, showing the complete construction of the Ford Eagle and all intimate phases of its manufacture. These series have the approval of the Committee on Public Information and are authorized by the United States Navy. The Eagle is recognized as a nemesis of the submarine and will do much towards eradicating that German atrocity. You are conducted through the immense plant which is turning out these boats at the rate of one each day and the unique features of its launching, etc., are vividly depicted. These are the first moving pictures to be shown and are eagerly awaited by the American public, whose curiosity has been aroused by the numerous newspaper accounts of the boat.

The Greiver Distributing Corporation, through its twenty-two exchanges handling the Ford Educational Weekly, are now prepared to reinstate all territories as soon as the quarantine is lifted.

Jones, Linick and Schaefer Unveil Bronze Tablet to Heroes

TWENTY-EIGHT stars decorate the Jones, Linick and Schaefer service flag in Chicago, and in honor of these twenty-eight men serving the Government of the United States Messrs. Jones, Linick and Schaefer have had cast a magnificent bronze honor roll with the inscription, "In honor of the employes of our organization who have enlisted for naval or military service in the worlds' war."

All twenty-eight names were engraved in bronze and the tablet will be placed in the Orpheum theatre, on State street and Monroe, for the gaze of the public.

Carry On—and On

Is Your morale weakening? No, we thought not.

When they tell you the industry is in a bad way—carry on. Being "Up Against It" is merely the signal to come back stronger than ever.

They Say in Chicago That—

F. O. PETERS, who for a number of years has been in the film business with the General Film Co. as a cashier and afterwards as salesman for Fox in Minneapolis; Vitagraph, Detroit, Michigan, and Universal, Minneapolis, has just resigned the last-named position to go into government. Mr. Peters is to be made assistant to the manager of the Ordinance Department, Chicago district, and will be located at the Wisconsin Gun Company Plant, Milwaukee, Wis. The one thing that seems to be worrying him is, that he will not get his MOTION PICTURE NEWS as regularly as in the past.

WM. S. HART returned to the Coast from Chicago after failing on account of atmospheric conditions to "shoot" as many scenes as they had expected to get for his new picture.

HAROLD O'BRIEN, formerly of Illinois theatre, LaGrange, Ill., sailed for France last week. He was in Chicago making his farewell rounds.

JOE LYON, until recently city salesman for the Sherry Service, is now booker at the General Film Chicago office.

R. C. SEERY loaned the Great Lakes Naval Training Station a print of Charles Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms." Twenty thousand jackies expressed their gratitude.

MR. C. SANFORD HARRISON, of the Bear State Film Co., reports that the bookings in the state of Illinois for the "Vigilantes" going through the Unity Photoplay Co., of which organization Frank Zambreno is the head, exceeds their fondest expectations. The contracts handed to Mr. Harrison on Thursday, November 7, exceeded seventy-five, which had been made in the past week.

BILLIE WEISS, formerly of the Central Film Company, Chicago, has been transferred from Camp Grant to Camp Logan and wants to hear from his friends. His address is Camp Logan, Texas, 6th Development Battalion.

NORMAN SAMISH, of Clinton, Iowa, in Chicago recently looking over his bookings, reports that he has disposed of his theatre at Clinton, Iowa, to Hal Kelly from Nebraska.

S. KEELY, who is doing special field work for the Central Film Co., reports his flivver ditched for three hours on account of bad roads in Illinois.

ALBERT KIMMEL and C. W. Leist have resigned from the Paramount forces. Seven other employes also left. They claim as their reason that when the local managership was changed a new crew was brought along and that they "quit while the quitting was good."

DECKED out in their new khaki suits and having joined the Red Cross Motor Transport Service, M. L. Sparr, manager of the Village theatre, Wilmette, Ill., and M. G. Watkins, vice-president of Reel Fellows Club, were around town bidding their friends good-bye.

SAMMY GREENBAUM, of the Garden Family and Lyric theatres of Davenport, Iowa, has just recovered from the influenza and reports that the Iowa houses are still closed.

MAX LEVY, of the Metro Chicago office, says that business is getting down to a semblance of normal and that he has only one kick, namely, that his new private office has three doors in it, which makes it the half way stop of everyone in the organization.

HARRY WILLARD, manager of the Fox Chicago office, claims that his office is doing the banner business of the Chicago exchanges.

THE GRIEVER DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION has opened its executive offices, suite 909 Mallers Bldg., Chicago. This company is nationally distributing the Ford Educational Weekly through its twenty-two agencies.

A. C. FOX, formerly of the Central Film Company, has purchased two fast boats and is now engaged in a packet express business between Tampico, Mexico, and New Orleans, La. Mr. Fox recently married the lady of his choice on board of one of the boats en route to New Orleans. The ceremony was performed at Havana, Illinois, last Tuesday.

J. F. BUCKLY, manager of the Varsity theatre, has just lost his daughter with Spanish influenza.

LIEUTENANT ALBERT E. GUNDELACH has been killed in France. Prior to his entry into service he was connected with the DeVry Corporation, Chicago. His death came as a shock to many friends and admirers.

CARL LAEMMLE has a reputation in Chicago of being some little traveler. He bounces into Chicago on his way to New York from the Coast, and bounces back again in less time than it would take an ordinary man to catch his breath. The answer to this would seem to be that there is "something doing."

SID GOLDMAN, manager of the Jewel Chicago office, is a happy man—why—"The Yellow Dog" has gone over big at the Ziegfeld theatre.

C. W. BUNN reports that S. Bestar, formerly sales representative of the United Picture Theatres of America, has been promoted to the managership of their Omaha office.

CRESS SMITH, of the Chicago Metro office, has just closed several of the largest contracts ever made by that office for the forthcoming special production of Nazimova, "Eye for Eye."

PRACTICALLY every first-run house in the large cities of the United States have closed contracts with the United Picture Theatres of America.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

HOPES ran high with Springfield, Ill., theatre managers that they would be allowed to reopen the week of Nov. 6, but everything was dashed to pieces following a meeting of the Influenza-Pneumonia Commission. The Commission decided that it would be unwise to allow theatres to open, and after voting to hold another meeting later in the week, adjourned, leaving the theatre boys very much in the "dumps."

THE theatre owners and managers have been working day and night to persuade the Commission to allow them to open. At the suggestion of Logan Hay, one of the most influential men in this city, they went out and secured a list of influenza cases from sixty-six doctors. These cases were for the week ending today. In every instance the physician reported a decrease in the number of new cases, and some had not a single case to report. Armed with this evidence the theatre men went to the meeting of the Commission, but they were excluded from the room. Evidently the work done by the managers and owners had no weight, for it was barely gone into.

THIS city has been badly mixed up on the whole proposition. Dr. Campbell, superintendent of health, issued an edict allowing the churches to open on Sunday, November 3. When the theatre men heard of the order, they demanded that they be given the same right to open as any other public meeting place. Then the Influenza-Pneumonia Commission got busy and wanted to know what right Dr. Campbell had to say anyone could open. So a meeting was called, and Dr. Campbell was given a grilling, and admitted that he had exceeded his right to issue the order. But the Commission allowed it to go through, rather than cause confusion by rescinding it again.

THE theatre men take the stand that if churches and schools are allowed to be open, they have the same privilege. The public schools are still closed, but the business colleges have reopened, under medical supervision. The whole thing seems to be badly "balled up," and while there are but few cases of the disease in the city at this time, the Commission is unalterably opposed to the opening of the theatres.

THE nearest amusement to Springfield at this writing (Nov. 2) is at Bloomington, sixty miles away. Bloomington theatres opened on Monday, November 4, after being closed four weeks. They were to open on Friday, November 1, and advertised in the papers that they would. Springfield unwittingly caused them to be closed, for the local theatre men showed the ads to the local health board, and they wired Dr. St. Clair Drake, who promptly put the brakes on again. Peoria and Decatur, and also St. Louis, are still dark, though Peoria made a desperate attempt to get open on Sunday, November 3.

AT this writing it does not seem possible that any Springfield theatre will be opened before Sunday, November 10. If not, the playhouses will then have been closed for four weeks. It is impossible to estimate the loss to which the theatres have been subjected, for this is the busiest time of the year, the weather being good, and everyone seeking amusement.

THE local papers have so far fought shy of agitating an opening, though all of them are anxious for the playhouses to be running. The advertising revenue from the local theatres runs into great sums every month.

THE least worried of all the managers in this city was Ed Kunz, of the Princess. Ed spent some of his time out in the woods, gunning for rabbits. Adolph Kunz, one of the owners of the playhouse, has entirely recovered from his recent attack of the "flu." He is the only one connected with the theatre in this city who has been attacked by the prevailing plague.

W. W. WATTS, owner of the Gaiety and Vaudette theatres, says he knows more about the influenza situation in this city than any doctor in town. Bill was one who hustled night and day on the now famous "66" stunt.

GEORGE RIORDAN, of the Majestic, has worn out two pairs of high-priced, heavy-soled shoes trying to find the man, woman, or men, who can give him information on who to see to find out when he can open the theatre he manages.

BEN ROVIN, of the Amuse-U is sighing because St. Louis is also closed, which forbids him visiting the river town and seeing his friends.

W. K. SINES, publicity man for the Princess, is around clad in a new fifty dollar topcoat, telling about the good old days when he had to write a fresh ad and notice for the papers every twenty-four hours. Says he hasn't touched his Remington since the fateful night three weeks ago, when Dr. Drake became famous for shutting up things.

THE news of Harold Lockwood's death hit the local fans hard. Lockwood was a great favorite here, and the best drawing star on the Metro program, in this city.

SPRINGFIELD does not know what to do with itself since the theatres have shut down. The auto owning crowd are all right, but the plain, every day chap is absolutely lost, and has slept himself into a state of discontent. Great will be the joy when the ban is removed.

Gathered in Green Bay

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS," one of the official war pictures released by the Committee on Public Information, was the attraction offered movie patrons here when the lid was lifted during the week of November 3 after amusements had been cut out due to the influenza epidemic. The picture was presented by the Green Bay Press-Gazette in the Grand theatre three days, November 4-5-6, and big crowds were attracted by it.

"ITALY'S FLAMING FRONT," official war film of the Italian government, will be the next picture in the patriotic series to be given by the newspaper. The dates are November 11-12-13.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA, the Jap star of the Paramount studios, was seen at the Orpheum theatre in "The City of Dim Faces," November 5-6.

ROSCOE ARBUCKLE and Mabel Normand played in "Fatty and Mabel Adrift" at the Royal theatre November 5. Roy Stewart, in "A Red Haired Cupid," was seen in the same program.

MME. OLGA PETROVA appeared at the Colonal theatre November 5 in "Tempered Steel," and pleased her audiences.

PAULINE FREDERICK was the attraction at the Orpheum theatre November 7-8-9-10 in the Paramount production, "Mrs. Dane's Defense."

BERT LYTELL and Barbara Castleton played in "Empty Pockets" at the Colonial theatre November 6.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE and Tom Moore co-starred in "The Lesson," a Selznick film, in the Grand theatre November 7-8-9-10, and their work gave satisfaction.

"THE KINGDOM OF YOUTH," a Goldwyn picture, featuring Madge Kennedy and Tom Moore, was presented in the Colonial theatre November 7-8. It pleased the audience very much, according to report.

EDITH ROBERTS was seen in "Beans" at the Royal theatre November 8-9.

"THE DOCTOR AND THE WOMAN," a Weber picture, in which Mildred Harris stars, was the attraction at the Royal theatre November 6-7. It was pronounced an excellent film by many in the audience.

AFTER the shutdown of motion picture houses for four weeks when the "flu" ban was ordered by the health department, movie fans turned out in numbers for the first pictures produced during the week of November 3. The health department restricted shows to two and one-half hours in the afternoon, and the same length of time in the evening for a short time.

Happenings Around Fond du Lac

THE Fourth Liberty Loan suffered in Fond du Lac County as a result of the "flu" ban which closed up the motion picture houses and cut off the audiences of the four-minute speakers.

THE motion picture houses carried half-page advertisements in the Fond du Lac daily newspapers the day the health ban was lifted.

THE HENRY BOYLE THEATRE celebrated the lifting of the health ban by starting the sensational picture "To Hell With the Kaiser" for a three-day's run beginning Wednesday, November 6.

THE ORPHEUM opened after the health ban was lifted with Norma Talmadge in "The Safety Curtain." On November 11, 12 and 13 the Orpheum presented Billy Burke in "Let's Get a Divorce." This will be followed on November 14, 15 and 16 with Wm. S. Hart in "Shark Monroe." On November 18, 19 and 20 the Orpheum will present Norma Talmadge in "The Only Way." As a special Thanksgiving week offering the Orpheum will present Charley Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" November 28, 29 and 30.

THE BIJOU THEATRE opened on Monday night with Mme. Petrova in "The Light Within." The Bijou, which has been catering to the wants of the public for war pictures, will present "Italy's Flaming Front" on November 21, 22 and 23. This will be followed on November 25 and 26 by the second official Government war picture, "America's Answer." During the first week in December Bijou patrons will have an opportunity to enjoy "The Romance of Tarzan," the sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes."

Will you send a package of home cheer to a lonely American boy in France?

HE doesn't want to come back home till his job is done—he doesn't mind the hardships and the danger—all he asks is that once in a while a "bit of cheer" be sent to him to ease his lonely vigils on the rim of "No Man's Land."

Tens of thousands of American Lads are today fighting our battles in France. Soon there will be millions. They will want letters from home—they will want "smokes" from home. Tobacco eases the shell strain. It comforts the wounded. It is a "first aid" to the surgeons and Red Cross nurses.

If you knew what comfort and pleasure and satisfaction the tobacco bought with your dollar or your five dollars (go as high as you like) gives to American boys in the trenches, you'd forget the money, or the little sacrifice, or anything else.

25c buys 45c worth of "smokes."

$1.00 buys a month's supply of tobacco

$5.00 buys enough to keep 5 men in tobacco for a month.

And remember: Every package of tobacco sent to our boys in France contains a return postcard, addressed to you, which he'll mail to you if he can possibly do so. That's a war souvenir worth having. Dig down—deep and quick!

"I wish you all possible success in your admirable effort to get our boys in France tobacco."

Reopening with Dubuque Exhibitors

"THE GREEN GOD" with Harry Morey, shown at the Grand on Sunday, November 3, was previously scheduled for October 13, but had to be postponed on account of the influenza quarantine. Meanwhile the picture had received much advertising, for its posters remained on the Grand's billboards during the time the city was quarantined, and seeing these posters every day made people anxious to see the picture. Accordingly they turned out in fine shape Sunday, giving the Grand a highly successful day.

THE PRINCESS put on "De Luxe Annie," with Norma Talmadge, for the Monday and Tuesday, November 4 and 5 program. This photoplay went big in the biggest sense of the word. Pictures on this order not only increase a theatre's patronage, but they gain for the exhibitor the good will of his patrons, and add to the popularity of the star. Miss Talmadge has had an unusually good assortment of vehicles—she is never the same in a picture, and it is this versatility that draws crowd after crowd to the theatre fortunate in securing one of her releases.

VIOLA DANA played at the Grand on Monday, November 4, in "Riders of the Night." This star is quite popular here and drew good houses both afternoon and evening.

"SERIAL DAY" was resumed at the Family theatre on Monday, November 4. "The House of Hate," with Antonio Moreno and Pearl White, and "The Lion's Claws," with Marie Walcamp, were the serials shown.

"THE NAULAHKA," adapted from Rudyard Kipling's famous classic, was shown at the Liberty theatre on Sunday, November 3. Antonio Moreno in the leading role was very favorably received.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG, the Select star, played at the Family theatre on Tuesday, November 5, in one of her 1917 successes, "The Foolish Virgin." Manager Yount had a very good night—in fact he has had excellent crowds since the reopening of his theatre.

THE STAR THEATRE at Decorah, Ia., reopened on Friday, November 1, with the showing of "The Birth of a Nation." Since the beginning of the quarantine the theatre had been aired and fumigated daily, so that on the opening night the manager was safe in announcing that people would run no danger in attending the shows. All people having a cough and a cold were requested not to come. During the quarantine the Star's entire program was rearranged. Such features as were found to be a bit weak were dropped out and replaced with the very newest big special features. For the next ninety days the Star has a great line-up of stars and pictures. The opening hour was also changed from eight to seven o'clock. Among the features scheduled for the coming week is "Whither Thou Goest," a Thomas Ince special production.

THE program at the Dreamland theatre at Galena has been entirely rearranged and the best possible features are being shown. They are the better pictures of the motion picture art—supreme in their stars, great in the stories and perfect in mounting and direction. The management of this theatre indeed realizes that patronage is won and maintained by showing pictures of quality and character. "Rich Man, Poor Man," with Marguerite Clark, was the Monday, November 4, feature. "Rimrock Jones," starring Wallace Reid, and "Lend Me Your Name," with Harold Lockwood, were also shown that week.

THE ORPHEUM THEATRE at Oelwein, Iowa, opened on Monday, Noveeber 4, after being closed three weeks on account of the ban. "The Garden of Allah," the ten-reel production of the East, was the feature shown. On Tuesday Charles Ray played in "His Own Home Town," and on Wednesday "One More American," with George Beban held the boards. A Harold Lloyd comedy was also shown.

In Madison Theatres

STATEMENTS from film men who make Madison their headquarters claim that the northern cities of the state have not been declared open. The flu epidemic was late in reaching the lumber and mining districts and is tardy in leaving. Central, southern and eastern are entirely open now and the photoplay houses have resumed their routine.

ALL records for every moving picture house in Madison was broken on the opening day which was simultaneous with the false declaration of suspended hostilities in Europe. When the report reached Madison at 2 o'clock in the afternoon citizens suspended work and the city took on a gala appearance. Until late in the afternoon the roisters were busy. The report bearing out the true news had little effect upon the capital city and crowds swarmed the streets until late in the evening. A huge mass meeting in the capital building brought thousands of people to the downtown district.

BOTH the New Strand and the Fuller playhouses had pictures of the war that tended to draw even a larger crowd than would have come otherwise. The Strand held 2,000 during one show. The Grand was packed to standing room all during the evening, while all other houses were filled to capacity.

IT was a false start, but did wonders in breaking any superstition the people might have held against public gatherings. Many comments were heard throughout the city upon the new ventilation in the theatres.

OF interest to the film men of Wisconsin are the activities of the Extension Department of the University of Wisconsin. Under Mr. Dudley, this department is furnishing film men with productions of great value which they can secure through no other source and which are gratis. One of the latest pictures which are handled through the regular exchanges in other states and which may be had by Wisconsin film men for the asking is "Our Bridge of Ships.". This picture has been in great demand. Booking may be had through the Extension Department.

The Extension Department, in addition to its educational films, has prepared a large number of community singing slides. The slides are so arranged that a song director is not necessary. When tried out in Madison theatres they have been found to be very successful.

IN many cities throughout the country moving picture managers have held "nut" matinees, when people brought in peach stones and pits of various fruits. It remained for Manager McWilliams of the Grand to better this plan by placing barrels in all parts of the city in which the pits could be dropped. Over one ton of pit stones have been collected in the city. One day last week one hotel deposited three bushels of prune stones alone. Manager McWilliams is on good terms with the manager of the hotel and doesn't want to crab their game by divulging his name.

MANAGER WHEELER, of the Downer in Milwaukee, is looking after the interests of Flossie Jones, who died last month in Waukesha. Mr. Wheeler has had wide experience throughout the state and is fully competent to handle the theatres in Waukesha.

THE FULLER played to capacity house at advanced prices when they showed Newman's wartime Europe Travel Talks.

MARY PICKFORD in "Johanna Enlists" was the picture shown at the New Strand on the day of the "peace hoax." Movie goers vote this one of the best pictures Mary Pickford has been cast in. Manager A. P. Desormeaux pulled an original stunt on that evening when his new canopy was decorated with red, white and blue electric light globes.

THE second official war picture, "America's Answer," was shown during the week of November 10 at the New Strand. This picture has been greeted with enthusiasm in all parts of the country.

THE Grand scored a scoop on the city when it showed Charlie Chaplin's second million dollar production, "Shoulder Arms." The picture shown on Saturday and Sunday drew big. Alice Joyce in "Everybody's Girl," an O. Henry story, pleased. Forbes Robertson is a big favorite in Madison and his showing in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" was no exception.

SOLDIERS in the S. A. T. cantonment in Madison, numbering close to 4,000, witness moving pictures every night through the courtesy of the Y. M. C. A. The pictures are shown directly after the study hour until taps and the boys enjoy them to the utmost. Besides the official war reviews, photoplays are shown, together with comedies. It is interesting to hear the expressions during the showing of the pictures. All of the soldiers comment upon the scenes on the screen out loud, so that there is bedlam reigning the greater part of the time.

In Spokane Theatres

THE American Film Company will pay big money for scenarios suitable for Mary Miles Minter, William Russell or Margarita Fisher, W. A. Coughlin, personal representative of President S. S. Hutchinson, said to a representative of the press in Spokane on a recent visit to that city.

"OUR company will pay from $1,000 to $25,000 for scenarios suitable for Mary Miles Minter, William Russell or Margarita Fisher. We want sweet, wholesome stories, free from anything morbid, for Miss Minter. As for Miss Fisher, we wish stories of light comedy drama, bubbling over with laughter. For Mr. Russell, he has forsaken the deep drama and now is giving the public comedy drama, full of romance and 'pep.'"

FRED STONE'S initial screen appearance in "The Goat" packed the Clemmer theatre at every show. Stone in "The Goat" heads a liberal program. "Smiling Billy" Mason and Eleanor Field appear in a Christie comedy, "Just Like Dad" and William Farnum is presented in the first Liberty loan "trailer" to be shown at the Clemmer.

NORMA TALMADGE in her latest Select offering, "The Safety Curtain" had a four-days' engagement at the Liberty.

JANE AND KATHERINE LEE in their patriotic photoplay, "Swat the Fly" had a three-days' engagement at the Class A.

MME. OLGA PETROVA was the stellar offering at the Majestic, being featured in "The Light Within," which is having its second run here.

"CHASE ME CHARLIE" is the Chaplinesque offering starring Charlie Chaplin, featured on the screen program at the Lyric. Alice Howell in "Hoot Toot" rounded out the program.

EUGENE H. ROTH, manager of the California theatre, recently returned from a trip to New York and immediately made arrangements for the first showing of "The Forbidden City," the much heralded initial production of Norma Talmadge in the Second Select Star Service. This will be given its premier at the California during the week beginning November 3.

ANOTHER important move of Mr. Roth soon after his return was the increasing of his orchestra from 21 to 31 instruments. This orchestra, under the leadership of Herman Heller, is said now to be the fourth largest in the United States, the three larger ones being located in New York.

THE COLUMBIA THEATRE at Phoenix has signed a contract with the Mutual exchange for all Hayakawa productions and also the Outing Chester series.

Bershon Signs Up Theatres for Smileage

DAVID BERSHON, Los Angeles branch manager of the Universal Film exchange, and chairman of the committee appointed by the Army and Navy Department on Training Camp Activities, to line up the theatres of Southern California on the new plan of having the theatres donate a part of their receipts on certain dates to be given over to the Smileage book fund this week, announced the names of the theatres signing the pledge up to the time when the theatres were ordered closed because of the influenza. The list shows seventy-two signatures, or 25 per cent of the theatres in Mr. Bershon's territory. He estimates that if the theatres had not been ordered closed he would by this time have secured signatures of 90 per cent of the theatre managers in this section.

Leonard Meyberg, national chairman of the new theatre plan for smileage book funds, was in Los Angeles this week and conferred with Mr. Bershon at length on the various phases of the Southern California campaign.

Girard Leaves Vaudeville to Direct Orchestra

SPOKANE is soon to have the pleasure of greeting Harry Girard, actor, singer, author, producer, composer and all-round musician, who comes as the new musical director at the Clemmer theatre. He was last seen here in his sketch, "The Wail of an Eskimo," at the Pantages in June and it was then that Drs. Clemmer and Lambach of the Clemmer, made arrangements for his return and appearance here under their management for a limited season. Girard says it is like a home-coming to him, he has played here so often and has so many real friends here.

As soon as the quarantine is lifted Mr. Girard will present recitals twice weekly at the Clemmer, at 12:30 noon on Sunday and 7 p. m. Wednesday.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

INFORMATION was received last Saturday by C. J. Marley, branch manager of the Triangle exchange, that the theatres in Nogales, Ariz., will be reopened the latter part of this week.

A LETTER from Charles Alden, owner and manager of the Dime theatre at Globe, Ariz., to the Triangle exchange this week announced that motion picture houses in Globe will be reopened November 6.

THE Los Angeles Triangle offices were closed all day last Monday out of respect to R. W. Lynch, vice-president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, who was buried that day at Asheville, N. C. Mr. Lynch died in San Francisco of influenza. All Triangle offices in the United States were closed last Monday, it was announced here.

JAMES W. EDRINGTON, manager of the Gaiety theatre at Santa Maria, was a visitor at the Vitagraph exchanges this week.

R. M. TAYLOR, owner and manager of the Garrick theatre at Pomona, spent a few days in Los Angeles last week.

H. D. NAUGLE, western division manager of Vitagraph, after a brief visit in San Francisco last week, left for Salt Lake and Denver. He is expected to return to his headquarters in Chicago before again visiting the Pacific coast.

THE Rex theatre at Gallup, N. M., is open again and it was provided with a show this week by the Vitagraph exchange, according to announcement by Branch Manager, W. H. Hepburn.

WILLIAM C. WHEELER, Vitagraph salesman attached to the San Francisco exchange, was in Los Angeles this week. He said he had been waiting for an opportunity to visit Los Angeles for several months.

THE George Kleine System removed its offices on Monday from the Knickerbocker building to the General Film offices at 730 South Hope street. Guy C. Gunderson will remain in charge as manager, and the booking system of the exchange will be maintained as heretofore, it is announced. However, the general business of the exchange will hereafter be conducted by the General Film organization. The affiliation with the General Exchange offices was made for economic reasons, it was announced.

ALL theatres in Needles, Cal., were opened last Saturday, according to information received at the General Film offices.

PAUL C. MOONEY, former division manager for the Middle Western states for William Fox exchanges, with headquarters at Cleveland, arrived in Los Angeles this week to become Pacific Coast district manager for Fox. His headquarters will be maintained in Los Angeles. His first announcement was that when all theatres are reopened in the United States the motion picture fans will be more enthusiastic about their favorite pastime than ever before.

A PRIVATE preview of "The Midnight Patrol," a Thomas H. Ince production, was given this week by B. E. Loper, branch manager of the Select exchange. Because of the ban on public gatherings, only a few friends of Mr. Loper's were present. Thurston Hall is the star in the filmplay.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Pacific Coast manager of United Pictures exchanges, returned to Los Angeles this week after a visit to the San Francisco and Seattle offices. He announces that United is working out a booking system that will mean a great saving to the exhibitor.

GEORGE J. EKRE, branch manager of the General Film exchange, received a letter this week from his brother, Arthur Ekre, who is a member of the American Field Artillery in France. "The Kaiser is talking his head off about peace," the letter says, "but we do not intend to quit until we have entered Germany. A German plane flew near us a few days ago and a bomb fell about fifteen feet from our tent. Aside from blowing us all over the adjacent landscape everything is all right. We are getting plenty of clothes and many good things to eat."

THE Community Motion Picture Bureau, affiliated with the Army and Navy Department Training Camp Activities committee, has established its Los Angeles branch in the building occupied by the M. & R. Features exchange under the general direction of George E. Withey, of San Francisco. A branch manager had not been named this week. The new exchange will devote its time to supplying films for the Liberty Theatres in the big cantonments, being operated as a part of the Army and Navy plan for entertainment of soldiers in the camps. It will also cooperate with the War Work Committee of the Y. M. C. A.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by Frank Duffy, special representative of Pathe exchange, and confirmed by G. R. Sirwell, branch manager of Hodkinson interests, that the W. H. Hodkinson productions will after November 25 be released by Pathe. Mr. Duffy left Los Angeles last week for San Francisco and Seattle on his return to New York, but he hurried back to Los Angeles to assist in completing the local end of the new deal for Pathe. Under this new arrangement the Hodkinson system will release pictures with the following stars: Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, Lillian Walker, Anita King, Kathleen Clifford and the Frank Powell productions starring House Peters. The First House Peters subject to be released will be "The Forfeit," the first of eight features in which Peters will be starred by Frank Powell.

WEST COAST—2 What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing M. H. KUHN, formerly chief salesman of the Triangle exchange in Los Angeles, now acting branch manager of the Salt Lake City exchange, was a visitor in Los Angeles this week. He said that before the theatres were closed in Utah that all exhibitors in his territory were doing better business than at any time in the history of the industry. He announced that the State Board of Health of Utah is watching the influenza situation very closely, and that all theatres will be opened in the state as soon as possible.

THE new vault of the M. & R. exchange, begun several weeks ago, has been finished, and Manager H. W. Stubbins spent much of the time this week in removing all films to the nearby installed vault.

In Seattle Film Circles

MANAGER Joseph Muller, of the Palace Hip, has taken advantage of the "Flu Ban" by altering and rehauling his theatre. He has made it as sanitary as possible. One of the features of the alterations is the placing on the floors of a material that is noiseless when walked on, but has about the consistency of linoleum. Carpets have been removed and this put in its place. The new covering is to be washed each day and no dust allowed to lodge.

"SMILING" Bill Drummond, Northwest representative of the Geo. Kleine System, has moved his office from 2012 Third Ave. across the street, where the offices of the General Film Company are also located.

H. G. ROSEBAUM, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company's productions for the Northwest, has returned from a tour around a section of the Northwest, which includes Spokane, Wash., and Portland, Ore.

MANAGER Luken, of the Pathe Film Co., has returned to his desk at Seattle, after a month's trip to New York. Since the Pathe-Hearst Service has been changed to the Pathe Service, Mr. Luken has made complete new contracts with his customers.

THE Famous "Wallace on the Wurlitzer," who attracts crowds to the Liberty, has recently composed a very popular song, together with Harold Weeks, a Seattle song writer. It is called "Hindustan." A phonograph concern has already placed it in film form.

What the Studios Are Doing

BILLY GARWOOD writes from San Francisco, where he is appearing in Crane Wilbur's new stage production, "The Common Cause," that the play looks like a big winner to him and he is delighted with the role he is to portray. Garwood was a stage leading man long before he went into pictures, and was just as popular behind the footlights as he was on the screen.

CLAIRE DU BREY has worked harder on her present feature at the Diando studios than she ever has on any other film since she began her motion picture career. Claire finished work on her five-reel picture in two weeks and worked ten nights during that time as well as in daylight. Many a night she didn't get a chance to go home at all and stole what forty winks she could in her dressing room, as time was too precious to spend in traveling home and back.

WILL M. RITCHEY'S new articles on photoplay writing are gradually being published all over Europe, as well as the United States, wherever motion pictures are shown. Two papers in Australia are publishing his series of talks, as well as one in England and Japan. Ritchey does not write them for pay, but merely to encourage new writers and point out to them the mistakes to avoid. Mr. Ritchey, who is with the Famous Players-Lasky forces, declares that good material for photoplays is sadly lacking and the demand is greater now than ever before.

HERBERT HEYES completed his feature with Helen Keller, the famous deaf and blind woman, at the Brunton studios this week, much to his regret. Heyes believes Miss Keller to be the most remarkable person he has even known or heard of and enjoyed every moment of his engagement with her.

GEORGE HOLT is seriously considering giving up acting in favor of directing. Holt, who is one of the best known screen villains, has always had a strong desire to forsake his acting for directing, and this week was approached with an offer to produce, and he is thinking strongly of doing so. He has been in the game for a number of years and understands it thoroughly, and there is no reason why George Holt, director, shouldn't become as well known as George Holt, actor.

THOMAS DIXON'S latest photoplay spectacle, "The One Woman," is soon to be released. It is already being largely advertised and exploited and will soon be on view in the leading theatres. Adda Gleason, whose Ramona in the play of that name will long be remembered, plays the title role in the new Dixon production and her work is said to surpass any of her previous successes.

THERE have been many rumors going the rounds that Clara Horton had left the Triangle, due to the fact that she was playing in a picture for another concern. Clara states emphatically that she was merely loaned by the Triangle for one picture and has a long-time contract with that concern.

LEATRICE JOY received two telegrams last week at the Strand theatre in San Diego, where she was playing in stock, to come to Los Angeles for screen engagements. Leatrice replied that she is perfectly contented where she is and doesn't intend to return to the films until she has completed her contract at the theatre, her contract still having a little while to run.

THE Helen Keller Company, which has been working for almost three months at the Brunton studios, will within the next week make the final scenes for the twelve-reel film at present titled "Deliverance." The picture will show the life of Helen Keller. Managers of the company plan to complete the editing in the east and the company will leave for New York within the next ten days. At present it is expected the premier will be given the latter part of February.

ALBERT SHELBY DeVINO, Metro scenario writer, returned Monday from New York, and he is at work on some new stories that will be produced at a latter date when the studios are reopened, it is announced.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

THE M. & R. exchange will distribute in Southern California territory "The Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit, according to announcement this week by Branch Manager Stubbins. The exchange will also handle Hall Caine's "Deemster," with Derwent Hall Caine as the star, and the two-reeler, "Who's Afraid of the Hun?" Derwent Hall Caine is now touring the Orpheum circuit.

MORE than 150 prints of feature subjects, some old and some not so old, but all without proper titles, were thoroughly inspected last week at the Triangle exchange, and these subjects will be ready for showing when the closing ban is lifted from the theatres in this territory, according to announcement by Branch Manager C. J. Marley. A number of new titles were written and then filmed at the Triangle studios at Culver City.

WILLIAM DESMOND'S last production with the Triangle Company, "The Pretender," has been booked by the Victory theatres on Broadway for opening week when that house is again allowed to open its doors.

THE Triangle exchange this week received numerous inquiries from exhibitors relative to bookings of Hart, Fairbanks, Talmadge and Keenan reissues, with the result that nearly 75 per cent. of the Arizona territory has signed for these subjects, Branch Manager Marley announced. Mr. Marley believes the sudden demand for these subjects is explained in the fact that exhibitors are planning to fill in their programs with subjects they were unable to book heretofore because of a full program of new pictures.

H. D. NAUGLE, western division manager of the Vitagraph Company, left Los Angeles Saturday for a visit to San Francisco, Seattle, Tacoma and Salt Lake City. He expects to return to Chicago within the next three weeks, he announced.

W. B. WALKER, owner of the Liberty theatre at Needles, Cal., was a visitor to film row last week.

J. W. EDRINGTON, owner of the Gaiety and Grand theatres at Santa Maria, Cal., was a Los Angeles visitor this week. He predicted big business in Santa Maria when the influenza closing ban is lifted.

C. J. MARLEY, branch manager of the Triangle exchange, went duck hunting last week, but he returned without any ducks. He then embarked on a fishing trip, coming back with even less luck in this adventure.

C. B. GARRISON, one of the New York representatives of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, will take up the Triangle Distributing Corporation's work, succeeding Vice-President R. W. Lynch, who died last week in San Francisco. This information was made known here this week by C. J. Marley, branch manager of the Triangle exchange. Mr. Marley, incidentally, will be in charge of this work until Mr. Garrison arrives. The death of Mr. Lynch cast much gloom over film row in Los Angeles.

LOUIS W. THOMPSON, despite the fact that a majority of theatres in Arizona were reported closed this week, left Los Angeles for that territory to distribute a few Kleine contracts.

A FEW of the towns in Southern California that were still with open theatres early this week, and were being served by the Los Angeles exchanges, were Pomona, Santa Ana, Holtville, Taft, Maricopa, Ventura and Santa Maria.

H. D. NAUGLE, Western division manager of the Vitagraph Company, plans to leave for Chicago next week. His stay on the Pacific Coast has been extended about two weeks because of the inactivity of Vitagraph exchanges in his territory due to the prevalence of influenza.

H. F. MOORE, assistant manager of the George Kleine System, returned to San Francisco this week after spending a week at the Los Angeles office.

M. J. COHEN, manager of the George Kleine System, was in town for a day this week. Mr. Cohen says that just at present he is commuting between Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle. He expects to leave for the latter city immediately, but will only spend a few days there before he rushes South again. All this activity is in connection with the great war pictures he is promoting.

M. J. COHEN, manager of the George Kleine System, has just received a memorial of "Thanks and Appreciation" from the officers and enlisted men of the U. S. Marine Corps at Mare Island, in recognition of the services he rendered in helping the marine band to secure new instruments, and also for helping secure instruments for the Navy and Marine Scouts of San Francisco, of which organization he has been officially appointed major. Mr. Cohen has had the memorial framed and will hang it in his office beside his framed commission as major of the Scouts.

C. H. DOUGLAS, manager of the Elite theatre, Merced, paid a short visit to San Francisco this week.

FRED FINK, JR., manager of Fink's theatre, Gridley, Cal., is now at Berkeley, attending the aviation school at the University of California.

In and Around Denver

AFTER practically five weeks' suspension on account of the influenza epidemic, Denver theatres were given permission to open for business on Monday, November 11. There is considerable improvement in the situation in Denver and in Boulder, which is also permitted to open on the same date and under the same restrictions that accompany the order lifting the ban in Denver. The conditions in other sections of the state do not yet warrant rescinding of the closing order. The official order is as follows: Motion picture shows, theatres and schools were allowed to open at 7 o'clock Monday morning, November 11, upon permission from the department of health and under certain restrictions which that department may see fit to make.

THE influenza epidemic has claimed Mrs. H. D. Lorenzon, wife of the owner of the Star theatre at Silverton, who died Tuesday, November 5. She is survived by her husband and two minor children.

R. H. McCLUSKEY, who recently resigned a road position out of Denver for Mutual to take over the management of the Strand theatre at Hoisington, Kansas, was stricken with influenza upon his arrival there. His condition is reported as much improved and he will recover.

E. B. REMINGTON has resigned as road salesman for Mutual to engage in other lines.

MRS. A. N. ASHBURN, manager of the Princess theatre at Sterling, has returned home following a week's vacation in Denver.

DENVER Pathe headquarters is being remodeled to make room for the local force of the American Film Company, Inc., and the W. W. Hodkinson service. Hodkinson transfers from General in this territory November 25.

CHARLES R. GILMORE, local manager for the United Picture Theatres of America, has left for Deadwood and Lead, where he will meet the members of the Black Hills Exhibitors' League.

G. W. WHITNEY has resigned his position as local manager of the General Film Company.

What Butte Is Doing

THREE Montana towns, after shutdowns of about a month, have permitted theatres to reopen. They are Plentywood and Scobie, in Sheridan county, and Denton, located near Lewistown. In these three towns the disease has run its course and it is thought that everyone liable to get the "flu" in those places has had it.

IN Butte, and in fact throughout the state, it is believed that the peak has passed. When conditions show a tendency toward permanent betterment it is thought the health boards will permit the reopening of theatres. The prolonged shutdown is proving a heavy burden on the showman.

THE show houses continue to "doll up" and there is nothing else to do. All the managers are figuring that the public will be "show hungry" and so they are planning on offering the best programs possible, so as to reap their share of the promised harvest.

MERLE DAVIS, the new manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, and prominent Montana cartoonist, this week took up his new duties. He will have his office at the Broadway theatre. The assistant general manager, Marshal Taylor, will have his office at the Ansonia.

MANAGER Ralph Ruffner, of the Rialto, is viewing the situation in a spirit of reconcillation and he is injecting a little mirth by displaying the following rhyme on a placard in the theatre lobby:

When the Spanish flu,
Goes up the flue,
Then I'll come back to you.

THE closing picture at the Rialto, by a strange coincidence, was "Till I Come Back to You."

GEORGE BOURKE, of the Universal exchange, is paying a visit to Bozeman, Livingston, Billings, Miles City and other Yellowstone valley towns. He will also visit Sheridan, Wyo. While the houses are all closed he is making the trip to get acquainted with the exhibitors, and to cheer them along.

What the Studios Are Doing

D. W. GRIFFITH has announced a number of people who will be cast in the big propaganda picture which is now in the second week of production, and which is yet unnamed. They are Robert Harron, Richard Barthelmess, Carol Demster, Clare Seymour, Adolph Lestina, George Fawcett, Kate Bruce and Syn de Conde. The latter will play the part of the villain. This latest Griffith production is a story dealing with the great national draft, and among the scenes will be pictures taken in the various cantonments.

A FEATURE of D. W. Griffith's new propaganda production is the fact that in it are two leading men—Robert Harron and Richard Barthelmess. In the making of this film Mr. Griffith had the co-operation of the army and navy departments, and for the first time, portions of Uncle Sam's fighting equipment will be shown on the screen. A recent parade staged by the officers of March Aviation Field, near Riverside, California, in connection with the Los Angeles Liberty Loan Drive, consisted of one hundred and fifteen airplanes in bombing formation which flew over the city of Los Angeles, a distance of nearly sixty miles from the aviation training camp. Mr. Griffith was permitted to secure scenes of this, and his cameramen were furnished aircrafts so that close-ups could be filmed. The machines flew at a height of about four thousand feet. Up until the time of this flight, the greatest number of machines in the air at one time in formation was sixty-seven, so that the Griffith propaganda film wli show a new record in aviation.

THE Dorothy Gish Company having releases far ahead, has closed and members are enjoying a vacation of four weeks.

THE Tulare theatre at Tulare has passed from the ownership of S. J. Greenwood to Sol Slayback.

BOB McNEIL of San Francisco is rapidly expanding into a Napolean of the Motion Picture house. For some time he has owned the Mission, the Lyceum and Panama theatres in the Mission district, this city. Now he has just bought the 600 seat Strand formerly owned by C. Hellman and also the Clairmont a 750 seat house formerly owned by H. Henderson. Both these houses are situated on Telegraph avenue, Oakland.

THE Rialto theatre at Vallejo has been sold by J. Marsh to W. P. Maupin.

THE California theatre has booked the Mutual film "Temple of Dust" for the week of October 20. According to advance notices the play has a grip which will appeal to the fans.

D. S. MARKOWITZ, has resigned as manager of the Western Feature Film Co., and has made connections with the Fox Film Co.

P. H. STEVENS of the World Film Corporation has been entered in the "America's Answer" contest, and is making a hurry-up trip through the State of Nevada.

"HAPPY" J. H. KNOWLES, the smiling impresario of the Sonora theatre, Sonora, Cal., is visiting film row and bringing sunshine with him on every visit. No out of town theatre man is more welcome than "Happy" and no film man can say that he ever saw him without a smile.

THE twenty-eighth star on the service flag of the Strand theatre was added this week when Jefferson W. Asher, treasurer and director, left for Pittsburg to enter Carnegie Institute of Technology for a course in military aeronautics, where he will specialize in aerial radio work for the flying arm of the service. It was at the behest of the Government that Asher enters this intensive course, for he is already qualified as an expert radio operator. When wireless telegraphy was in its infancy he rigged up his own apparatus and at the age of 15 was a licensed radio expert, later handling ship service for wireless companies.

W. F. CHARLES, the southern California representative of the American Photo Player Co., reports the sale of a Fotoplayer in El Centro, Cal. Mr. Baron, sales manager for northern California, reports an organ of the Robert-Morton type has been sold to a new house in Napa county and a Fotoplayer in Alameda.

GEORGE R. TEMPLETON has bought the new Sixteenth Street theatre in this city from L. J. Levin, and has rechristened it with the name "Rex"

THE many friends of J. S. Woody are congratulating him on his promotion in the Select Picture Corporation from Field Manager to General Sales Manager. Mr. Woody has many friends on this Coast and the letters of congratulation which are going hence to him will help to swell the San Francisco post office receipts.

THE OLD ESSANAY MOTION PICTURE STUDIO at Niles has been taken over by the Bonnie-Reed Film Mfg. Co., and work has already begun on a one reel comedy. It is the intention of the new company to specialize on one reel comedies.

THE DUHEM MOTION PICTURE MFG. CO. has recently taken several pictures of more than passing interest. The company made an educational film of about 1,000 feet of the salvaging of six immense boilers from the steamer Bear which was wrecked near Eureka, Cal., about a year ago. The boilers weighed about 45 tons each, and besides taking them from the water they had to be rolled 28 miles over the sandy beach to the place where they were loaded on a motorship for shipment to China. A number of unusual engineering feats had to be accomplished in moving the boilers and these are well shown in the film. The final disposition of the boilers to the China government, which will put them in pairs in three gunboats, adds an interest to the film. The same company has completed a three-reel film staged by the Liberty Film Co., a San Francisco concern, entitled, "Where Is Your Registration Card?" Sol Lesser viewed a run-off of the film and may decide to push it for the Liberty Co.

THE UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY will display the film made by the Duhem Company of the recent launching of the "Avenall" at the Schaw-Batcher Shipyard in South San Francisco. The feature of this launching is that it was the largest vessel ever launched sideways.

STILL another recent film by the same company was the bayonet drill of the troops at Camp Fremont. It will be shown by one of the Pictorial Weeklies.

WHEN the Allied officers passed through San Francisco recently en route to Russia the mayor of the city presented them with a beautiful silk Czechoslovak flag. The ceremony took place in the Civic Center, and the picture was taken by the Duhem Company.

THE suspension of business is having serious effect on some of the smaller exchanges and some have already gone out of business. If the situation continues for many weeks more it is feared that others will have to close their doors.

THE Sunset and Western Film Exchanges have closed their doors and it is reported have permanently gone out of business.

THE PAREX FILM CO., which has been furnishing the Sherry Service, has taken quarters in the General Film Exchange. The George Kleine Service has also taken quarters in the General Film and are sending out notices to the effect that the physical handling of their films will in the future be taken care of by the General.

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY is mailing its new booking chart to all its patrons. Mr. Quive is looking forward to a booming business as soon as the theatres are permitted to reopen.

BERT VAN VAULKENBERG, designer for the American Photo Player Co., arrived here recently from the company works at Van Nuys. He has been designing some new improvements on the photoplayer and came to the company headquarters to talk them over. Some of the plans he has in mind are said to be far reaching, if actual experiences demonstrates their practicability.

Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies

Warning to Exhibitors!

THERE are certain persons who won't even giggle under any circumstances at Mack Sennett's otherwise sure-fire laugh starters.

The O'Rourkes will roar, the Cohens will cheer, the Smiths will shout, the Hoklavititches will hurrah, the Ching Sens will shake, the Schultzes will snicker, the Olsens will ovate, the Carrillos will chuckle, the De Voes will dance—

But, you might as well know the worst—

The Hohenzollerns won't crack a smile.

However, they're the only folks who won't help shake your theatre with laughter when a Mack Sennett's on the screen.

"The Dawn of Understanding"

From the Frohman Play, "SUE," Made Famous by ANNIE RUSSELL
Adapted from BRET HARTE'S Story, "The Judgment of Bolinas Plain"

Directed by DAVID SMITH

In this artistic adaptation of a master writer's master work, this winsome star now a bit of a Tomboy, now the perfect society bud, finds a fertile field for her genius of characterization.

There is laughter for this brilliant little comedienne to scatter in "The Dawn of Understanding," and the depth of pathos developed in certain stages of the story finds outlet through the star's extraordinary dramatic power, so rich in its qualities of expression and repression.

It is in all respects an ideal vehicle for the introduction of Bessie Love—the Peter Pan of the Screen—to the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon program.

Distinctly different is this story of a breezy New York shop-girl and the rich fellow who kept asking her to marry him and whom she would not accept because—she loved him truly! The people in the picture are so many creations from real life, they are so wholly human and understandable. Audiences will chuckle over them, and they will love Alice Brady in the role of Lola Gray as they have never loved her before—for this is a picture to warm up to!

"My little sister shan't hear a word of that ugly story!"

St. Joe reports:

"4,000 SHOWN!"

When the St. Joseph (Mo.) Civic Festival Association featured "America's Answer" at the Auditorium, not long ago, they had 1,000 people at the matinee and 3,000 at the evening performance!

This is typical.

From all over the country come reports of packed houses, thrilled audiences and storms of applause bestowed on this marvelous war picture, which was filmed in France by the U. S. Signal Corps and sent to this country under the direction of General Pershing.

When you book "America's Answer," you do two things:

1—You sell out the house, automatically, for each showing of the film.

2—You render the Government a distinctly patriotic service by giving the people of your city an opportunity to visualize this nation's glorious part in the great war, through the medium of the People's Films.

If you have not yet booked "America's Answer," you had better do so right away. The rental has been figured on a basis that will permit of showing at regular admission prices.

War features produced to date under the Government's auspices are:

GREAT WAR PHOTOPLAY AWES CROWDS

Large crowds, twice as large as the first day, witnessed the showing of "America's Answer," the patriotic official American war picture in five reels, and the three vaudeville acts, the program offered by the St. Joseph Civic Festival association, at the Auditorium yesterday afternoon and last night. The crowd numberede 3,000 last night, and 1,000 at the matinee.

How Government Made Soldiers

"America's Answer," which shows the remarkable achievements of the United States government since taking up the fight against the Hun, was again well received. It shows how the government made soldiers of 1,-50,000 American boys and transported them to France to fight for liberty on French soil.

Considerable attention is devoted to the work of the various war work organizations among the men, the Salvation army, the Y. M. C. A., the American Red Cross, the Y. W. C. A., and the Knights of Columbus.

McNutt's Band Plays

The program of McNutt's band, which adds much to the show, was varied and appropriate to the occasion. The program was mainly patriotic with touches of the national anthems of the Allied nations.

HOW VICTORY PICTURES ARE MADE

All film is made of the same stuff.

The celluloid of one picture is just as good as that of another.

It's what's put onto the film that counts.

Fox Films are impregnated with the Fox Idea.

There are three links in the chain of picture values—story, direction, and acting.

The Fox Idea emphasizes all three—insures the quality of all three.

Fox stories are given first consideration by a Fox reader, must pass the Fox scenario editor, then obtain the endorsement of the Fox advisory board, and finally are accepted, if at all, by Mr. Fox personally.

Weeks are given to the consideration, rewriting and re-arrangement of every Fox story.

The Fox Idea places responsibility upon the director for dramatic construction and interpretation, for photography, for settings, for costuming—for all the multitudinous details of filming.

But—

The Fox director is not the final authority.

The Fox Idea provides for critical and minute reviewing of the director's work—first by the director and the star, then by William Fox, then by the Fox Film editor, then by a Board of Review, and again and again, after every change, by Mr. Fox and the reviewing board.

Thoroughness is a fundamental phase of the Fox Idea.

Fox Films do not happen—they are evolved.

The Fox Idea is producing a uniform product — a steadily improving product—pictures that the most of the people want.

The Fox Idea is making more money than ever before has been made for the most progressive and biggest exhibitors throughout the civilized world.

The Great

A Million-Dollar Group of Feature Pictures at Prices That Make Big

The 9 Pictures—Book Now

in "FIGHTING BLOOD"

This picture has played a greater number of days in all parts of the world than any other that William Fox has released. It is a thrilling lumber camp and mining town story of a battling clergyman—the man who came back after unjust imprisonment. It has swift, tense action and a popular theme and is typically Farnum. It has done a record-breaking business and will repeat.

2 Theda Bara
in "UNDER TWO FLAGS"

The picturized version of Ouida's most famous novel. The most popular production in which Theda Bara has appeared in a role not of a vampire. It is a rapid-fire picture with a 100 per cent. record for box-office hits—undoubtedly the best photographic version ever made of a big stage success. On past performances alone it should be played to win in a walk.

3 Raoul A. Walsh's First William Fox Picture
"REGENERATION"

A great, vibrant, colorful, spectacular production that is ablaze with thrills, action and romance. You will recall the big scenes of the steamboat fire, the rescue of the children, the fights between gangs of water rats and the regeneration of the hero. You will recall the success of this picture when it was first released—and book it with the assurance of turn-away business.

4 William Farnum
in "THE BROKEN LAW"

Love, romance and conquest are the themes of this colossal picture of the free and easy life of the highway. It is a thoroughly typical William Farnum subject and has a truly great cast, ranking in all respects among the most successful and satisfactory pictures that William Fox has released. It will be one of the biggest revenue producers of THE GREAT NINE.

5 Theda Bara
in "THE SERPENT"

It is Miss Bara's opinion that this is her greatest picture. Hundreds of exhibitors are of the same opinion. The big battle scenes—the boar hunt—the surprising climaxes—all contribute to its wonderful popularity. The production was directed by Raoul A. Walsh, and among those in the cast is George Walsh, one of the greatest favorites in filmland today.

6 "INFIDELITY"
Based on George Ohnet's Novel, "Dr. Rameau"

A great melodrama, throbbing with sobs and tears, rippling with comedy and tense with human interest—a wonderful all-star cast, including Frederick Perry, Dorothy Bernard, Jean Sothern and Kittens—admittedly the best production of its sort ever released by William Fox or any other producer.

7 Valeska Suratt
in "THE SOUL OF BROADWAY"

THE GREAT NINE would not be complete without this remarkable picture with its wonderful aeroplane scenes and fashion parade at Atlantic City, and its exposure of the night life of Broadway. It was one of the box-office sensations of three years ago, and will be as great a sensation today, because it is the type of thrilling picture in which public interest never wanes.

in "THE DARLING OF PARIS"

This, perhaps, is the most gorgeous, costly and spectacular production of THE GREAT NINE series. It is based on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the world-famous novel by Victor Hugo, is Parisian in atmosphere and notable for the thrilling action and scenes of breathless suspense that spell profits.

9 William Farnum
in "HOODMAN BLIND"

Like "Infidelity," this production has been revised. It is founded on the famous stage success of the same name, "Hoodman Blind," by Wilson Barrett. It is one of the most powerful, thrilling and dramatic photoplays ever produced. It certainly shows William Farnum at his best, and will be one of the foremost box-office successes of THE GREAT NINE.

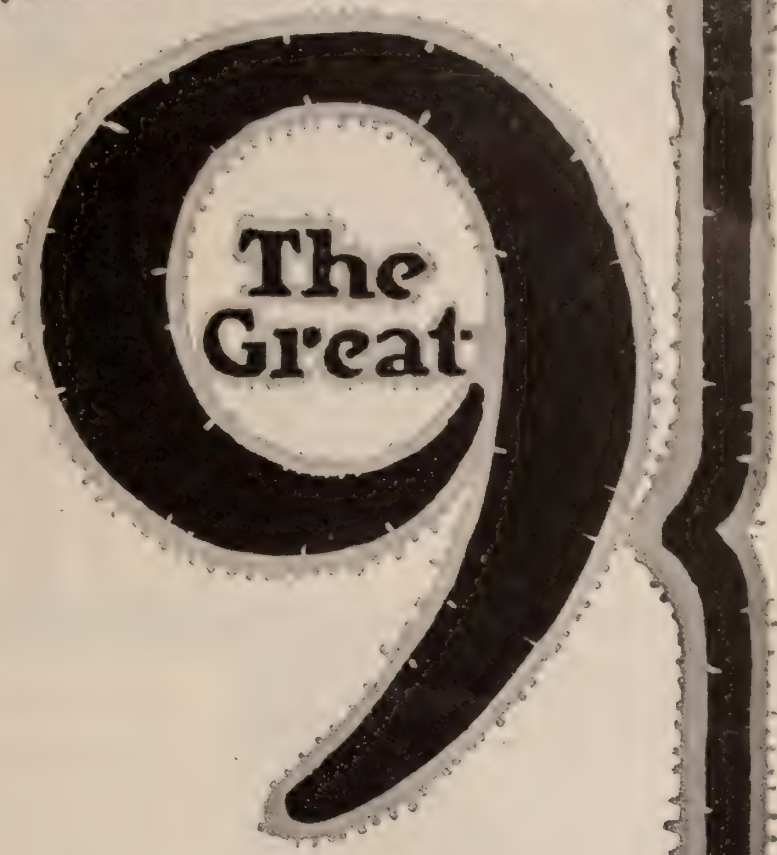
ofits Absolutely Certain—Book Now

Reasons to Book Now!



They are the biggest successes William Fox has produced in the last five years.

They are the pictures on which William Fox's reputation as a producer was founded.

They are known to exhibitors and the public everywhere as the biggest and the best stories shown on the screen—the pick of a stock of 250 negatives.

They will attract millions of persons who did not patronize picture houses when these pictures were first released.

They present in minor roles more of the famous stars of today than now are seen in a year's average pictures.

They can be rented reasonably—in them you don't have to pay the top rental based on new stars with inflated reputations.

7 They are re-edited and retitled, shortened to 4,500 feet, crowded with action in every foot, and newly printed—are 1919 editions of big successes.

8 They have swept the world by storm—hold all records for big box-office receipts—are proved, unquestioned box-office successes.

9 They are released as a group on an independent basis—first come, first served!

The Star of a thousand moods

She startled the world in "Revelation" and in this production alone reached the pinnacle of box office success and established a new standard for the screen.

She did more in one production for the future of pictures, more for the continuance of enthusiastic patronage of picture theatres more for the exhibitors than any three of the biggest stars in the last ten years are assured that it will continue to be released for some time to come. The supply of available and excellent material, always large, has considerably increased during the past few months until it has today reached the point where there is sufficient on hand and coming to amply provide for the issues of many weeks.

She went beyond her own triumphs in Toys of Fate," proving herself entirely different, totally distinctive and wonderful beyond any comparison as the supreme actress of the picture world.

Furthermore the quality of the negatives received from the French, British, Italian and American Governments has steadily improved until today it is better than ever.

The Armistice and the prospects of early Peace have made the Official War Review an even better box office attraction; great in War it will be as great in Peace.

Eight de luxe features will be produced by the National Film Corporation of America, his coming year, with Billie Rhodes, christened by T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, "the screen's daintiest star.", The initial picture has just been completed, "THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS," of which the Los Angeles "Examiner" said—

> Motion picture historians will chronicle the debut of Billie Rhodes as a full-fledged film star at Tally's yesterday as a complete success, histrionically, pictorially and financially. There has been greater premieres in this city, perhaps ("The Birth of a Nation's" and "Hearts of the World's," for instance), but none more enthusiastic from the audience's viewpoint, or more laudatory to a screen luminary.

Henry B. Walthall, the undisputed prem dramatic artist of the screen, will appear in series of eight special photoplays produced by t National Film Corporation of America. The fi "AND A STILL SMALL VOICE," contains eve element that made Walthall famous in such p ductions as "The Birth of A Nation" and D. W Griffith's picture "The Great Love." No portray before or since has so endeared a player to t American public as Walthall's "little Colonel "The Birth of a Nation."

The Cannibal pictures, photographed at the ri of life, according to Frederick James Smith, in th October issue of the Motion Picture Classic, ha "ten times the grip of an average photoplay." S. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rivoli and Ri Theatres in New York, says "The Johnson picture will be welcomed by any intelligent exhibitor as break in the terrible rut and routine of the so-calle dramatic or comedy feature and besides will be good tonic for any first-class theatre, and if proper exhibited will bring a big financial return."

They are an extraordinary feature attraction.

Organization Means Success

THE HEARST NEWS REEL ORGANIZATION (INTERNATIONAL FILM SERVICE CO., INC.) HAS BEEN THE MAKER OF NEWS REEL HISTORY IN THE PAST AND HAS THE STAGE ALL SET FOR EVEN BIGGER EVENTS IN THE FUTURE

Mr. C. F. Zittel, Vice President and General Manager of the International Film Service Co., Inc., quotes the following extract from a conversation he had recently with Mr. J. A. Berst, formerly Vice President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., now President of the United Pictures Corporation:

The Past:

"The connection of the Pathe Exchange with the Hearst organization, through the International Film Service, was a most beneficial one for Pathe, and the turning point which led to Pathe's great success. The contract made by me with the International, which went into effect December 24th, 1916, was considered a great victory for Pathe, and from that moment the profits of the Pathe Exchange began to accrue very largely, and the Pathe News, combined with the Hearst International News under the title of the Hearst Pathe News, showed a profit that it had not shown for three years previous to the combine. In fact, for some time previous to the combination the Pathe News was not a paying venture."

The Present:

The International Film Serivce Co., Inc., has purchased the Universal Current Events, the Universal Animated Weekly and the Mutual Screen Telegram, and the gathering forces of all these organizations are now being molded into the greatest news film amalgamation that has ever been in existence.

The Future:

After December 24th, 1918, the name of Pathe will be eliminated from the Hearst Pathe News and this famous reel will be released under the title of the Hearst News. The names of the Universal Current Events and the Mutual Screen Telegram will also be retained, making three news reel issues a week to be made by the International Film Service Co., Inc., and released through the countrywide exchanges of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. The unequaled facilities of the Hearst camera forces, augmented by the forces of the other recently acquired companies, will mean the furnishing of news reels of a magnitude never before attempted. A unique and novel advertising and publicity campaign in the Hearst newspapers, magazines and affiliated papers, has been arranged for the promotion of these reels.

Does the Exhibitor Know?

THIS week Samuel Goldfish earns the honors of mention right at the start of this pinch-hitting editorial page.

Mr. Goldfish gains the place by an exclusive article he has contributed to this week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. And because that article states some interesting views in a candid, straight-from-the-shoulder manner.

Summed up in a few words for the purpose of a headline the Goldwyn president's article might say, "Does the exhibitor always know what he wants? Or what his patrons want?"

And that summary isn't a whit more frank than every word of the article itself.

Read every line of it—and between the lines—and you will feel yourself grasping the producer's viewpoint and seeing how things look through his spectacles.

We enjoyed the process—and we feel certain our exhibitor readers will also.

"Starting Something" Our Delight

WE like to publish articles that "start something." We hate to devote valuable white space to a statement of obvious conclusions, no matter how interestingly put.

That is why we take particular delight in giving you this article by Mr. Goldfish.

We know that several exhibitors are going to "come back" with views of their own.

And when they do we will have a discussion going that will help all concerned. For you have to get people scrapping in this game before they will let anything but the trite and time-worn get into print over their signatures.

Mr. Goldfish's article, by the way, is based on his reading of our Exhibitor Service Bureau.

Which leads us to thank the influenza epidemic once more for having given the "big fellows" time enough to read and study the picture trade papers.

This reading—so they tell us—has shown them that there is a trade paper keeping pace with the problems of the industry, and papers that keep pace with the press agents.

The Good Old Days

HOW glad we are that the "good old days" have long since flown. Those good old days when, if you even hinted that the executive of a film company ever made a mistake you lost the organization's advertising for a year.

We have that pleasant thought every now and then—particularly on the day the paper is published.

And we recall it now as we think of a couple of exhibitor letters that break into our "Reader Has His Say" department this week.

Both are rip-snorters and don't mince words in expressing their opinions on a particularly timely subject—the First National-Mary Pickford-Famous Players, et al.

But—such are the vagaries of this giant industry—each takes a different side of the controversy. And the two letters reached the NEWS office within a space of two days.

Now if J. D. Williams, Adolph Zukor—and you, too, Friend Reader—will only jump into the fight we'll have still another battle on our hands.

Those "War Pictures"

PERHAPS more candidly than wisely, we must admit that we are not among those who shy at the mere mention of "war pictures" now that peace is here.

We are with those who ask, "Where is the picture 'Shenandoah?'"

For it will be remembered that "Shenandoah" was a twenty-year success, that it swept the country and piled up bank balances— and yet it was a "war play" and the Civil War had ended.

It all depends on what you want by "war picture."

The producer and the exhibitor who thinks that anything which even mentions war is now dead as a door-nail as a box office attraction and entertainment is blinding himself to stage experience.

The bells may have tolled for the trash war picture, for the "jazz" war picture, for the picture that counted solely on the waving of the American flag and denunciation of the Germans for its earnings.

These pictures have earned big money, yet it is possibly true that their day has passed.

But, now—today—is the day of the real war picture. for the picture that is big in drama, big in conception and construction—big, because of and despite the war.

Perhaps it is on the market now, perhaps it is to come—but don't let it get by you just because it is a "war picture."

Judge the "war pictures" as pictures—from the standpoint of entertainment, on the same basis as you used in former peace times.

And you may find the—"Shenandoah."

When the Yanks Come Home

IN a few weeks the men from the fields of France and the boys in the camps will start back to their homes. In a few months the greater share of them will be back in civil life.

When they went away, you complained—Mr. Exhibitor—that your business had been badly damaged, that your best patrons had been taken out of the community.

You know what a big element they formed in theatre patronage.

And now they are coming back—coming back with new converts made to the screen by the Liberty theatres throughout the country and the Y. M. C. A. huts behind the lines.

What preparations are you making? Are you preparing to sense the desires of this new—yet old—element in your patronage?

What effect are the three million and more going to have on future pictures?

We are trying to help you find out.

In this issue Edward L. Hyman, director of the picture division of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, gives his idea of the influence the returning Yankees are going to exert.

Mr. Hyman has been manager of two of the Liberty theatres and was promoted to the selection of all the films shown. He sums up his conclusions in an article that both manufacturers and exhibitors will do well to study.

It's in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau.

Dame Rumor Says

DAME RUMOR—you meet her frequently on Broadway—whispered last week to all who would hear that the Committee on Public Information's Division of Films has seen fit to take up an analytical study of the film industry.

And our friend the garrulous Dame goes on to say that recommendations have been made to Washington which if carried out would find the Division in charge of a reorganization and efficiency program in distribution and production circles.

As usual we don't like to believe Dame Rumor.

And especially this time—for we don't imagine the Division desiring to enter or to precipitate the Administration on so dangerous an undertaking.

Dangerous, even if carried out by experts in motion pictures; and more so if placed in the hands of Washington appointees.

Dangerous to the industry—and risky to official Washington.

No—we don't believe Dame Rumor this time.

Captain William E. Blaisdell

WE didn't have the honor of knowing Captain William E. Blaisdell—who made the supreme sacrifice on September 29 on a Flanders field.

But we have the pleasure—and the honor—of knowing George Blaisdell, of the Moving Picture World.

And in the words of sympathy that we would write here there is mingled a sacred envy of the father who can feel that his son's life was given so gloriously to the Cause.

The condolences of the entire NEWS staff are extended to George Blaisdell, thoroughbred newspaper man, true-blue American.

Dealing in Personalities

"Jay Dynamic Williams"

GRACING the top of this eminent column this week is none other than J. D. Williams. J. D. talked shop—trade papers and film shop—with us for a whole hour last Friday. He sat on the edge of a desk while we held down a regular chair

Such are the seats of the mighty!

It begins to look as though anyone foolish enough to talk to yours truly is sure of getting "his picture in the paper." But that isn't our reason for this paragraph. It is to tell what happened on our way to the First National offices at 6 W. 48th St.

Absentmindedly we turned from Fifth Avenue into 47th Street and entered No. 6 on that block. The surroundings were unfamiliar. To the darkey elevator runner we said, "Is First National in this building?"

"'Deed, no, sah! But there's a bank right 'cross the street, sah!"

Wonder if "Little Mary" got her cue from that same darkey?

"The hyphen in Robertson-Cole"

WE have felt for many weeks that exhibitors should meet the guiding spirit of the Robertson-Cole Company's film activities. For each week has brought a new and bigger announcement from that organization—culminating in this week's Mutual story.

So we introduce you to Walter Hoff Seeley.

Robertson-Cole, by the way, is a name to bow to in financial and mercantile circles. With headquarters in New York and London and a network of connections covering the globe, they stand ace high as international exporters.

And though their reel film debut didn't happen so many months ago they have surely landed on the lot with both feet firmly planted.

But why wonder when you add to the distributing experience of Walter Hoff Seeley the showmanship he displayed when managing Rochester's Piccadilly?

So—now that you have met him—

Hats off to Walter Hoff Seeley!

"A Hick Lawyer"

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN—the Hoosier lawyer, he was once called—gave the trade paper boys a lunch last Saturday at Mrs. Rector's. The purpose was to explain the new Affiliated-Mutual combination.

And while Charlie may have been a lawyer, and still is a speechmaker, he made the explanations in such plain, unvarnished language that it was a treat.

We didn't hear a succession of superlative adjectives or naive buncombe—but just frankly stated facts.

The boys were so absolutely flabbergasted that they drank a toast to——

"A new kind of fillum speech."

And to Charles C. Pettijohn.

What They Say About the Quinn Letter

If you think that it is time to forget what Mr. Quinn wrote—but, of course, no one in the industry is so neglectful of his interests—then you will not be interested in reading what sensible exhibitors have to say. The Dickerson letter, published below, will doubtless be of interest to even the busiest producer in the business—and to the exhibitor, too. Mr. Dickerson has used his think-tank to advantage, and has gathered from it some excellent ideas, which he sets forth.

Even as much as Earle S. Nesbitt dislikes the influenza, he is glad the epidemic was partly responsible for the Quinn article, and he says so in his letter which we publish herewith.

And we'll have some more for you later.]

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York, N. Y.,

DEAR SIR:—

I HAVE read Mr. Quinn's letter and because my own experience has been almost identical with his, in a smaller way, having been newspaper man, actor, director and now exhibitor, I find myself agreeing entirely with his statements but I think he has neglected suggesting a remedy if one is possible.

The errors of the producers are too numerous to mention. I personally know a producer and director who shot forty thousand feet of film intending to make a seven or eight reel feature. He used a synopsis of his own creation of perhaps 2,000 words, or least he had it in his pocket when he started. He paid salaries ranging from $750 a week to $100 for people, who, outside of New York, had never been heard of. The story was as ancient as the history of films. The players were as capable as any good stock performer and no more. The best things in the finished production was some darn good scenic stuff and the characterization of an assistant property man, who probably was drawing $25 a week, when the studio was open and nothing when it was closed. This man didn't pretend to be an actor. He had filled in in bits numberless times and consequently was quite at home in a scene but he didn't know the first principles of acting and never will. What was the reason for his success? He was a great type for the part and they gave him something to do, that had some bearing on the story, bad as it was.

HOWEVER, the greatest evil as far as its result to the exhibitor is concerned lies in another direction.

Just so long as films are sold for so much each regardless of their dramatic value, and so long as releases are sold on the program plan, or on the star series plan, just so long will exhibitors be running lousey pictures about half the time. The exhibitor, most of us at least, will slide a rotten feature by, if it will get him money. The producer isn't going to worry about art, if he knows that the exhibitor is compelled to buy his rotten feature.

I don't believe anybody in the business today is worrying about how rotten they are, if they personally can see their way clear financially on the production, unless it may be the few popular stars who have brains enough to see that if too many of the pictures in which they appear are not pleasing that their popularity will sooner or later decline to nothing and in consequence they will be out of a job.

Bad stories, poorly developed, are the real primary cause of most of the bad pictures. A picture isn't any bigger than its story and this making pictures from a thousand word synopsis, after having been developed by one of the staff writers who has used up his fund of ideas years ago, is a joke. I have seen an ordinary ex-newspaper man set to work to write the continuity from one of these synopses in the morning with instructions to have something for the cast and director to start work on the next morning. Then nine times out of ten the director took the scenario out with him and then went on and made the picture according to his own ideas, improvising as he went along.

HERE is the solution of the whole problem if it could ever be realized.

Sell a picture to the exhibitor on its own dramatic and box office value. Write and rewrite the stories until they are in such shape that it is felt that nothing more can be done to better them. Don't let these literary guys who hold down most of these scenario department jobs do this, but get showmen. Make the director responsible for the production and base his pay for every particular production on the kind of picture he turns out. Quit paying big salaries to actors who aren't known off Broadway. John Smith on the billing means just as much to the average patron of the picture theatre as a near star. There are a few people in the business who are worth all they get however much it is. The others aren't. Release enough prints of the good ones to cover every town hall in the country and go out and sell the production. And, if possible find some means of modifying the prevailing opinion of every man in or connected with the film business, that he knows all there is to know about the game and that everybody else is a nut.

I thank you.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) J. S. DICKERSON.

P. S.—Eleven years an exhibitor with showshops at Watkins, Montour Falls, and Odessa, N. Y. Tanks? Yes, but we make them pay a profit.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City,

GENTLEMEN:—

AT your solicitation, here are my sentiments regarding QUINN'S COMMENT. It's the best thing you ever put in print. If all this looking facts in the face has come to the surface because of time for thought given us by the "flu" shut down, then let's have a month of epidemic of thought each year and make the other eleven months worth while. As a small town exhibitor, where a change of program each day is the rule and there's a howl to Rome by the every-night stand-bys when you put on a two-day run, I can truly and sanely say that given a "Rebecca" or a "Revelation" and I will make a two-day run on them, save 50 per cent of my advertising material and in two months' time bring them back for another showing, purchase no additional advertising to that saved from first run, and still do far more business than I could on an ordinary program feature.

You bet, yours for the conservation that cuts out the poor and the mediocre. I've never found out yet how to keep from getting them once in a while after they've been produced and I never know what to do with them when I see them coming my way.

Respectfully yours,

EARLE S. NESBITT.

Nation Gains Over Influenza Evil

Some Sections Report Relapse Because of Peace Celebrations — Whole Cities Disguise Themselves with Masks—Towns in Michigan Face Reclosing Order

THE peace celebrations were almost too much for influenza stricken America, and various sections of the country have reported slight relapses owing to strenuous rejoicing and attendant ills, but on the whole steady progress was noted during the past week in the situation. Whole towns and cities are reopening, and in most of these business has picked up remarkably, according to the exhibitors.

Several cities are living under a mask rule, and no people are permitted on the streets without having the face covered. This rule was broken many times November 11, as celebrators could not blow horns with their faces muzzled. This is said to be responsible for some reclosings in Michigan. Other places have not reported ill effects that would create pessimism.

Michigan Cities Undergo Inspection by Officers

According to advices from Detroit, the State of Michigan is once again in danger of an influenza epidemic that may lead to state-wide closing. On November 15 the question was being seriously discussed by the State Health Board authorities, and Dr. R. M. Olin, the state physician, is personally making an inspection of various cities. It is probable, of course, that the ban will only be placed on those cities where the conditions are considered serious.

New cases reported to the state health authorities on Wednesday were 689, or 30 more than the day before. In fact, the number of daily reports has been growing. Bay City, Saginaw, Grand Rapids and Pontiac are all reported in bad shape. In Bay City 60 new cases and six deaths were reported in one day.

There was great rejoicing in Detroit and elsewhere in Michigan when the state ban was lifted. Business did not, however, pick up as much as the exhibitors anticipated and they do not expect to make up the losses. During the peace celebrations the downtown theatres in the larger cities did a big business. The downtown theatres, generally, have done a better business proportionately than those in residential neighborhoods.

Business Starts Well in Rochester Houses

Business started with a rush in the picture houses of Rochester, N. Y., when the closing ban was lifted. While there was a slight falling off on the following day, the average for the week was satisfactory. Peace celebration day was another boom for the business, and several of the downtown houses had crowds standing in line before the opening of the doors at five o'clock in the evening.

The sudden arrival of peace prospects has been causing managers considerable speculation as to what the tax situation is to be. Plans had already been made by the larger theatres to collect the twenty per cent war tax which the Government announced would have to be imposed soon, and the office forces had been busy figuring out a new scale of prices and preparing blanks for recording the new tax. Some managers are going ahead with preparations in the belief that the new tax will be placed in effect anyway, as all indications are that the need for revenue will continue for some time, while others believe that the ten per cent tax will be sufficient to meet all needs and that the Government is going to withdraw rather than increase burdens from now on.

MORE MONEY

Canadian City Proposes New Special Tax

THE City of Toronto needs more money and to secure additional revenue the civic fathers have proposed the collection of a special tax on theatre admission tickets exactly similar to the war tax now collected by the Province of Ontario. The proposal, needless to state, has aroused indignation among the local exhibitors and the matter is receiving the consideration of the executive of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario. It is pointed out by an official of the association that if the city of Toronto gets away with the plan to duplicate the Provincial war tax on admission tickets every municipality in the Province will follow suit. Thus, all theatres in the Province may be affected eventually.

Twin Cities Slow in Getting Started

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Twin City theatres are now open and business is starting off with exceptional vigor, though a few people who have heard so much of influenza and worried so much about it are still a little backward about going to theatres.

The influenza ban was lifted in St. Paul November 14, just eight days after the lid was clamped on, and, although the downtown theatres in that city did not open until Friday, many of the suburban theatres were in operation Thursday. The action taken by the St. Paul health authorities, who deserve credit for the business-like manner in which they handled the influenza situation, prompted the Minneapolis exhibitors to demand Dr. Guilford to give them a satisfactory report.

Mayor Thomas Van Lear championed the cause of the exhibitors at the health council meeting and urged that the theatres of the city be opened immediately and without restrictions. It was pointed out that conditions in Minneapolis were not so bad as they had been painted and that Minneapolis would undoubtedly appreciate a little freedom and take good care of themselves.

The lifting of the ban in Minneapolis will mean that a hundred cities of the Northwest will follow suit within the next three or four days. Newspapers of Minneapolis showed that they favored the reopening of the theatres.

"Gas Masks" Come Into Their Own

Cloth masks are being worn in greater quantities throughout the United States on account of the influenza than they ever were before. Although they have not become very popular, the orders in the various cities are nevertheless very stringent in regard to their use. Even the studios have adopted the masks, and it has not been unusual to see companies on the "lot" equipped with masks while shooting a picture.

An order calling for the universal wearing of cloth masks in all public places in Indianapolis, and closing the Indianapolis public schools November 19, was made by the Indianapolis Board of Health on November 18. The mask-wearing order became effective immediately and was in full force before another twenty-four hours had passed. The order requires the wearing of the masks in business houses, theatres, churches, factories, offices, street cars and other public places.

Opening Reports Fewer

Reports of theatres reopening following the lifting of the influenza ban throughout the country were less in number this week than formerly, probably owing to the fact that over eighty per cent of the motion picture theatres of the states are again in

Los Angeles Film Board Elects Officers

The recently formed Los Angeles Film Board of Trade, which numbers among its membership practically all of the exchange managers in Los Angeles, has perfected organization.

Members of the new board held a meeting early in November and elected the following officers: President, David Bershon, manager for Universal; vice-president, T. E. Hancock, manager for World Film; secretary, A. P. Michael Narlian, a Los Angeles attorney.

In addition to the officers the membership includes: Harry Ballance of the Paramount-Artcraft, A. B. Lamb of Metro, A. R. Patten of Mutual, G. J. Ekre of General, B. E. Loper of Select, E. B. Tate of Pathe, G. R. Sirwell of Hodkinson, Louis Hyman of All-Star, Ben Fish of Goldwyn, C. J. Marley of Triangle, J. Hepburn of Vitagraph, Guy Gunderson of George Kleine, M. A. Walsh of Fox, G. Crowley of American, H. W. Stubbins of M. & R., and G. Lentz of the United Theatres.

Norbert Lusk Goes West for Goldwyn

Norbert Lusk, for more than a year a member of Goldwyn's publicity staff, is on his way to the coast to take charge of publicity at the company's Los Angeles studios. His duties there will include the preparation and placing of newspaper material in Los Angeles and the handling of special feature matter for the motion picture magazines.

Headquarters of the Goldwyn publicity department will continue to be maintained at the company's home office, 16 East Forty-second street, New York City.

Reports on the Influenza Situation

operation. Michigan seems to be the only doubtful spot, with the exception of the West Coast, where some of the houses were still closed at last reports, but entertaining prospects of opening very shortly.

OGDEN, UTAH.—Ogden motion picture houses will open November 25, it is expected, although no definite date has been set. The celebration caused a set-back here and the situation has grown more serious.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.—The influenza ban has been lifted here and all motion picture theatres have reopened. Big business has been the rule.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The Health Board here decided to permit theatres to open November 16, excepting in parts of Mission and the North Beach district. The latter will probably reopen about November 25.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—The Board of Health recommended the setting aside of the ordinance closing the theatres, to become effective November 25, on condition that gauze masks be worn by employes and patrons. Compulsory wearing of masks is not enforced here in any other respect. to do in the influenza situation.

Hot Shots from a Hot Town!

JOHN H. KUNSKY'S name is known in more cities of these U. S. A. than Detroit has streets, but we'll have to give the Henry Ford town credit for being the home of the Kunsky chain of theatres—and Kunsky logic.

But to try and magnetize a little of the attention paid Kunsky from Detroit to New York, we publish below a few bright bits dropped by Mr. Kunsky in conversation with a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative. Some producers will probably refer to these as pertinent paragraphs—or impertinent. And others will say: "Well, there's always two sides to—but here they are.

"National advertising by film producers or distributors as it is done today is money wasted. It no longer impresses the thinking exhibitor, or the public. It does not accomplish its purpose of impressing him with the quality of the production. His greatest criterion of successes is the results from the first runs in each local territory."

"Detroit has had many syndicated advertising and publicity campaigns for alleged special features. They fooled both the public and exhibitors the first and second times. Now they discourage both of these elements."

"National advertising prepared by producers and distributors for publication in local newspapers is so similar to the fake patent medicine copy we used to read, that it might be prepared by the same agencies. And the results are the same."

"Producers seem to think more of themselves in their prepared ads for exhibitor use, than they do of the products they are advertising, or want the exhibitor to advertise. Does the public attend the theatre to see the producer or the picture?"

"The first-run account in any territory decides for at least eighty per cent of the other exhibitors whether the current production is what the producer claims it is, or whether it is what the exhibitors hope it is."

"If producers and distributors would apportion their appropriations for national advertising on productions among their first-run accounts, and let the individual exhibitors do the local newspaper advertising, they would show remarkable common sense, and follow a precedent which is almost as old as advertising, but brand new in the film industry."

"MANY BEAUTIFUL PHOTOGRAPHS are sent to exchanges by producers for exhibitor use in local newspapers. FEW PRACTICAL STILLS for exhibitor use in local newspapers are ever available to him on any production."

"A manufacturer who persistently advertises himself, in newspapers or trade journals, gains little prestige with exhibitors, and makes his product of secondary importance. The exhibitors book pictures, not the so-called production executives."

"Few exhibitors are favorably impressed with the propaganda publicity in the trade journals in behalf of the ability, ideas and personal opinions of producers or executives of distributing companies. They find a better definition of individual ability and value in what they see on the screen, and the treatment they receive at the exchanges."

Health Officer May Be Ousted

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Have Declared War Against Acting State Health Commissioner for Rulings During Recent Influenza Epidemic

WHILE efforts of the Western Pennsylvania Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, composed chiefly of exhibitors of Pittsburgh and vicinity, to induce Governor Brumbaugh to remove Acting State Health Commissioner B. Franklin Royer, on the contention that he showed "incompetency" in handling the influenza epidemic in Pennsylvania, are making absolutely no impression on the Governor, who has sustained the State Health Department throughout all the controversies that arose during the prevalence of the plague, it is said to be practically certain that Dr. Royer will lose out for reappointment when Governor-elect Sproul assumes office at the first of the year.

If Dr. Royer is bowled out, however, it will be because of his being allied with a different faction of the Republican party than that to which Sproul belongs, and will not in any sense be because of what the doctor may have done or may have failed

The Western Pennsylvania League, of which M. Fietler is president, went so far as to accuse Dr. Royer of "gross incompetency" because "it would seem to all thinking men that preventive measures intelligently applied" would have kept down the death rate. The League's action in sending this protest to the Governor was taken during the heat of the controversy between the Mayor of Pittsburgh and State Commissioner Royer when the mayor sought to open the Pittsburgh theatres befere the date authorized by Royer.

The apparent bitterness felt by the Western Pennsylvania exhibitors toward Dr. Royer does not, however, seem to be shared by the exhibitors in the central and eastern sections of the State, who endorsed his action in closing the theatres as an entirely proper one in view of the necessity of conserving the public health in every way possible.

So while Governor Brumbaugh hasn't the slightest idea of firing Dr. Royer in response to the Western Pennsylvania exhibitors' request, their wish is likely to be granted ultimately through entirely different circumstances. Dr. Royer, while in no sense a politician, is a close personal friend of Governor Brumbaugh, and therefore was in entire sympathy with the present Governor, who tried in vain to prevent the nomination of Sproul—the present Governor-elect—at the Republican primaries last spring.

United War Drive "Over Top"

William Fox and George M. Cohan Accomplish Great Things—Brilliant Ball at Astor One of Outstanding Features

NOW that the United War Work campaign has drawn to a close the record made by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team under the direction of Chairman William Fox and Associate Chairman George M. Cohan, looms up as one of the real marvels of the entire week of wholesale canvassing for the common cause. Messrs. Fox and Cohan, together with Benjamin M. Kaye, treasurer, and C. D. Kempner, campaign organizer, were untiring in their efforts to make the theatrical and motion picture end of the drive the great success it turned out to be.

A peep into the comprehensive organization instituted by Mr. Fox to carry on the work is not amiss. Profiting by his experience in the Red Cross drive of six months ago, Mr. Fox was able to gather a more complete working force and this only on two weeks' notice. For it was not until a fortnight before the drive was inaugurated that Mr. Rockefeller persuaded the film executive to again take charge of the campaign work. Floor space was then immediately commandeered in the new building at 110 West Forty-second street and two days before the drive opened a large force was working there.

In the short time given the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team to make ready something like 125 desks, 53 typewriters, 225 chairs, 100 tables, three safes, a telephone switchboard with 28 trunk lines and 50 office lines, besides countless other accessories of a busy office were installed. And when the drive opened the office force under the direction of the various twenty-six committee executives was busy at work, while on the streets something like ten thousand workers kept the Theatrical and Motion Picture Team ever among the leaders of the city's canvassers.

As was the case with the Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives, Mr. Fox's team had charge of the theatres and restaurants. A most complete system was inaugurated to enable theatre managers, speakers and collectors to co-operate. The efficiency of it may be suggested by the statement that every day at one o'clock at the Chamber of Commerce luncheon Mr. Fox was able to state the sum total of the receipts of the day before to the very penny. It was the marvelous work of co-ordination between the collectors, theatrical managers, bank cashiers (expert accountants) and the head accountant at headquarters that made it possible for Mr. Fox to accomplish this.

Probably one of the most efficiently organized departments in the whole office was that under the direction of May Upshaw, in charge of the Speakers' Committee. "Tammany Hall is so complete in its organization," said Miss Upshaw, "that we decided to model the Speakers' Committee on the same order. As a consequence, we divided the city and its boroughs into forty districts. In each of these districts two women were appointed, women well known in their portion of the city, who were responsible for funds collected in their districts. These women in turn appointed campaigners, speakers and collectors. By working on the Tammany plan we thus secured workers fully familiar with the temperament of the people they were obliged to deal with. It proved vastly successful."

Miss Upshaw's department was also in supervision of restaurant collections, collections made at the two expositions, the boxing carnival and the Victory ball of Saturday night and the combination Friars' Frolic and Lambs' Gambol on Sunday night, which wound up the work of the Theatrical and Motion Picture Team in the drive.

A. S. Kempner was general campaign director and organizer under William Fox's direction. Under him the twenty-five departments were organized and each put into motion by still another competent executive. Some of the most important of these executives and committees were: James E. McBride, War Relics Committee; Charles Harvey, Sports Committee; Sam Harris and J. J. McCarthy, Benefits Committee; Walter Moore, Outdoor Advertising Committee; Samuel Berman, M. Kashin, John Wittman, R. Sanders, Samuel Sheer and Charles Moses, Motion Picture Exhibitors' Committee; Theodore Mitchell, Publicity Committee; W. F. Hamilton (loaned by the Committee on Public Information), in charge of war exposition relices; John Zanft, in charge of arrangements for Victory ball.

Film Notables Fled to Atlantic City

During the latter part of the influenza scourge many of the film notables took advantage of the enforced inactivity and were much in evidence at Atlantic City.

A survey of the boardwalk revealed the presence of Madame Petrova, the Polish star, accompanied by Mrs. Clifton, scenario author; Bert Ennis, director of publicity for the Petrova Picture Company, and McClure Productions, Inc., accompanied by Mrs. Ennis; William L. Sherry, of the Sherry exchanges; Reginald Warde, Ethel Barrymore, the Metro star; George Le Guerre, of World Pictures, and several others.

Arthur H. Sawyer, one of the prime movers of the recently formed S-L Pictures (Sawyer-Lubin), was also observed busily at work in a private suite at the Traymore hotel on the first scenario of the new company. He was accompanied by Captain Edwin Bower Hesser, author of several photoplays, who is loaning his assistance to the story which will feature E. K. Lincoln under the direction of Ralph Ince.

W. H. Productions to Defend Suit

The following statement was issued by W. H. Productions Company concerning the proceedings instituted by the Federal Trade Commission:

"It is true that a proceeding has been commenced against us by the Federal Trade Commission, charging us with stifling and suppressing competition in Hart pictures. We believe that this proceeding has been instigated by business competitors who have misled the Federal Trade Commission with respect to the actual situation. The formal defense of the proceeding has been placed in the hands of our attorneys, Messrs. Seligsberg, Lewis & Strouse, who advise us that we have a complete defense on the merits to the proceeding.

"As a business matter, every one in the trade knows that we have not suppressed competition, but that our handling of the Hart re-issues increased competition and was a Godsend to many small exhibitors. The charges of fraud and fooling the public are ridiculous, because if our re-issues were not popular the theatres would not take them, and therefore the state rights buyers would not patronize us, whereas the same people who are now buying our new re-issues have bought our original Hart re-issues. We are, therefore, convinced that we are stimulating a fair competition to the benefit of the whole industry, and we are prepared to fight this proceeding to the last ditch in the interest of the rights of producers to re-issue popular pictures and the rights of exhibitors to show them, and in order to prevent the attempts of stars from monopolizing the market for their new and high-priced pictures."

Players Organize Union at Los Angeles

The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor at Laredo, Tex., Tuesday granted a charter to the Motion Picture Players' Union of Los Angeles. Seymour Hastings, secretary and treasurer of the union, was the representative of the Los Angeles film players at this session.

Work has been progressing for the past two months looking to the organization of a union. First, three mass meetings were held, at the third of which a committee on organization composed of fifteen were named, and officers were elected as follows:

J. B. Laflin, president; Phillip Gastrock, vice-president; B. C. Apling, second vice-president, and Seymour Hastings, secretary and treasurer. It is planned that the charter will be held open until January 1st The membership rules provides that members shall have at least two years' experience in work before the camera. Now that the charter has been granted, constitution and by-laws will be adopted by the thousand or more members, and rules governing the working of members will be specified in these.

The purpose of the union, it is stated by the officers, is to eliminate the undesirable class which are a detriment to the industry. Later it is expected a wage scale to fix the minimum salary will be adopted.

Charles S. Hart, Director of Division of Films, Committee on Public Information

Official War Review Will Be Continued

Charles S. Hart, director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, makes the authoritative announcement that, despite the close of the war, the Official War Review, released through Pathe, will be continued indefinitely, and that all other Government pictures, now issued, or being assembled, will be released according to schedule.

"It is only fair to exhibitors and the motion picture interests generally," says Director Hart, "that they should know just what to expect in regard to the war pictures that have been announced by the Division of Films. The progress of events in Europe—the evacuation of the various invaded territories—the reconstruction of devastated France and Belgium—the ferment in Germany—the meeting of the peace commission—these are all matters of tremendous historical and news interest, and they will be fully covered by the Official War Review.

"'Under Four Flags' will probably be the last big feature war picture to be issued by the Division of Films, but several two-reel pictures are now being assembled—notably those included in the U. S. A. series, and they will be issued as announced. The present activities of the Division of Films carries its work up to June 1."

"America's Answer" Is Shown in Philadelphia

"America's Answer," the second U. S. Official War Picture, issued by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, was released in Philadelphia at the Palace theatre, November 18th, for one week.

The week of November 24th will be split between the Strand and Germantown theatres, in the Quaker City.

WANTS A KIND WORD FOR AMERICAN

Fred S. Meyer Gets Back in Harness and Loosens Up With a Barrage of Interesting Reading

THE following letter needs no explanation other than that it is from Fred S. Meyer, with the American Film Company offices in Minneapolis, Minn:

"Back in my old camping grounds once again, as the local Representative of AMERICAN FILM for this territory.

"It feels mighty good to be back home, after so long an illness, and this, by the way, is the state where yours truly put the NEWS over the top some few years ago.

"I read with a great deal of interest ANONYMOUS' letter of a few weeks ago, also the one in this week's issue. The NEWS has always been fair, so let's give the devil his dues, without in any way commercializing an act of philanthropy, or trying to get some free publicity, to-wit:—

"AMERICAN not only kept its employees on the payroll during this crisis, but actually engaged new help in spite of the lull, as in the case of the writer. In view of the fact that this is the fifth week that Minneapolis is closed up tight, and but few theatres open in our territory, I think that this is saying a great deal for AMERICAN and President Hutchinson.

"In view of the fact that you mentioned GOLDWYN in your last number, please mention AMERICAN. I think they are entitled to it, and I am trying to show my appreciation by getting a lot of contracts during this forced semi-vacation.

"My experience as an exchange manager has taught me that with but few exceptions, it has always paid to be with the underdog, and the firms who so nobly stood by their help in the past month, will not be the losers in any way.

"I dare say, that when you refer to the personnel of these firms in a year or two from now, you'll still find the same employees, with but few exceptions. Possibly if other exchanges were to give their branch managers and salesmen a little more thought, they would not be prompted to change their Representatives every two or three months.

"You may use any part of this letter you see fit, and I know of no better way of showing that I am truly sincere in what I have said, than by signing my name. Why this secrecy?

"Are your contribs afraid to let the exhibitors know that they are working for a WHITE firm, or do they figure that they may be 'let out' on that account.

"The human side of the element has never been considered heretofore. An occasion presented itself, and THREE firms (to the best of my knowledge, Goldwyn, Pathe and AMERICAN are the only exceptions) showed their color.

"The party who wrote that first anonymous letter hit the nail on the head. Why he did not sign his name is not quite clear to me, but perhaps he had reasons of his own.

"Nevertheless, the fact remains that employees who were retained on the payroll during this crisis, will show their appreciation and reciprocate a thousand fold."

Chas. S. Hart Sails for Europe

Director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information Is Banqueted Before Departure

CHAS. S. HART, director of the Division of Films, of the Committee on Public Information, was a passenger on the Baltic, of the White Star Line, which sailed for England Tuesday, November 19.

He will be absent several weeks, and during his sojourn abroad will visit France, Italy, Holland, Switzerland and Sweden. Director Hart's trip is made for the purpose of looking over the film situation in England and on the Continent, and studying the possibilities of the motion picture in assisting President Wilson in carrying out his idea of a closer cooperation between the various nations. It is believed that the films, which, through the Government war pictures, did so much to create a united America in favor of the war, will be equally effective in creating a sympathetic interest between the United States and the countries of Europe.

Director Hart, it is announced, will endeavor to give the plan a practical test, and will not only arrange for the presentation of the U. S. Government pictures overseas, but will also make it possible to exhibit in the United States foreign official films that have not hitherto been released. Mr. Hart will supervise the taking of pictures of the peace parliament and the work of reconstruction in the war area.

The foreign Division of the Committee on Public Information has already established offices in London, Paris and other European centers, and through them the film work on both sides of the water will be co-ordinated. Marcus A. Beeman will be the acting director of the Division of Films during Mr. Hart's absence.

Carl Byoir, associate chairman of the Committee on Public Information, also sailed on the Baltic with Mr. Hart.

A farewell dinner was given to Director Hart by his associates in the Division of Films, Monday evening, November 18th, at the Hotel Chatham.

Rufus Steele, scenario editor of the Division of Films, was the toastmaster, and the others present, in addition to the guest of honor, were: Carl Byoir, Associate Chairman of the Committee on Public Information; Manager Marcus A. Beeman, E. M. Anderson and T. T. Bartelme of the foreign picture section; Capt. G. McLeod Baynes and Charles Urban of the department of distribution of British films in the United States: Lieutenant Prochet, of the Italian mission; T. S. Barrett, comptroller of the Division of Films; Denis J. Sullivan, George Meeker and Edward L. Stoddard, of the department of distribution; C. S. Trowbridge, manager of feature films; W. J. MacInnes and Willard D. Corey, of the advertising and publicity bureau; Robt. D. Rinehart and M. E. A. Tucker, of the bureau of film production; L. B. Bassett, of the Bureau of War Photographs; Gardiner W. Wood, Washington representative of the Division; Carlyle Ellis, D. K. Niles, J. S. Flynn and Louis M. Hammerling, president of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers.

Goldfish Writes About Roth Letter

[Editor's Note—Eugene H. Roth, manager of the California and Portola theatres at San Francisco, was the author of a very comprehensive article written especially for MOTION PICTURE NEWS and published in the November 16 issue. This article was entitled, "'Check Up Now, Everybody,' Says Roth."

The important theme was brought out forcibly also in the same issue by J. A. Quinn of Quinn's Rialto at Los Angeles, who dwelt to considerable length on statements made by George Kleine and commended very strongly Mr. Johnston's editorials on the same subject.

J. D. Williams, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, then replied to Mr. Quinn's many assertions in a forceful and lengthy communication to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which was published in the November 23 issue.

Now Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, comes back at Mr. Roth along the same very interesting theme as is evidenced by the following:]

Editor, Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—

I WONDER how many exhibitors of motion pictures there are in the entire United States who really know what kind of stories, themes and productions their audiences—the public—really like and desire to see on the screen.

My desire for information is not merely a personal one; it is the desire of all producers of the better class pictures.

Exhibitors large and small are constantly finding voice in the trade journals to tell the producers the kind of pictures they do not want. Please note that I say they, the exhibitors. They do not say their public does not want this or that kind of picture, and if they did say so I seriously and directly challenge their accurate understanding of the public they serve as the retailers of screen amusement.

Exhibitors not only do not understand what their public wants; they definitely and obstinately obstruct the producer in his efforts to supply it. For one of the greatest troubles the producer has is getting to the public itself through the Chinese wall of the exhibitors' personal prejudice. This wall is composed of the exhibitor who says "I don't like comedies" and "I don't like operatic stories," and all of fifty other narrow-minded, fixed ideas.

IN the Motion Picture News of November 16th Mr. Eugene H. Roth, of the California and Portola theatres in San Francisco, gives voice to the opinion that the recent suspension of releasing and producing has given the producers time to "take stock" of themselves. Now Mr. Roth represents the very best type of American exhibitor. He is a man of real intelligence; he serves a large clientele with entertainment. He is the kind of man to whom the producer would naturally gravitate for advice. Some advice he gives the producer in his article.

But it consists entirely in telling the producer what not to do. In not one single paragraph does he give us any specific or definite hints what we should do. He tells us what the public does not want—for instance, fairy tale pictures, biblical pictures, costume pictures, underworld and licentious pictures—but when it comes to telling us what the public does want he confines himself to the generalization, admirable but vague: "Good, wholesome stories with a heart interest and appeal."

Mind you, Mr. Roth is unquestionably right—as far as he goes. Especially with regard to licentious themes. But I wish Mr. Roth had to sit in my chair for a short month and listen to the tale of the endless bias of exhibitors. If they were all of the same calibre as himself he would not complain.

But it is the host of exhibitors who mistake their own arbitrary dogmas and prejudices for the public taste who constitute the greatest stumbling-block in the producer's path. Not so much as one in five hundred can tell the producer accurately and specifically what the public does want. With all their opportunities for face-to-face contacts with their clientele they rarely find out.

MR. ROTH says the producers have not encouraged writers sufficiently to incite them to bring out the best they have. Now that, to put it bluntly, is absurd. I am afraid Mr. Roth knows very little about writers, their problems, their conditions. For example, absolutely the cheapest price for which any of the larger companies can buy a creditable scenario—an original and hitherto unpublished story—is one thousand dollars.

I know the magazine market in America and I know that the man who sells us a scenario for a thousand dollars could not get one cent over $500 for the same story from any American weekly or monthly. In other words, the standard price for a scenario is $1,000. The standard price for a short story, demanding the same amount of care and ingenuity, is from $150 to $500—and I can assure you that the writer who gets $500 is exceptional.

But that is only one shallow channel of the literary market. Let us take plays: The lowest asking price and about the lowest selling price of any play actually acted that a producer of pictures can buy is from three to ten thousand dollars. And recently producers have been combing the field, willing to pay double that amount for appealing material of established reputation. A few days ago $40,000 was paid for the picture rights to a successful play.

Personally, I am wearied and exasperated with the uninformed, monotonous cry that "producers do not encourage and develop authors or get the best they have." The motion picture is paying more money to the good writers of America than the printed magazines. I am surprised, and a trifle hurt, that a man of Mr. Roth's information should have increased the currency of this baseless canard. It is evidently because he does not understand writers. He does not realize that it is that same Chinese wall of exhibitors' prejudice that does more to discourage writers than all other factors put together.

IT is the restrictions that are put on their imaginations that discourage them. It is the innumerable prohibitions that confine their brains. I know writers—some of the best of them are among my best friends. If they could write what they liked, if they were free to choose subjects unhampered by the prejudices and narrow tastes of the middlemen, there is not one of them but would be willing, even anxious, to write for half the money he now gets. Not having the complete freedom of expression that alone fosters art, I don't blame them for wanting money instead.

Permit me, if you please, to give you a couple of instances:

I do not mind being specific. When Goldwyn was started we were just entering the world war, now happily and victoriously ended. We felt that we had a skillful approximate of public feeling in America. We determined to produce some unusually fine comedy-dramas. We persuaded Madge Kennedy, one of the most successful American stars, to quit the stage for the screen.

She appeared in "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married," "Our Little Wife" and three or four other excellent comedies. Instantly there was an exhibitor chorus: "We don't want comedies." "We don't want nice little stories, we don't want soft stories, but stories with plot and backbone." And again this experience showed us that it is only in the teeth of the most violent opposition that a producer can introduce new personalities to the public.

The exhibitor says: "Give us fresh faces, new people." And when we offer them fresh faces and unhackneyed personalities they say: "Why, I never heard of her." Mark you: "I never heard of her." I call it infernal arrogance in any man to assume that the public at large is as ignorant as he is. Sometimes I am inclined to think most exhibitors never go outside their theatres, never read anything but the trade papers and have absolutely no contact with any part of the world that does not come within a radius of ten yards of the box office window.

General Reopening Is At Hand on West Coast

The near approach of a general reopening of motion picture houses in Southern California and adjoining states is indicated by the numerous inquiries received by managers of Los Angeles film exchanges. Exhibitors during the past few days have displayed so much interest in the film market that several groups of salesmen started from Los Angeles to visit theatres of Southern California, Arizona and New Mexico.

Needles and Whittier authorities raised the theatre ban on Monday, November 11, and there was an exodus of film salesmen from Los Angeles to the latter cities on Tuesday. Harry Ballance, manager for Paramount-Artcraft, ordered Charles A. McVictor to start for the Arizona territory on Wednesday, November 13.

W. H. Hepburn, manager for Vitagraph, is preparing to get in touch with exhibitors of his territory. D. S. Mitchell of the Vitagraph offices, started Wednesday, November 13, for San Diego, the Imperial Valley and Arizona. Robert Armador has left the home office in Los Angeles for a trip through Southern California.

New California Opens at Los Angeles Soon

The managers of the New California theatre to be opened in Los Angeles December 2, have sent out invitations to prominent people to act as guests of honor at the opening of this large house. Governor Stephens of California, has been chosen to make the opening address.

Other invitations have gone forward by wire to Jesse L. Lasky of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and William A. Johnston, editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The Artcraft subject, "Arizona," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, has been booked for the opening week, and with this in addition to a news weekly and comedy will be shown the Burlingham Travel series.

The officers of the California Theatre Company are Fred Miller, president and general manager; Harry Leonhart, director of presentation; Bart Bertelson, business manager; W. A. Bishop, managing director, and Roy Miller, director of publicity.

Ten Government Showings for "Under Four Flags"

There will be ten direct Government showings for "Under Four Flags," the latest U. S. Official War Picture issued by the Division of Films. The "official" cities are New York, Washington, Pittsburgh, Kansas City, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Dayton, Philadelphia and Chicago.

The release of the picture to exhibitors throughout the United States will follow. The demand for "Under Four Flags" is reported to be remarkable. In order to meet this demand seventy-five prints of the new film are being made at the laboratories of the Division of Films, and this number, it is expected, will be greatly increased.

Film Folks Entertain Soldiers

Members of Los Angeles Film Colony Entertained Soldiers by Giving Vaudeville Program Every Evening

SOLDIERS in training at Camp Kearny, near San Diego, are every evening given a vaudeville program of two hours' duration by members of the motion picture colony in Los Angeles, through arrangements made by the Motion Picture War Service Association. The entertainment program began on the evening of November 8, when members of the Lasky studio were in charge of the program. Those taking part were Wallace Reid and Dorothy Dalton; Hughie Fay of Sunshine Comedy studios; the vaudeville team of Trimmins and Gore, and the Lasky studio orchestra and Jack Bills.

On Saturday evening William Duncan and Vitagraph Company were in charge of the show. Bill Murphy gave a lariat act; Willie Calles, an Aztec Indian stunt; William Duncan a monologue, and came back in a black-face sketch, and a number of song acts were given by the quartette.

Al Christie staged the show on Monday evening, and was assisted by the Christie new leading woman, Dorothy De Vore and Bobbie Vernon. He took with him a chorus of six dancing girls, and a jazz orchestra of six pieces. There was a solo dance by Marjorie Carville; George Beban told stories, and a monologue was given by Dick Coborn. Major General Shanks, commandant of Camp Kearny, was guest of honor, and following the show the several bands of the camp serenaded the Christie players for a half hour.

Tuesday night Charles Murray was master of ceremonies, and put over a program made up by the Keystone comedians and diving girls. Ben Turpin was there with both eyes, and Chester Conklin proved he could do more than merely pull up his trousers or wipe off his mustache.

Wednesday evening a program was given by Ruth Roland, Harry McCoy, George Beban, William Desmond and four acts from Pantages theatre, which is closed. This program was arranged by Jeanie MacPherson.

The programs will be given each evening at Camp Kearny until the influenza quarantine is lifted. The audience each evening consists of from five to eight thousand men who occupy seats in an ampitheatre built within the confines of the camp, while the stage upon which the entertainment is given is on the outside. Thus the quarantine rules are strictly complied with, All soldiers wear influenza masks during the time they are in the ampitheatre.

Six Join National Association

Six More Companies Joined National Association—Exhibitors to Get Fifty Per Cent Representation .

SIX additional members were received at the quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held November 14th, with President William A. Brady in the schair.

The following companies were elected to membership: Triangle Film Corporation, Photoplay Magazine, Apeda Sudios, U. Ono, John Olsen & Co., Robertson-Cole Company, and the Triangle Distributing Company was reinstated.

It was decided to send a committee of five representing the Assocition to the reconstruction convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which is to be held at Atlantic City, December 4th, 5th and 6th. Mr. Brady appointed the following committee, composed of a representative of each division of the association: Adolph Zukor, Peter J. Schaefer, Ricord Gradwell, Jules Brulatour and James Hoff. All of these gentlemen accepted the appointment and agreed to attend the convention.

One of the most important actions taken was the agreement to amend the by-laws of the association so that the recently amalgamated exhibitors' organizations could receive a 50 per cent. representation on the board of directors and all of the standing and special committees of the association.

As the by-laws can only be amended by a meeting of the members of the entire association on receipt of a twenty-one day notice, it was moved that Peter J. Schaefer be empowered to draft the necessary amendments, which on approval would be submitted to a general meeting of the association to be held on or about December 10th.

Alfred Black of Maine requested the association to go on record as being opposed to the action of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in discriminating against the motion picture theatres of the country in favor of the vaudeville theatres.

Mr. Black described the history of the action of the society in this respect and was empowered to draw up a resolution condemning the discriminatory action of the society, and it was then adopted.

Chaplin Sues Promoters of Alleged Imitator

Charlie Chaplin has filed an action in the Federal court of New York to prevent the exhibition of a picture called "Charlie in the Trenches." He asks that Julian Potash and Isadore Peskov be restrained, by an injunction, from exhibiting the subject at the Crystal Hall Photoplay theatre.

In addition, he is suing the two for $50,000 in damages for the insult to his own name and character by the imitator he charges the two defendants employed to make certain scenes which they have joined with old, patched positive assembled from various of his releases of years ago.

The "fake" Chaplin is considered obviously an attempt to trade on the popularity and reputation of Chaplin's latest comedy, "Shoulder Arms."

THE READER HAS HIS SAY

Texas Exhibitor Declares Motion Picture Business Is on Verge of War

LYRIC THEATRE
Gwynn & Byar, Props.
Terrell, Texas.
November 11, 1918.

Mr. W. A. Johnston,
Editor MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

In regard to your card of recent date beg to advise that I've been a reader of MOTION PICTURE NEWS ever since it's been published under that title and even prior to the date of changing its name, for some five or six years. You will find our subscription listed under Firm name or Theatre on this letterhead. But this part of this communication is for your personal information.

You, of course, know that the Paramount issues a periodical under title of "Paramount Progress Advance," which in itself is a very interesting publication, and is promoted and distributed for the mercenary purpose of self exploitation. The exhibitor who uses Paramount pictures finds considerable in its covers that he can use to good advantage. But this is not what I'm after telling about. The mention of this periodical is by the way of summary that will be found in the ensuing communication. In a copy—November 7, I believe, it was the last issue—was a lengthy article from one Mr. Adolph Zukor, taken from a theatrical paper that few, if any, moving picture exhibitors read, or subscribe for. Mr. Zukor was writing about the Evil of the Manufacturers, Producers and Exhibitors' League, or amalgamation. From time immemorial we've been taught that "In union there's strength," but of course if two unions are organized and they work in opposition the weaker of the two must ultimately fail. The world's war has demonstrated this fact. The strikes of labor organizations have demonstrated it, so we conceded that the strongest party will be victorious. We are on the verge of war in the picture business. The causes of this war will be discussed in much the same terms—in every branch of the service—as is the world's war that is being fought with powder and shells.

WHO STARTED THIS FILM WAR?

The principal defense of the old line companies will be that the Exhibitors started the war, by encroaching on the rights of the Producer. In one sense of the word they will be right. While the exhibitor will contend that the manufacturer or producer started the battle, and they too will be right; and at the same time both will be wrong, as neither have started the fight, that only time can tell of the end. This war is started by some men who, from various causes, have found themselves without jobs. Being familiar with the picture business and its details, they have created positions for themselves, which, according to my view as an exhibitor, will result favorably for the exhibitors, but according to Mr. Zukor, will be of distinct disadvantage to the exhibitor, and reading between the lines of his communication will eventually be put out of business (the firing of the first gun).

With the organization of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and the United Theatres of America, the first gun was fired. With Mr. Zukor's letter comes the retaliatory barrage of defense. The War is on! Who will be Victorious? Mr. Zukor says the old line must go into the exhibiting business to protect its interest, since the exhibitor has become a producer. This carries us back to a period between 1910 and 1912, when a producers' organization had become so strong financially, that it endeavored to dictate the policy of the exhibitor. You remember these days, Mr. Johnston, when your publication looked like it did during the influenza epidemic, then that organization was so strong that it told we exhibitors we must use their service and nothing else. It was their intention to operate all the exchanges; they pretty nearly got that branch of the service. Then they intended to do their exhibiting, thereby gaining control of the entire industry. It failed to materialize, which was broken up by independent producers and the organization of another company. That Big Company is today distributing films and that's about all.

THE REAL CAUSE OF THE WAR

Now comes another octopus that threatens the entire industry with dire vengeance. Not realizing that they themselves are wholly responsible for the existing conditions. They have relied wholly on their autocratic powers to subdue and humiliate the exhibitor who is wholly responsible for their success, and who will ultimately be responsible for their failure. But the exhibitor will have a harder struggle against this organization than against the old one. But the fight had to come. And the exhibitors must become firmly united to drive them to abdication. As this war will include a factor that they didn't have to contend with before. That is the high salaried actor.

He has contracts that must expire before he can join the opposing ranks, and when he leaves his autocratic employers he must come down to earth for a breathing spell before he can enter the ranks of the exhibitor-producer unions. But he will be better off in his new position than in his old one, as his picture must be produced at his own expense and must be up to, or supersede the standard set by the exhibitors. Then if they are worth the million dollar salaries they are demanding they can get them. The exhibitors, under present conditions, have had to bend every effort to make ends meet. Competition in the producers' ranks has not been beneficial to the exhibitor. As one concern, who organized about five years ago, got a corner on the star market, they made these high salaries and then bragged about how much they paid a star, advertising them as a million-dollar beauty, or the man with a hundred-thousand-dollar face. Of course the exhibitor has to pay this, plus a fat excess to support the promoters and pay a long interest on money invested.

THE REMEDY

The remedy has been discovered, and if I'm any criterion, will be the salvation of the exhibitor. With two exhibitors' organizations now operating and ready to operate, the exhibitor begins to see clear sailing ahead. The heads of these organizations know that the exhibitor is responsible for the success of any star. Take an unknown star, put her or him in a picture, their first pictures are the ones that count. If they work in a picture that fits the character, they are a success, if ill-fitted they fail. But if they are a success the news travels fast. They become immediate favorites. Consequently, their pictures immediately advance from 50 to 300 per cent in rentals. They are not sold at the same rate to help balance up a program that loses the exhibitor money daily, but are used as a club to force the exhibitor to take the inferior. In our organizations we see a chance to get away from this, and to obtain an evenly balanced program at a price that is consistent. And then too, when we promote a star we are boosting our own business. As in the case of Charlie Chaplin with First National. At prices we pay for his pictures on our First National contract, we pay less for Chaplin at $1,000,000 salary than we did on a $670,000 salary with the Mutual and his first two pictures are just three or four times as good as any of his previous productions. If Paramount was handling Mr. Chaplin's productions at above mentioned salaries we would be paying in excess of 250 per cent of what we are now paying.

It's these positive proofs that have opened the exhibitors' eyes, and started the unionizing of exhibitors.

Mr. Zukor says Specialization is Insurance. In which instance we can agree with him wholly. And furthermore we can sight him to one of the richest organizations in the United States that was having the same trouble in its earlier days, that his is experiencing right now. The Standard Oil Company, for instance, at one time sold its products to agents to handle for them, but eventually they had to take over the distribution of its products, and it was the making of them. The same is true of the steel corporations—they produce and distribute, and very successfully, but in order to do this they have put in competent men who specialize heads of each department. It would be quite a disgrace to the exhibitors if they couldn't take men who have made their living in this business and discount the methods employed by the old line companies now producing and distributing by at least 100 per cent, and save 1,000 per cent over their slack methods, thus the exhibitor in these two items make 100 per cent profit on rentals on each picture he runs. Thus his franchise is a profitable investment because his franchise costs him money, and this money is used to operate on. He gets the benefit of improved service, reduced rental rates, always knows what his service is going to cost him, as negative cost is figured by percentage allotted him. On the other hand he puts up an advance deposit that the old line operate on and he gets nothing; while in reality a stockholder, his investment is not accruing an earning, he gets no reduction in service but promotes the star through his efforts, and has his rentals increased. He's the goat.

Mr. Zukor says under the Exhibitors-Producers plan if $100,000 will make a picture that will get the money he won't spend $125,000 making that picture, even if the type of picture requires that amount. But he has evidently not acquainted himself with the facts that the exhibitor has established a standard that the producing end must meet. And it's a cinch that the Paramount has no adopted standard for even their highest class pictures, as some are so sorry (mediocre) that we exhibitors hide when our patrons come out. They can pick up most every trade journal and read the opinion of the reviewers, and will find the criticism of their pictures most unfavorable. They have three stars that are now working on their reputation, and unless they are worked in more popular subjects than the recent releases, their popularity is going to fail. We exhibitors see it and our patrons see it. We see the $100-a-week star forcing the higher priced star out of his popularity. Business judgment prompts me to withhold the names of some I have in mind. If I mentioned them it would only be the means of encouraging the exchanges to tack on an additional 50 per cent rental fee. We exhibitors will gladly take on any of the old lines as competitors and unless they improve their present service they will be easy competition, and some of us small town exhibitors will buy some expensive equipment cheap at a sheriff's sale.

Before they've been in the exhibiting business very long but as in all things we must give credit, where credit is due, Mr. Zukor certainly forced all competing producers to improve their service, and thereby did a great thing for the exhibitors in general. And if he had only had foresight enough to take the exhibitor in as a silent partner and furnished him $10 features at $10 instead of boosting them to $30 or $40 or even $50 he wouldn't have had occasion to be making this Holler. Like other autocratic crowned heads he feels himself slipping.

Respectfully,

A Whale of a Wail from a Small Town Exhibitor with a Big Town Voice

Leesburg, Ohio.
November 16, 1918.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

This is a wail of anguish from a real SMALL town exhibitor.

The agony is caused by the notice from the First National, of which I am a franchise holder, regarding the signing of the Pickford contract.

That was the final straw. The First National was grasped by many as a straw to save the little fellows from being exterminated. Now they go to work and buy pictures that will cost more than the F. P. Lasky Pickford's cost. It means increased prices for Pickford productions, and as Mary is losing out in many places, it simply can't be done.

Further, it was sure an awful "bull." Every star in the country will now hold out forever and figure themselves at about 200 per cent their actual worth. It looks to me like the beginning of the end.

Frankly, I am worried and about ready "to fly the coop."

Would like to see your comment on the action of the First National. They seem to feel that they can buy anything at any price and then turn to the franchise holders and say "cough up!"

Yours truly,
(Signed) CARROLL E. KING.

P. S.—It was a nice thing to "pull" right at the hour when the industry is striving for a downward revision of the taxes.

Airman Killed After Making Scenes for Rapf

A few days after he had completed a series of daring stunts for the Harry Rapf photoplay production, "Wanted for Murder," shortly to be released, Allen Adams, a United States Government air pilot, attached to the ordnance department, was killed at Central Park, L. I., Monday, November 18, when his plane, in which he had just started on a flight, became unmanageable and crashed to the ground.

Elaine Hammerstein is featured in the Rapf production and Frank Crane directed it.

When Madge Kennedy left the stage and joined the Goldwyn forces she was already one of the most brilliant personalities, one of the most popular personalities, one of the best advertised personalities on the American stage. But some of these exhibitors that I have been describing never had heard of her! And so they did not want even to give their public a chance to decide for itself.

They didn't know what they were talking about. They had never asked their public what it wanted and they were not even of the mind to let their public determine for itself what it wanted. And to prove how little they knew about it, within three months Goldwyn had to increase the number of its prints on all Madge Kennedy productions, including those already issued and she was firmly and permanently established in popular favor.

And within six months the tide had definitely turned in favor of comedy dramas and not less than four producers were breaking their necks to find comedy-drama stories and to develop comedy-drama stars. Had we taken exhibitor personal prejudices as accurately representing popular tastes there would not have been a screen Madge Kennedy, for she would have returned to the stage where intelligent audiences would have maintained her in high favor for the rest of her natural life.

Not only that—there would be no Douglas Fairbanks, no Marguerite Clark—the public would still be seeing the worn out favorite stars of ten years ago, the hackneyed blood and thunder melo, if we had listened to the exhibitors.

So able an exhibitor as Samuel Rothapfel, who has developed the musical side of motion picture presentation to its highest stage, cannot overcome the handicap of defective or weak features by musical brilliancies.

There is nothing fundamentally or generally wrong with the large producers in the motion picture industry and there is a great deal that is basically and drastically wrong with the exhibitors in the industry, including some of the larger ones—as large as Mr. Roth.

A number of the large exhibitors have, individually or in concert, determined to see if they can starve the producers of pictures. If they succeed they will destroy the picture business as a national pastime and amusement. In certain cities an exhibitor has gained what amounts to "control" of his town; he has obtained the three or four, or the two leading houses where first-runs are presented.

And in many cases his first step is to say: "Now that I have this town sewed up producers will get $25 or $50 a day for pictures and no more." Duplicate this in twenty or thirty cities; seek to choke off the first-run revenues of the better type of producers by this species of arbitrary control of the amusement of a community and see what happens.

In the course of time—and not a very long time, either—that city and all other cities will be getting $25 and $50 pictures in quality in place of the expensive productions they are now receiving.

The producer who has been making these expensive and commendably fine productions will cut his pattern to fit the cloth; he will make, from a point of cost and expense, the kind of pictures that he can rent to the exhibitor at his starvation prices arbitrarily set and when that day comes the exhibitor himself will starve to death from lack of patronage.

You cannot permanently feed appetites that demand the best food on coarse, cheaper food—not in the United States of America.

I have in mind two such towns at the present moment. Exhibitors who do this are not business men; they are in business for a quick clean-up at the expense of any and everybody and especially at the expense of their fellow exhibitors.

But for the few producers of the costlier, better quality pictures there would not be a motion picture business today; there wouldn't be any theatres like the New York Rialto, Rivoli and Strand and Mr. Roth's own California theatre. The United States would be a nation full of "store-shows"; of converted buildings; of blood and thunder entertainment in the same degree of disrepute that burlesque once was.

Exhibitors cannot fill their theatres and make a profit with the little so-called "stars" and with cheaper pictures. If the four largest producing companies at present in the industry did not produce a single picture in the next twelve months and the stars whose services are controlled by these four companies remained inactive for the same period of time there would be from five to eight thousand cases of exhibitor bankruptcy in the United States.

Their business would shrivel up and disappear overnight. They couldn't exist on the average pictures and on personalities created by publicity instead of by popular affection.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH.

"Czar" Censor May Come Back

Pennsylvania Exhibitor and Distributors Fear That Recent Election Results May Bring J. Louis Breitinger Back

HARRISBURG, PA.—The chances for the return of "Czar" J. Louis Breitinger as head of the Pennsylvania State Board of Motion Picture Censors loom stronger since the election of Senator William G. Sproul as Governor of the State in the November voting. Indeed, representatives of the picture interests in Pennsylvania are agog with speculation as to whether the former chief censor, who was criticised so widely for his arbitrary methods and who was deposed by Governor Brumbaugh, in connection with the factional fight within the Republican party, will be able to get back into the harness, since the Penrose-Sproul faction, with which he is so strongly allied, has got back into control.

It is pointed out in this connection that Breitinger is an out-and-out Penrose man, with respect to politics, and that United States Senator Penrose is the head of the Republican faction that fought the Brumbaugh wing of the party and succeeded in electing Sproul as Governor this fall. Moreover, Breitinger is said to be a close personal friend of Penrose, in addition to being a political ally, and there isn't any disputing the fact that Governor Brumbaugh ousted Breitinger as chief censor because of the latter's close relations with Penrose. Breitinger is known to have a strong ambition to get back into the position of head censor, and in fact in the last session of the Legislature he tried to have a law passed that would have created a State Bureau of Amusements, in the hope that he would be made the head of it, but the measure was defeated.

It is practically certain that at least two of the three members of the present censorship board will be ousted when Sproul takes the gubernatorial chair. These are Chairman Frank R. Shattuck and Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer—both Philadelphians and both close personal friends of Governor Brumbaugh.

While the appointments of these two men never were looked upon as political appointments they have, nevertheless, been classed as distinctively Brumbaugh men and there have been several occasions, since they have been members of the board, that the board has openly clashed with interests known to be friendly with the Penrose facton. It is practically conceded, therefore, that when the Governor-elect, who won with the Penrose backing, begins to seek places as rewards for men of the faction that elected him, Shattuck and Oberholtzer will be among those numerous friends of Governor Brumbaugh, among the present State office holders, who will be listed for the discard.

Rights to "Mickey" Sold in Many Territories

The rights to "Mickey" for the New England territory have been bought by the Boston Photoplay Company of Boston, Mass., and for Wisconsin by the Wisconsin Film Company of Milwaukee, Wis.

First National Exhibitors' Circuit of New Jersey have acquired the rights to "Mickey" for New Jersey, and Magnet Film Exchange of New York City control the rights to "Mickey" for New York State, including Greater New York.

On Monday night, November 18th, "Mickey" was shown for the first time, at the Regent theatre, Paterson, N. J. In spite of unfavorable rainy weather, it is declared that the Regent theatre did the biggest business in the history of that theatre. The theatre was said to be filled to capacity all day, and "Mickey" was shown to over eight thousand people—a record that not even the Chaplin productions has equaled, according to an official of the W. H. Company.

Bushman and Bayne in a Romantic Drama

Unusual interest has been manifested throughout the entire industry in the Vitagraph announcement that it will release early next year a super-feature starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. The name and character of the production has not been announced, but it is intimated that it is a romantic drama.

The play was written by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, who have collaborated on all of the Vitagraph serials and other productions on the Vitagraph program.

The entire production is being made under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith. Henry Houry, actor, director and playwright, is the director of the feature.

The Vitagraph Company has assembled a supporting cast of what they term extraordinary strength. L. Roger Lytton, for many years prominent in Vitagraph features; Jean Paige, O. Henry star and Blue Ribbon favorite; Charles Kent and Julia Swayne Gordon, two of Vitagraph's best known players, are but a few of the outstanding members of the cast.

Vitagraph Announces Its December 2 Program

The Vitagraph program of releases for the week of December 2 has been scheduled as follows:

Blue Ribbon feature, five parts, "The Dawn of Understanding," featuring Bessie Love. From the Frohman play, "Sue," made famous by Annie Russell, adapted from Bret Harte's story, "The Judgment of Bolinas Plains." Directed by David Smith.

Serial, two parts, "The Whirling Trap," episode No. 7 of "The Iron Test," featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway. Written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Directed by Paul Hurst.

Big "V" special comedy, "Humbugs and Husbands," featuring Larry Semon. Directed by Larry Semon.

Chaplin Plays Opposition in Atlanta to Tune of a Lawsuit

ATLANTA, GA.—While Charlie Chaplin was delighting thousands of Atlantians in his latest release, "Shoulder Arms," at the Criterion and also the Forsyth theatre, the managers of these two houses were in Judge Pendleton's court where a legal fight was being waged over the double showing.

The fight was caused by Jake Wells, lessee of the Forsyth, applying for an injunction to prevent the picture being shown at the Criterion theatre and also to prevent future Chaplin releases being shown there.

The action was brought by Mr. Wells against the First National Exhibitors' Association, the Criterion theatre, Sig Samuels and W. C. Patterson. All were made parties to the suit. Mr. Wells set forth that he was being injured financially and that his contract, which read for the city of Atlanta, gave him the exclusive right to play the picture. His contract was made last March, while that of the Criterion was made in August. Affidavits were presented from distributors to the effect that by customs and rules, the contract that Mr. Wells had for the Chaplin releases entitled him to the first run privileges in Atlanta.

On the other hand, the management of the Criterion held that while Mr. Wells had a contract for these releases, that it was not a contract for the exclusive showing and that the Criterion had the right to run these pictures as soon as released.

Southern Officials View "Beyond the Law"

Many applications have already been received for "Beyond the Law," according to Emmett Dalton, general manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, producers of that picture which was made for the state rights market.

The premiere showing was scheduled for Wurlitzer hall, New York City, November 26. The picture was in eight reels originally, but has been cut down to six fast moving reels.

At a private showing of the picture before officials of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, favorable comment was made on the production. The officials express themselves as highly satisfied with the work of Emmett Dalton, who not only appeared in the leading role, but also supervised the production under the direction of Theodore Marsten.

Mildred Evelyn Wetherell Dies in Canada

While M. P. Wetherell, manager of the Rex and Auditorium theatres at Cranbrook, British Columbia, recovered from an attack of influenza, his little ten-year-old daughter, Mildred, succumbed to pneumonia.

Mildred Evelyn Wetherell passed away November 3 and is mourned by not only the father and mother, but by a host of friends in the theatrical and motion picture profession.

Frank Keenan Forms Producing Company

Frank Keenan, who for the past year has been making features for and under contract with Pathe Exchange, has inaugurated a new company, the Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., and will, in future, produce independently. During the coming year he plans to make eight pictures and has already entered into an arrangement whereby Pathe will distribute these pictures. Mr. Keenan entered the field of independent producers convinced that under his own management he could make better pictures. Various drawbacks that attend the star and producer who produces on a time basis will be dispensed with, according to Mr. Keenan.

Mr. Keenan will leave New York for the coast immediately, where he will begin work at the Robert Brunton studios. Ernest Warde will be his director while Jack Cunningham will have charge of the preparation of scenarios. Both these men have been affiliated with him in the production of his Pathe pictures. His first effort in the independent field will be "The Wild Cat," a Saturday Evening Post story by Albert Payson Terhune. Its leading character is a crude Cumberland mountaineer, a man whose patriotism and love of country is awakened through a peculiar series of circumstances. The role is said to provide Mr. Keenan with wonderful working material.

In an interview to the trade press previous to his departure for the coast, Mr. Keenan told his plans in full. They are plans which, faithfully carried out, will tend to the general betterment of motion picture production. "I am willing to make less money at the start," he said, "rather than injure my reputation by haphazard production by working for a company that demands pictures on schedule. The average program feature of the day is deprived of half its chance of being a success when the producers rush it through on schedule. It shows none of the forethought or imagination that comes with the revamping and revision of the 'script that it is the prerogative of the independent producer to give to it. With my own pictures I intend to work them through on no schedule. Not one of them will leave my hands until it measures satisfactorily with expectations enterained for it before it was put in production."

Mr. Keenan complimented Pathe Exchange on its system of disribution, saying that he was glad his product would go out through a house that did not demand of the exhibitor that he take his whole program or none of it. "In all my dealings with Pathe," he said, "I have never had occasion to complain. It is only that I believe by being my own boss in the production end of the art that I can better both myself and all those with whom I am affiliated either in the distribution or the exhibiting end."

Neilan Directs Pickford

Mary Pickford has leased space at the Sunset Studios in Los Angeles and has begun production work on "Daddy Long-Legs." Marshall Neilan is directing the picture.

Fairbanks in Four Days Gets $26,000,000

When Douglas Fairbanks, the acrobatic Artcraft star, pledged himself to raise $25,000,000 for the United War Work campaign, there were some skeptics who thought he became a little over-enthusiastic. However, on the fourth day of his transcontinental tour in behalf of the War Work drive, he exceeded the amount pledged by a million dollars, according to telegraphic information received by the campaign officials in New York City.

Fairbanks started his personal drive ahead of the official opening, opening at Washington on Friday. Here he received a special message from President Wilson, to deliver to the people along the route of his tour. After the opening ceremonies Doug addressed a large meeting and then started for Charlotte, N. C., where he arrived Saturday. Spartansburg, S. C., was the next stop, then Greenville, S. C., and Atlanta, Ga., all on Saturday.

At each city military bands and special police details met the Artcraft star and local civic officials conducted him to specially erected platforms near the train depots. One of the most notable demonstrations took place at Atlanta on Saturday night.

In rapid succession he covered the following cities in much the same manner until at the end of the fourth day he had passed the $25,000,000 set for himself, New Orleans, Tucson and Los Angeles.

Little Anna Mead Active in Patriotic Work

Little Anna Mead, called the world's youngest heroine and picture player, feels that she has surely done her bit after appearing at thirty-two benefits for soldiers, sailors, Red Cross, etc., and then marching in the Lambs' Club.

She is said to have been one of the star collectors for the Lambs and Friars in the great United War Work drive and will take up her picture work again after the holidays.

Hart Studios First in Bond Drive

The announcement was made this week from Los Angeles that the William S. Hart studio was the first of the Los Angeles colony to be 100 per cent American in the Fourth Liberty Loan drive. Every employee bought bonds even before Hart came East in behalf of the drive. The star purchased $30,000 worth of bonds in Los Angeles and $48,000 worth while on his speaking tour.

Influenza Claims Two

Influenza again entered the motion picture industry last week and claimed additional victims.

It was reported by wire from Los Angeles that Weyland Trask, Mack Sennett's big comedian, died November 18 of influenza.

Charles Grogg, owner of four principal theatres at Bakersfield, Cal., died on November 17 of the disease.

Miscellaneous Notes

Henry Lehrman, creator of Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies, has engaged Charles Avery and Billy Watson to make two-reel laughs under his supervision. In the new cast will be Glen Cavanaugh, Vera Stedman, Jack Cooper and George Ovey.

Echo Delane, the heroine of the popular Pathe serial, "Hands Up," played by Ruth Roland, does some breathless high jumping and diving in the 13th instalment of Gilson Willets' romance.

Public school superintendents in various cities are showing a practical interest in the latest Jewel production, "The Yellow Dog."

Margaret McWade, who plays Nurse Cavell in the Screen Classics, Inc., super-feature, "The Great Victory," was the heroine in the first motion picture with human characters ever flashed on the screen in America.

In the fifth Paramount-Flagg Comedy, "Perfectly Fiendish Flanagan" or "The Hart of the Dreadful West," Mr. Flagg portrays the part of "Fiendish Flanagan," the terror of Bitten Ear, Nev.

More than 100 soldiers and sailors were used in a scene by Director Frank Lloyd in the newest William Farnum photoplay, temporarily named "For Freedom."

A forthcoming group of Wolfville Tales by Alfred Henry Lewis will have, besides the casts regularly playing these two-reel serio-comic adventures of the West, a new leading woman in Nell Shipman.

Four Mae Murray special productions are being cut and titled at Universal City under the supervision of Robert Z. Leonard, while the little star is enjoying a much needed rest.

Twenty-five influenza-proof children took part in the schoolroom scene in "Faith," a new photoplay starring Bert Lytell, on the stage of Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

Among the various novel roles that have been entrusted to Enid Bennett, the Thomas H. Ince star in Paramount pictures, none, it is asserted, have been more interesting than that afforded her in "Fuss and Feathers."

The most absorbing and thrilling Ivan Abramson picture ever screened is the public's verdict concerning "Ashes of Love," the latest release of the Graphic Film Corporation, according to a Graphic official.

The only motion picture house in Port o' Spain, Trinidad, a British possession off the northern coast of South America, has signed a contract with the Fox Film Corporation.

"String Beans," Charles Ray's new Paramount picture from the Ince studios, isn't a farming story, but it has to do with a rural community.

Arrangements have been completed by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, whereby schools, colleges and other educational institutions throughout the United States may secure the Official War Review at a minimum charge from any Pathe Exchange.

Joe Ryan, playing in the support of William Duncan in Vitagraph serials, was elated when Miss Helen Marjorie Ingersoll, also of the Vitagraph Company, consented to become Mrs. Joe W. Ryan, Jr., and the couple were married in Merced, Cal.

"Here Comes the Bride" was John Barrymore's first Paramount picture after the five weeks' closing. It is adapted from the play by the same title. Max Marcin & Roy Atwell were the authors of the play and Charles Whitaker has written the scenario.

Jane and Katherine Lee, the little William Fox stars, have arrived at Los Angeles. The children were preceded by their director, Arvid E. Gillstrom, who directed the last two Lee pictures, "Swat the Spy!" and "Tell It to the Marines."

Monroe Salisbury, star of "Hugon, the Mighty," "That Devil, Bateese," "The Guilt of Silence," "The Red, Red Heart," etc., has an unusually strong role in his latest Bluebird production, "Breathes There a Man," based on the magazine story by George Hull.

Paramount believes that Bryant Washburn has been so successful in his first two pictures for them, "The Gypsy Trail" and "The Way of a Man with a Maid," that he will again score with his third picture, "Venus in the East," a Saturday Evening Post story.

Extends Limit on Old Cases

Time Limit for Use of Old Style Telescopic Shipping Cases Extended to Next July by Government

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has just received an official notice from the Bureau of Explosives in the form of a letter from W. S. Topping, assistant chief inspector, that the time limit for the use of the old style telescopic shipping cases has been extended for six months or until July 1, 1919.

According to the amended regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission relative to the shipment of explosives and other inflammable material the period during which the cases now being used by the motion picture industry ended December 1, 1918. The new regulations called for a case radically different in style and construction from those now being used.

Motion picture companies are therefore advised that they may continue using the cases they now have on hand provided they are in good condition for an additional six months after December 1.

The prompt and effective manner in which the Bureau of Explosives acted in this serious predicament of the motion picture industry is due entirely to the active efforts of Assistant Chief Inspector Topping and to him the thanks of the industry are due, for shipping cases are one of those tremendous trifles that permits the business to continue in existence.

Following is the letter from Mr. Topping:

"Mr. F. H. Elliott,
Executive Secretary, National Association of the Motion Picture Industry,
"Times Building, New York.

"Dear Mr. Elliott:

"Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of November 15 with reference to the moving picture container, and I beg to advise that information has been received from the Commission in response to my request that on November 14th the note to paragraph 43 was amended so that it now reads as follows:

"'Shipping containers complying with Rule 43 (a) effective October 1, 1914, and purchased prior to May 15, 1918, may be used for the shipment of motion picture film until July 1, 1919, provided that they are securely closed and in good condition, and provided further that if fitted with telescopic covers, the covers fit tightly against the shoulder of the box body.

"'Leather or web straps if used must be in good condition and tightly fastened.

"'String or rope must not be used.'

"You will note from the foregoing that the time limit within which the old telescopic packages can be used, subject to certain requirements has been extended to July 1, 1919.

"Respectfully yours,
"(Signed) W. S. Topping,
"Asst. Chief Inspector."

Exhibitor Service Bureau

How McCormick Does It

We Repeat Many Things We Have Said, with the Proof That Advertising with Every Force Pays

S. BARRET McCORMICK is writing a series of mighty fine advertising articles for this department, but he has failed to cover the situation as he should because of his own modesty. Last week we printed three specimens of the displays that he used in putting over "Shoulder Arms," but the entire campaign is so illuminative of the why and the wherefore of advertising and so fully covers many of the points that we have tried to bring out from time to time that we are going into the matter much more fully here.

While these observations may seem more or less random, let us call your attention to some of the things that we have been saying to you week after week.

Keep advertising your offering every day. Don't be content to put in a big Sunday display and let it go at that expecting a small "card" to carry you for the rest of the engagement.

Make your advertising different every day, and then it will get more attention. Don't count on the reader seeing one display and then making up his mind to see your production, but bring the remainder back to him every day, and in a different way.

Take advantage of every event to keep your exploitation right up to the minute. Make your advertising as live as the news on the front page. Connect it with the news every chance you get, and the results will be greater.

No matter how great the star is, you have to sell each picture. The time has passed when the public will come to see merely a specific player. They want to know something about the production. They are not buying a pig in a sack any more.

And you will remember that we have said several times with particular emphasis lately relative to advertising two productions equally:

It can't be done.

We might recall a lot of other things that we have said about the use of cuts, of different ones, of always using the name plate of the theatre, the employment of plenty of white space and so on.

Let us say that this campaign on "Shoulder Arms" represents the ideal way of following all those suggestions and it stands out even among the splendid work that Mr. McCormick has done with other productions.

Now on account of the period for which his theatre was closed on account of the influenza, McCormick got "Shoulder Arms" during the week that it became so evident that the Huns were "all in" and in fact he was playing the picture when the false news of the signing of the armistice came in.

Now don't say that this was "just luck." Without making invidious comparisons we have seen the advertising of some other very big theatres that were running the picture during the same time that McCormick had it, and they had the same chances to take advantage of the news on the first page as he did, but they didn't, some of them for various reasons. In one case the manager was limited by space and couldn't use extra space to cover the current events, yet there isn't the slightest doubt that the owners of the theatre would have had much more with which to meet the income tax had they permitted more freedom. But that is aside from the subject.

Last week we printed the first three advertisements that McCormick used on this picture. If you didn't study them carefully get out your copy of the Motion Picture News for November 23 and take a look at them. And, incidentally, if you failed to read McCormick's own article in that issue, now's the time. The first of these displays was carried when the papers were full of the declaration that the surrender of the Germans must be unconditional, the second on the day when there was strong protest against any "soft peace" and the third when the reports began to pile up that the kaiser wanted to quit mighty badly.

On the opposite page we have reproduced some more of the advertising of the series. "Captured the Town" was the fourth in the series, and it reflected the news on the front page that the Americans had captured Sedan. You can appreciate how quickly every reader got the reference in this display and how closely it fitted in. And note the secondary line, "ask any of yesterday's happy prisoners," meaning, of course, those who had seen the picture at the Circle. This was the day after the picture had opened and the space used was 6½ inches across three columns.

On Tuesday, you will remember there were reports that the kaiser had left Germany and so McCormick used 10½ inches across three columns with the caption, "Boy, Page Kaiser Bill."

The six-inch double-column display headed "Bulgarian Austria" was run the day after Austria gave in and the three-column seven-inch display in the lower left-hand corner headed "To Let" was used the day that the United Press carried the false report that Germany had signed the armistice. Now McCormick had been anticipating this news and had had the cut prepared and the whole display in readiness in the newspaper offices for release when the news came.

Similarly the two-column six-inch display headed, "Germany, See Foch," was used the day that the Allies told the Germans that the generalissimo had the armistice terms.

There are two more of these displays that merit especial attention. One of these is printed in the lower right-hand corner and is headed "Camouflage." In this McCormick used one of the Goldberg cartoons that had appeared in one of the local papers on "the old guy who would admit he likes Charlie Chaplin and blames it on his little son who doesn't know what it is all about." When that appeared in the paper McCormick clipped it and put it in his file for use when he would show the Chaplin film. And then all he had to do was to dig it out. No luck about that.

Now for a final advertisement on the Chaplin picture and the announcement of the feature for the next week let us commend the three-column six-inch advertisement headed "Goodbye Charlie, Hello Doug." You will note the clever way that the announcement is put and the fact that the weight of the display is still on the current attraction and at the same time the announcement of the Fairbanks picture goes over with its proper emphasis.

The other displays were carried during the run of the picture and may be called rather general, though each one of them was carefully linked up with the events on the other side of the water.

Now taking up first the last of the conclusions with which we started this article, let us call your attention that McCormick did not once try to pull any of this "Great Double Bill" stuff though he had an excellent feature in Madge Kennedy in "The Kingdom of Youth."

He simply figured out which was the attraction to pull in the business and played that. We have told you that is the thing to do even though the two attractions are of such equal merit that you cannot tell which is the best. Pick one of them and go to it and make the second announcement secondary. You cannot advertise two pictures equally without weakening your entire appeal.

Now the Madge Kennedy announcement has not been the slightest weakened by the fact that Chaplin has been featured. In fact the clever way that McCormick attracted attention to this play probably resulted in more people reading the Kennedy announcement than would have done so had it been the thing advertised.

In the three advertisements run before the opening of the bill Mr. McCormick did use cuts on the Madge Kennedy picture, but at the bottom of the display and the Chaplin portion was far the dominant part. And so the "Boy, Page Kaiser Bill" display also carried a cut which is only partially shown in the reproduction. But with the rest, when the size of the displays went down the "Kingdom of Love" had to be content with mere type.

We have said that no matter how popular the star, you have to sell each picture, if you want to get the most patronage out of it. Obviously the linking up of "Shoulder Arms" with the war and peace news was the best way in the world to sell it. After the public had read the big headlines on the front page, you don't have to go and repeat the obvious in your displays. You will note that there is always humor in these displays, but that the lines coupled the picture up with the serious news just as well as if the story had been told again in the advertising columns—and better, for they said, in so many words, "Now that you have read the serious news of the war come and laugh at the funny side of it with Charlie Chaplin in the trenches."

Certainly the obvious is the thing to always avoid. We don't mean to mystify the public about a picture, but there are some exhibitors who think that they have to diagram every little point. It's like the fellow who tells a joke and before he gives the other man a chance to laugh starts in and explains the point. The public doesn't appreciate being considered "wooden-headed." It likes to "get things," and you needn't worry about the public doing its part if you do yours.

How many of you have a nice design made for your Sunday paper, hit the picture a big smash and expect it to go over at that. Now it is admitted that Chaplin is about the biggest drawing card in the industry and certainly the news that was coming from the battlefields might be expected to lend unusual interest to this particular production. Using the card system, an exhibitor might well expect to do very unusual business on this.

But that is not the way that McCormick does his advertising. He went after this business every day. The smallest display that he used was 3½ inches double column and this was well toward the end of the run. Because he packed the people into his theatre today and expected to do the same thing tomorrow he did not drop his advertising to a few lines—for he wanted to insure that he would do capacity business the next day and thereafter.

It is not so very far from Indianapolis to another big city where an exhibitor some time ago had a very sensational picture. It was packing them into his theatre and he stopped advertising for the rest of the week. At that he broke his house record and after that he was harder than ever to convince of the value of advertising. He wouldn't listen to the solicitors for the newspapers and it wasn't till another big picture came along which he had to book on a percentage basis with the owners of the paper conducting the advertising campaign. When, on Tuesday, the owner continued to do big advertising the local manager almost went wild over the money that was being "thrown away." The picture wasn't as good a one as the first had been, but twice as much was spent on advertising and the result at the end of the week was that the net receipts were some $800 above the previous record.

The simple reason for that: Before the theatre had been doing capacity business in the evenings, but not so in the afternoon or morning hours. The constant advertising on the second picture convinced a whole lot more that they simply had to see the offering and therefore they came when they could get in and filled the house where there had been many empty seats before.

There is only one comparison with the man who stops advertising when he is doing big business—and that is with the "gent" who went out and chopped the head off the goose.

Yes, your Sunday display is valuable, but don't count on the people remembering it all the week. And remember that you want to achieve the cumulative effect in advertising. A man will read your display on Sunday and conclude that it is a picture he wants to see and that he will go some time during the week. But he may forget it, or he may be only half sold, but if you keep hammering at him every day he's mighty sure to make up his mind that this is a production he simply cannot miss and you'll have him down occupying a seat that otherwise would have been vacant.

To do this best you should have a different display each day. If you will turn back to the Chaplin displays you will see that McCormick has used the same cut only once, and then in different sizes, but the reading matter has been different..

McCormick didn't say to himself: "That's a mighty good advertisement I had today, so I'll let it run again tomorrow." For he knew that the people who had read the advertisement yesterday and whom he had not pulled immediately to his theatre would not read the same advertisement if he repeated it. But he did figure that if he used a different display they would be much more apt to read it and that they would be drawn still closer to the box office.

That is the only proper method to get hundred per cent results, no matter what others may tell you. The directory style of advertising is far, far better than nothing at all, but it does not put the selling arguments forward. It simply holds up to the public what you have, in the spirit of take it or leave it. The McCormick style, says, but politely, in so many words, "Come here, you," and then goes out and gets the patron by the nape of the neck and lands him in the theatre, by the power of the displays themselves.

Ample white space is evidenced in all of these display. As a rule the type has been comparatively small. The cuts have mainly told the story, but he has not been afraid to use sentences in small type, but he always avoids as much verbiage as possible though he does not hesitate to use it when it forms the basis for the selling argument of the picture.

We want to call your attention to one other thing. You will never find McCormick dropping the designed name plate of his theatre. Sometimes it may be worked in as a part of the rest of the pictorial display or into the border, but the name plate will be there, its own distinctive self, just the same.

In closing, let us repeat that these are all things that we have told you before at one time or other. But too few exhibitors are following them week after week, and here was such a splendid opportunity to illustrate the correct way of doing all of these things that we have reproduced this campaign, at the peril of repetition.

Here's Impetus For Small City Managers

By H. J. Thacher
Manager, Strand Theatre, Salina, Kan.

IN your letter in which you have asked what I think every exhibitor should do to do more for his theatre and what he is lacking, I am going to give you what I think is my idea of a practical exhibitor.

First permit me to state that every exhibitor should be in a position to know just what his class or clientele demand in the way of entertainment. By this I mean he should know just what type of photoplays that are in demand.

After the proper selection of the class of photoplay required he must not stop, thinking that he is through as far as he is concerned.

He must next turn his attention to the publicity matter furnished with the photoplay and give the production the right publicity, and should he find that the exchange has not furnished the right kind of material to gain the right publicity, it is up to the exhibitor to obtain the right material even if he must go to the expense of making his own cuts and posters.

Prepares His Own Posters

Many a time the writer has been thoroughly disgusted with the material sent out as "publicity matter" by the exchanges, and has gone to the expense of making up cuts and posters of my own design, and I can say that in every instance I have been surprised at the wonderful results thus obtained.

After the proper attention to the exploiting of the picture in the newspapers, the next step must be to the musical setting and also the stage setting for the presentation of the picture. I know that there are many of the exhibitors in the small towns that would not want to go to the expense of special stage settings for many of the bigger productions; however, I have found that by either purchasing the setting or by making one myself that I can charge higher admission prices, which will more than recompense me for the amount expended for these settings.

With the display of the setting for each presentation there of course should be the proper musical theme to give the patrons the atmosphere of the story soon to unfold before them.

H. J. Thatcher

It is the duty of the exhibitor to see that the picture must have absolutely the very best of projection and the proper musical program, and even though the writer is not a musician, I have always made it a point to select the proper music to accompany the picture. While I do trust the judgment of my employees, there are times when you cannot permit such an important matter to be handled other than by yourself. And always on such occasions I have had complimentary remarks from my patrons stating how well the music blended in with the picture.

Spending Money Brings It

You will find that many of the exhibitors will say that the added expense of the newspaper cuts, the expense of stage settings, and the fact that they are not musicians will not permit them to do these things.

The added cost of the making of special newspaper cuts will take care of itself. If an exhibitor cannot afford to buy special stage settings let him make them himself. The most striking setting that I have had was used in conjunction with "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and at a cost of about $5. The idea used in this was a tableau at the finish of the picture, presented "Liberty" in the center, with four soldiers on each side, while in the back a huge flag (which I borrowed) dropped from the top and formed a background for the group, accompanied by "The Star Spangled Banner." The matter of selecting the musical program is up to every exhibitor; he can tell just what sort of music must accompany each scene, and there are times when this cannot be trusted to anyone else.

AND BACK OF ALL THESE LITTLE THINGS HE MUST SEE THAT EACH AND EVERY ONE OF HIS EMPLOYEES MUST BE COURTEOUS

YOU CAN DO IT

Small City Manager Shows that It Pays to Do Things

SALINA, Kan., has a census population of only 11,354, but it has in the Strand a theatre that is really doing things because it has a manager who is live and up to date and who believes in going out and getting the business.

Some of the things that Mr. Thacher says here you have heard before, but what he says is not mere advice. He has done these things himself and we can assure you that there is not the slightest doubt about the success that he has scored.

Too many exhibitors simply pass up things that others are doing, saying that it is the work of a big city and they cannot afford it. Salina is not a "big city," it hasn't a big territory to draw from and its people are just the usual run of Americans.

He has made the Strand the Rialto of his section. You can do the same in yours if you have the will.

Every line of this is mighty well worth your reading.

Your Idea and Ours

AN opportunity overlooked. That is our only conclusion of this five inch double column advertisement of the Republic theatre, Jacksonville, Fla. Here the manager used part of an advertisement prepared by the Goldwyn offices, carefully trimming off the sales argument on the picture and then, through contrasty type, actually playing up the Bill Parsons picture.

With all due regard to every one who had anything to do with this, we believe that the line "Tremendous drama of redemption" means mighty little. The way it is used here, and with nothing more to it, it is likely to scare a lot of people away from the theatre. There are a lot of the hoi polloi who will conclude that this is "high brow" stuff and they will hie themselves away to the next house down the street. Where is the real selling argument of the picture? "When in danger he always smiled." Why not tell something about the picture itself? It is not "high brow"; there hasn't been a more human creation on the screen. Why hide the fact?

Put "pep" in every show and your theatre will digest more patrons.

SAY, friend, you overlooked something here. There was a little space just above the knot in Mae Marsh's hair and below the word "Picture" where you might have crowded something in. Otherwise you did a mighty good job in filling it up. And with all of that we'll have to admit that it isn't such a bad advertisement.

The sales talks are excellent, the house idea is kept dominant, the rule work is well done and the cut is attractive. The worst thing that mars the general appearance is the Bert Lytell announcement in the lower left hand corner. That space should have been left clear by all means.

We would have much preferred to have made the entire display on the Mae Marsh picture and to have mentioned the other two attractions in very small type at the bottom. We would also have pulled the rules in at the top and the left and so allowed the lines to stand out all the more.

But, all in all, it is a display that proves the exception. We wouldn't advise following the example, but it is really a good example of using every bit of the white space and getting away with it. Isis theatre, Houston, Texas, did this in six inches across three columns.

A ham sandwich may not be as heavy as a banquet, but it can be as appetizing; and so can your theatre be as interesting as the biggest.

SINCE the advent of the war pictures there has been a lot of "playing with titles." There have been any number of cases where theatres have used the titles of other pictures than the one that they were playing. Of course, they fit more or less with the offering. Here is a case of it.

The Bridge theatre, Baltimore, was showing "To Hell With the Kaiser," but yet it used at the end of the display the line "See America's Answer and the Kaiser's Finish," thus taking in the names of two other productions.

The entire design, made up of a mass of American soldiers with a flag in the foreground, is mere camouflage. Every selling argument of the production is entirely passed up. There is plenty of material to use legitimately with this offering and that will put it over to big crowds. Here the theatre ignored all of them, and the result was a display that barely catches the eye and means nothing after one has stopped to read it.

DIRECTED BY EDWARD JOSE

THIS display on "Private Peat" is hard to beat because it brings in all the necessary points of the story in the fewest possible words. In other words the designer had really put forward the selling points of the offering.

But the first thing we want to notice is the way that he has attracted attenion, for the display, ten inches three columns, absolutely dominates the whole page of the newspaper in which it appears. Black and white effects such as this are all right when you are not getting half tones mixed up in them and the designer was quite correct in confining his illustration to the drawing. Now note that the parallel white lines make the figure of the soldier going "over the top" and relieve a too black effect that would have prevailed without them.

He has used the catch line suggested. "Two years in hell and back with a smile," at the top and then after giving the title he has briefly told what the picture is. We are very sure that this display drew more patronage than if the designer had employed adjectives and superlatives.

Single column advertising used during the week were also hand drawn.

Now let's be all the fresher and the better for the rest of the closed period.

RIALTO THEATRE, Omaha, used eleven inches across four columns and put over one of the most novel displays that we have ever seen. So far as the Chaplin film is concerned, it couldn't be beat. Manager H. M. Thomas simply had made a drawing of Chaplin in uniform and wearing a tin helmet and let it go at that. In the "hat" he simply announced the title of the two productions that he was offering.

Naturally such an advertisement as this dominated the whole page. One's eye was attracted to it and held until the small amount of matter was read. The entire plan of the advertisement would have been ruined if Manager Thomas had tried to use a large amount of reading matter. He depended upon the reading notices in the news part of the paper to carry the stories of the productions, and all he tried to do with this was to get a big flash on the Chaplin offering. It can be done with this star and a few others, but we wouldn't try it generally. And you must be sure that the drawing is good and that it gets over perfectly.

Trouble with excellence is most of it stops with the "ex."

THIS seven-inch three-column display may get the George Walsh fans to the theatre, but we doubt it, for all of the selling argument on the picture is carefully omitted. There is one good line in this, "But He Has Time to Fall in Love," yet it is so carefully hidden away that one has to read the advertisement over a couple of times before one "gets it."

We do not believe that many people care to go to a theatre merely to see a prize fight, yet that is the only impression that the display gives. Instead of putting over the appeal that the picture would have the display really limits it. It tends to keep women and children away from the theatre instead of using the selling arguments that the picture has and that would bring them in.

The time has passed when the name of the star, the title of the picture and a cut will put a picture over. The people are becoming more discriminating. They want to know what they are going to see. You may get some of the admirers of the star to come "blind," but you won't get the patronage that you should have.

Don't promise on the other fellow's say-so; it's your theatre that you are risking.

MAJESTIC THEATRE, Jackson, Miss., has designed a good advertisement here without use of a cut. It is clean, attracts attention and because it got a position in the upper left hand corner of the page, away from any other displays, it stands out. It would have lost much of its weight if it had to take its chances in the midst of a group of other advertising.

Now the reason that there was no cut used is very simple. The Sunday paper prints cuts of the stars appearing in the various productions in Jackson. The papers have no engraving plants of their own —in fact, the engraving must go to New Orleans or Memphis, and time bars much engraving. Therefore, if the theatre can get all the stock cuts that are supplied by the exchanges used in the news pages, they figure quite properly that it is better to get them there than to use them in the display and have nothing left for the text.

There is a novelty in the way the name of the theatre is displayed, and we like it for a change.

It may be added that the announcement of the Geraldine Farrar picture is properly played, especially when it is known that the theatre secured the use of a large two-column picture of her in the text. The display is eight inches across three columns.

If your policy is only to make your patrons "kick in," you'll soon get kicked out.

COLONIAL THEATRE, Toledo, O., has been mentioned in these columns often recently for good advertising. Since this house signed for the first run of all the big Fox productions it has been using liberal space in the newspapers and putting over many striking displays.

This quarter of a page on "The Rainbow Trail" is just about as good as it could be, except that we would have left off the sentence "Farnum's Greatest Success." That expression has been used so often as applied to every star that it has come to be worse than meaningless. The public is apt to think that the theatre employing such phrases has nothing to say about the picture itself. With that omitted and the "Added Attraction" matter transferred from under the horse to that space there would have been considerable improvement.

Last week we had something to say about advertising pictures as "sequels." We believe that the Colonial has done the right thing here. There are lots of people who saw "Riders of the Purple Sage" who will want to see this production, but the advertisement very properly makes the appeal to them only incidental and does not kill off the interest of those who failed to see the former production.

SEND LATE ONES

They Will Serve a Double Purpose in Aiding Others

MANY of the advertising specimens that come from exhibitors are some that they have used as much as six months ago. The result is that the picture is probably not being shown generally now, and we try to make these comments helpful not only to the ones that send them in but to others.

After this, in cases where the advertising is very old we will send by mail to the sender the criticism of the advertising and not publish it in these columns. Of course the influenza closed many theatres, but those delays are not affected in this new rule.

Try to send in the freshest specimens of advertising that you have so that this will be right up to date.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

SHOWING the same picture for the first time in his history at both the Rialto and the Rivoli, Mr. Rothapfel is giving this week a presentation of "Under Four Flags," the third of the Government war pictures, that really sets a new mark in the history of motion pictures.

We do not mean to indicate by this that it is elaborate, that it goes into great detail, for it is the very simplicity of the presentation that attracts attention. When one leaves the theatre there is the impression that everything has been done "just right" and that anything more would have spoiled the presentation.

For there is not a thing on the bill except the overture and the Government picture, with the incidental songs. At first it was intended having a comedy and a second musical number, but these were taken off to allow more time in the showing of the feature and to give room for some little tricks that added greatly to the enjoyment of the audiences.

Now an observation: "The war is over." But without entering into any discussion of the effect of peace on war pictures, let us say right here that these pictures aroused as much enthusiasm as they would have called forth at any time during the progress of the fighting and they aroused as much emotion. For one thing, the way that they have been arranged by Mr. Rothapfel, they have been brought right up to the minute, including locally made pictures of New York's celebration of the peace news.

Naturally the arrangement of this picture was an immense job and Mr. Rothapfel, with his staff, gave it earnest attention for many long hours. There is a splendid result accomplished at the Rothapfel houses by dividing it up into seven episodes. In the first place the events pictured naturally fell into groups, though it took a lot of work to transfer the various scenes around. And then the effect of the stoppage of the pictures and the continuance of the music for a few moments between each episode gave rest to the eye and started one off on the following episode with new enthusiasm.

We would strongly recommend following this policy when you show the film. If you do not you are likely to have your people saying that the picture is too long. And the picture itself if run at its proper speed will run approximately an hour and three-quarters, so with your overture and closing musical number you will have plenty of show. There may be room to squeeze in a one-reel comedy, but it is really not needed—for this reason: The war is over now, and the spirit of victory is in the air. Although the grimmest of events are mirrored in this picture the sting is out of them for the joy of having won fills our hearts. You have no depressing feeling to remove, and you don't need the comedy unless you simply want to lengthen your show.

The musical score as arranged by Mr. Rothapfel, Dr. Reisenfeld and the other members of the cast is remarkable. It consists almost entirely of either national or near-national airs, martial music or music that has come out of this war. On another page we are publishing the full list of the music, and while the length of time that each production is played is not given, it gives a splendid chance for you to arrange your music.

The overture is "American Festival March." This is a splendid composition of Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, written for the celebration of the first anniversary of the Rialto and there could be no more fitting selection than this to mark the presentation of "Under Four Flags" at both the Rialto and the Rivoli. This is counterpointed by the national anthems of the allied nations and the effect upon the audience is wonderful. Near the end of the selection a song is introduced, part of the original composition, and this is sung at the Rialto by Greek Evans and at the Rivoli by the Rialto Male Quartet, seated in the orchestra.

Both theatres were elaborately decorated with American flags and those of the three other nations who are included in the picture, Great Britain, France and Italy. Immediately after the overture the picture is started, the first scenes showing the refugees fleeing from their homes on the occasion of the last drive of the Germans toward Paris. "America Our Cry" had been the opening selection and then there is softer, more pathetic music. Then we are shown Versailles and the conference that put General Foch in supreme command and unified the Allies fighting in the West.

You can imagine the effect on the audience when these heroes of the war are shown. First we have various French notables and then we get Generals Pershing and Bliss and there are shouts from the audience that might be heard blocks away except for the walls of the theatre. Then come Clemenceau, Haig, Balfour, Prime Minister Orleando of Italy and finally General Foch. Again the audience rises up in our might and we sat trying to figure out whether Foch got more applause than Pershing when we have a title showing our commander pledging the generalissimo "all we have" and the other demonstrations fade into the background. The music had been "La Pere de la Victorie" and now it becomes "Battle Hymn of the Republic," which, by the way, is used more than any other selection.

The orchestra returns to "La Pere" with a view of the statues of Washington and Lafayette and then the making of Foch a Marshal of France.

Now the scenes change to this side of the water and with trumpet calls for "Assembly" merging into "Over There" we have pictures of the men in the camps and on the docks and then being loaded on the ships. After this we have some remarkable shots from all parts of the ship, some of of them taken right over the guns as they are firing at submarines. The convoys, with the dashing destroyers are wonderful pictures, as are the hydroplanes. Up to this time we have had "There's a Million Heroes," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Before the Mast," and "Our Jackies," all played very spiritedly, and then with the sports on shipboard "Hornpipe." Then with the title telling us that down below they see the trail of the serpent a mysterioso is used. A little later with the call of eight bells and "all is well" we have the bells sounded.

Then the curtain drops to mark the end of the first episode and the lights come up a little with the orchestra turning into "Over There," for a few sceonds, later the picture is resumed with views of our boys on the other side. We have some pictures of the men training, some views of the brighter side of life and then there is a stirring scene as we are shown the Americans marching in the Paris parade. But it remains for the big punch to come, with the views of the Americans who really turned the tide at Chateau Thierry, and here, for they were marines, is "Semper Fidelis."

HE GIVES CREDIT

Rothapfel Shares "Under Four Flags" Glory with Staff

ONE of the reasons for the big successes of the Rialto and the Rivoli, the smooth running performances and the satisfaction of the audiences comes from the fact that S. L. Rothapfel is never slow in giving credit to the members of his staff. Mr. Rothapfel is big enough not to have to trot in the "I." When you hear him talk about things accomplished, you always hear him refer to what "we" did. And that's why the employes are willing to work for him so hard—willing to do super things.

In the programs of the two houses there appears a line of "In appreciation of patriotic service" of four of the staff: Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, musical director; Erno Rapee, conductor at the Rivoli; Joseph LaRose, production manager of the two houses and Lewis S. Geffen, of the publicity department. These men with Mr. Rothapfel worked from early until late—all night at times—making the preparations for the presentation of "Under Four Flags." And the results attained prove that it is worth it.

And, yes, it is worth while sharing the credit with your staff. It doesn't reflect on your own ability; rather it shows the big and broadness of yourself. And the public, "gets" these things.

The third episode pictures the battle at Chateau Thierry and some of the incidents connected with it. There are some striking views of the fighting and we see the Germans driven back. The end of the episode comes at one of the field hospitals with Red Cross nurses at work and right here there is an impressive incident with the quartet (Greek Evans at the Rialto) singing "Rose of No Man's Land." The last of the song comes with the screen bare and the curtains down.

Episode No. 4 is devoted to the English army and the first title tells us that the Kaiser called them "The contemptible little army." "Rule Britannia" is the music at the start and it and "Sons of Britain" prevail through this episode, with "Tipperary" brought in at the end. A few bars of the "Marseillaise" are thrown in at a scene where Clemenceau appears on the screen. There is a clever little touch here with the French villagers who had been a week in the dugout until the British came up and here "Pack Up Your Troubles" adds to the applause and persuades the audience to laughter.

The fifth episode is devoted to Italy and the selections employed here are "La Forze del Destino," "March Reale" and "Garibaldi." These are probably the most vivid pictures of the whole feature. In fact, a number of Italian cameramen are said to have met death during the making of these pictures. We have reproduced here the battle of the Piave, some remarkably fine shots of charging soldiers and we are brought face to face with death.

"Battle Hymn of the Republic" starts off the pictures of the sixth episode, which deal with the battle of St. Mihiel, where the Americans, as an army of their own, were in action for the first time. There are many views of the wrecked city and then a bunch of prisoners with the caption, "They all belong to us," with an organ solo used at the end of the episode.

The seventh episode includes the review of the American and the French troops by Gen. Pershing and various Allied officers and with the city "To This City Came Gen. Pershing" we get "When Yankee Doodle Learns to Parley Vous." "Battle Hymn of the Republic" is used as "Old Glory" passes in review, and then with the title "The Victory of Democracy," we have the scenes on this side of the water when the news of the end of the war came.

In all the arrangements that we have known Mr. Rothapfel to make none has been so wonderfully effective as this. He arranged to have these pictures of the celebration of New York's wild time made especially for this picture and they could not have been more vivid. And the effects that went with it. One would have thought that celebrating crowd of millions had broken loose for there were every one of those horrible noises that we heard all day and night long on that Monday none of us will ever forget, with "Hot Time in the Old Town" being played. There are pictures of the Kaiser and the Crown Prince, warmly hissed at first, melting away and a tableaux of the Allied nations end.

WAR IS OVER

WAR in Europe is over and all of us know that the American soldier has had a very large share in bringing about the speedy ending. But everyone knows that at the time America entered hostilities she was not prepared.

She was in the same position that most of the exhibitors of the country insist on placing themselves. They are not prepared to take advantage of the opportunities that come to them. They deliberately pass up the chances that they have to be ready for "eventualities."

In these pages each week there is represented a large amount of work and considerable expenditure of money. It is all done for you—for the exhibitors. Are you taking advantage of them to the extent of reading every line of matter about how others have scored successes with pictures?

And if you are one of the live wires that are doing that, let us hear, in turn, of the things that you are doing. It will help others.

Attractive arrangement of the stage of Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O.

Boy Scouts and Government Airships Aid Horater in Putting Over "America's Answer"

REOPENING week was celebrated by Manager H. C. Horater of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O., with the plan that he followed in putting on "America's Answer," the second of the Government official war pictures. It was originally scheduled for an earlier showing, but the shut down on account of influenza interfered with these plans.

Interest in the production was aroused far in advance, since a private screening was given the picture on October 13 as a benefit for the city's letter carriers, parochial and public school teachers. Leaders in various patriotic organizations were invited. One can imagine the word of mouth publicity that came from these postmen and teachers and even though the regular showing had to be postponed, there was eager expectancy everywhere for the announcement of the picture.

Heavy newspaper advertising was used in advance of the first public showing, ranging from quarter pages down, and the most of them bearing a cut showing the marching Americans with the nation's flag at their head. When the engagement began on Sunday the theatre was unable to accommodate the crowds. In connection with the feature, Miss Margaret Thojomos of Chicago, sang "Columbia," and when a tableaux showing Pershing, Foch and Wilson was thrown on the screen the audience went wild with applause.

In connection with the engagement there was a clever stunt used with the placing of a coffin prominently labelled "Kaiser Bill" in the lobby. Boy Scouts were in attendance offering the privilege of driving a nail in the coffin to every purchaser of a Thrift Stamp. The stunt not only drew crowds to the theatre but earned notices in all of the local papers

But Mr. Horater was not content with half way measures in advertising the picture. He went all the way to the Government flying field at Mount Clemens, Mich., to get the participation of aviators. Permission was granted for five of them to fly to Toledo and then to circle the city dropping announcements of the showing of "America's Answer." This, of course, got front page space in the papers, the total result being that there was probably never a picture shown in the city that was so constantly kept before the public.

ADVERTISING

It's One of the Biggest Problems, Hence All the Stories

NEARLY all the matter included in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau this week bears directly on advertising. While it is more or less of a coincidence that all of this matter should come at the same time, it only serves to show the importance which exhibitors everywhere are placing in advertising.

Advertising of motion picture theatres has developed wonderfully in the past year and a half. We predict that it is going to have a still greater development. The angles to it are increasing and with them the results. You will find in this issue accounts of a number of novel turns that newspaper exploitation of the picture and the theatre has taken.

All of them are worth reading, and after you have read them they are worth thinking about—and acting upon.

Accounts of many of the things that Mr Horater has done in boosting various attractions have been printed in these pages but this exploitation of "America's Answer" probably breaks all of his own records. The picture was shown after peace was a certainty, but it seems that instead of that the attendance was larger than it had been with any of the other war pictures that were shown at the Alhambra.

Mr. Horater reveals the secrets of his exploitations when he says that he always starts out several weeks in advance to lay the plans for the way that he will put over his pictures. The closed period, of course gave him unusual opportunity for this, but he makes it a practice to begin to think several weeks before the showing starts and that is the reason that he has been able to give many pictures unusual runs in his city where the custom formerly was a change at least twice weekly.

Pathe Supplies Big Campaign on Gaby Deslys

Pathe promises that with the release of the special feature, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, the exhibitors will be supplied with every possible method for exploiting the noted French star and the feature.

For use of the exhibitor there has been prepared a plan book that covers a wide field of advertising and general exploitation hints. It is pointed out that the pictorial possibilities are very large, for there are many photographs showing Miss Deslys wearing the gowns and the millinery creations for which she is famous. Pathe has also prepared a series of hand colored show frames which are obtainable at the various exchanges. Complete newspaper advertising is provided.

Will the Soldier Revolutionize Pictures?

By Edward L. Hyman

Director Picture Division, War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities

THE soldier who returns, "from where the poppies blow," promises to revolutionize the industry of motion pictures.

So will the officer and doughboy whose wartime experience has been confined to home cantonments.

The soldier and sailor back from the Great War is the man of the hour, and his opinions, demands and ambitions will sway America for years to come.

His influence in the world of motion pictures—theatre and producing field—will not be negligible, and will be felt as no other factor since the inception of the cinema. In fact, the soldier-wartime influence has already been felt.

The Liberty theatre of the cantonments, north, south, east and west, has fingered the pulse of the future for producer and exhibitor. And the pulse-reading has been startling and most pleasing.

This is not a theoretical treatise on the evolution of the motion picture through wartime-cycles; it is not a philosophical dissertation upon the "perhapses" and "maybes" of the movie's prospects. It is what I believe is a sound analysis and wide conception of conditions that have developed during several years of war.

The soldier's span of life has been drawn-out several lengths by his experience in camp and in the fighting areas. He is more matured, looks at life from a different angle; has sound convictions and absolutely KNOWS the kind of motion pictures he wants to see—and wants his wife, his relatives and friends to view those of the same type.

Underneath the mask of gayety and smiling courageousness he has nurtured and borne a new character that is bound to at least improve the policy of both producer and exhibitor.

Pals with the Soldier

The Liberty theatre has been able to "pal" with the soldier. The boy in the camp has sidled up to the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities cantonment playhouse as a wanderer would greet a back-home acquaintance in a foreign land.

Ideals of American manhood were upset in camp and reared anew with the apex of their ambitions more towering and lofty than ever before.

The Liberty theatre had to keep step or straggle a bad last along with those effeminate things which died a natural death when the Yanks took up soldiering.

The Liberty theatre did keep step, I believe, and as a result the producer and exhibitor, has an authority now to which they may refer to in relation to after-the-war problems.

What They Don't Want

The soldier and sailor really began to live as nature and the rules of health meant he should soon after he entered the service. Naturally his mental attitude changed. No matter how lacking in education he might be, he gradually gained a wholesome dislike for

Sham
Weaklings
Insincere Society
The Grouch
Cheap Sentiment
Social Mockery
Sex Rot

—and an unlimited number of other elements, which before the war characterized the very core and heart of the picture producing industry.

"Keep the men satisfied in camp and you make true soldiers," said the commandant of a vast military reservation.

He made this observation to me while impressing upon me the need of diversion for the soldier who is in camp.

The Liberty theatre, healthy child of the War Department, Commission on Training Camp Activities, has in great measure kept the soldier satisfied.

It has seen the khaki-clads crystallize and bloom from the dominated picture fan to the dominant film devotee. At first he sat meekly and suffered the sex plays of the day, the social nests of suggestion in film form, and the milk and water comedy.

BUT as his military training progressed, his heart and soul and his mind grew. And he arose and demanded his rights as the picture fan of the future.

Wants Healthy Action

He "booed" the mawkish scenes alive with slender hero chaps in dinner "duds." He sneered at the cheap conventionalities and impossible situations. And he applauded healthy, on-the-level action and sentiment.

The Liberty theatre soon learned what he wanted and booked only those pictures, and will continue to book them as long as they are available, and there are soldiers in camps in America.

Exchanges and producers took the tip in considerable number. Apparently they thought it worth while to take note of the brand of pictures that the soldier liked.

At any rate current releases show an unusual change in titles and the nature of subject matter.

These are but a vagrant few. I am of the sincere opinion that the Liberty theatre has been instrumental in finding out just what the soldier wants in the way of films, and the up-to-the-minute men of the industry made good by providing them. In other words, they profited by the findings of the Liberty theatre.

The Liberty theatre, I feel, was a Godsend to the greatest industry in the world. It has been a living link between the public and the military as represented in the manhood of the nation.

Filth and superficiality will disappear from the living screen. Real men and women are due to appear in shadow form as sponsors of a new era in the making of pictures. They will stand for plays that are big and sweet and clean, and as cheerful as an early morning in early June.

Those are the plays you will have to buy—the smile plays, the joy plays.

THE SOLDIER DEMANDS THEM.

He has told the Liberty theatre so, AND YOU WILL ABIDE BY HIS DECISION.

Matthew H. Whitham, director of films for the Liberty theatre in the Southeast, summed it all up, when he, after a wonderful experience in booking for seven soldier theatres, said:

"The impossible situation in motion pictures is as lifeless today as the Sphinx to the new American—the soldier. He has bayoneted it. He has crossed it off the lists of elements necessary to a good motion picture. Upon that list he has left these component elements:

"Sincere heart atmosphere,

"Love that is LOVE,

"Joy builded on foundations of smiles,

"Comedy that whirlpools eddies of gayety.

"The soldier has seen enough of the drab. He wants the sunshine of hope that will erase old visions of trench cruelties and sacrifices that have made his heart as tender and receptive as the heart of a child."

Some audience? Soldiers waiting to enter Liberty Theatre at Camp Kearney, Cal.

Two Newspapers Show Cooperation with Theatres When the "Flu" Ban Is Lifted

EVERY week there come along new evidences that the theatres of the country are being more and more converted to advertising, and there are more evidences of the fact that progressive newspapers are trying to cooperate for the benefit of all concerned.

Within the past few weeks we have printed a number of evidences of advertising that houses in various sections of this country and Canada did during the time that they were closed. Now come along at least two cities where it is shown that the newspaper and the theatres cooperated in taking full advantage of lifting the "flu" ban. These are Denver and Topeka, Kan.

In Denver the Post grouped all of the motion picture advertising possible on one page and across this was run the line, "Hurrah! The Flu Ban Is Lifted." Directly under this followed a statement of the fact that all of the houses were to be opened Monday, and then mentioning some of the attractions. An especially good sentence used in this connection was: "Off with the bedroom slippers and on with your wraps, out of the world of drab existence into the world of life—the world of music and wholesome entertainment."

This, of course, saved the individual theatres the necessity of making reference to the opening order in their displays and so they could use all of their customary space to covering the attractions themselves.

In Wichita the Daily Capital had drawn especially a seven-column design showing the curtain of closing being pulled back, revealing a lighted theatre. The greater part of the type is devoted to telling how willingly the theatres cooperated with the health authorities, and even announcing that if it was necessary the houses would be willing to close voluntarily for another four weeks.

Only a small portion of the space was used to give the names of the theatres and under these were the names of the stars and the titles of the pictures in which they would be seen. The fuller announcements of the pictures, vaudeville and legitimate offerings were carried in the usual section of the paper.

While we are without the details, we'd stake a lot on the statement that the newspapers themselves are responsible for the insertion of these displays—that is, it was done on their initiative. It is an unfortunate fact that the exhibitors in most cities are so jealous of each other that they cannot get together on cooperating advertising of this sort, but an enterprising newspaper can get them in.

Such things as these seem rather local and unimpressive in passing, but when one considers that more and more such things are being done all over the country week after week there is certainly a lesson there.

If the advertising managers of every newspaper in the country could see such items as this which are appearing in the Motion Picture News from time to time we believe that there would result a greater effort on their part. They would lay constructive plans for interesting the motion picture manager in advertising and they would provide the proper sort of cooperation so that all parties concerned would make money from the venture. More and more newspapers are coming to realize that the initiative rests with them.

The enforced closing of the theatres made the newspapers realize that the motion picture advertising meant something to them in the way of revenue. Most newspapers have taken this advertising as a matter of course, but when it was absent it hurt. And then, too, many managers took stock of themselves while their doors were shut and we expect the "flu" to have had one good result—the conversion of more exhibitors to the necessity of intelligent advertising.

If the Allies had been like the fellow who stops advertising when he does not get immediate results, where would they have been now?

"Talk of the Town" Made Real Talk of Town in Atlanta

WHEN "The Talk of the Town," the Universal special feature starring Dorothy Phillips, was shown at the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, it was made the real talk of the town. The result was record breaking business, and the advertising campaign that was followed is held largely responsible.

Manager James F. Jackson, of the Tudor, was confident of doing big business with the picture, but he found that he was up against unusually strong competition that week, and so he started with an unusual advance campaign, following the "teaser" idea as suggested in the special service section on the picture printed in the Motion Picture News.

One of the things that he did was to send out a squad of youngsters with cards showing the picture of a scantily-clad girl and bearing the words, "The Talk of the Town—Who is She?" These cards were hung on every automobile parked on the downtown streets during the week preceding the opening of the film.

Manager Jackson then proceeded to run the line, "the talk of the town" at the bottom of every Tudor theatre advertisement that appeared in the daily papers before the opening of the Dorothy Phillips production. The picture was shown for the first time on a Monday, and on the Sunday preceding that Monday he inserted extra-large advertisements in the three Sunday Atlanta papers, the Journal, the Constitution, Georgian and American.

Result: "The Talk of the Town" opened to big business. It had good crowds every afternoon and every evening and the house had 'em standing out several nights when there were vacant seats in many of the other theatres.

War Service Curtain Adorns Maryland Theatre

Probably the first "service" curtain to be used in any motion picture theatre in the country is the work of C. S. Cheadle, manager of the opera house at Havre de Grace, Md. During the closing period he had a curtain painted which bears 119 stars, representing the boys from that section who went to serve Uncle Sam. Advertisements on the curtain bore its cost. In addition he has organized a movement to build a monument commemorating the patriotic lads of that section.

Another Big Cleveland House Turns to Pictures

So successful have been motion pictures in Cleveland, O., that another house has switched to films. This is the Miles, which has abandoned vaudeville and announces that it will run only the biggest film attractions that can be secured. An orchestra of twenty-five pieces is furnishing the music, and Santrey, who made such a big hit in Detroit and other cities is leading in the "victory singing." Florence Reed in "Wives of Men" is the current offering.

Branham Makes His Newspaper Cuts Work Overtime for Him by Helping in His Displays

CHARLES G. BRANHAM, manager of the Strand and Lyric theatres, Minneapolis, has adopted an interesting method of Hooverizing, since it has become the fashion these days.

Now Mr. Branham has been up against a peculiar situation in Minneapolis, and the same state of affairs prevails in a number of other cities, unfortunately. For some time the newspapers there have been charging for the cuts that appear in the layouts in the Saturday and Sunday issues. The charge for these runs from five to fifteen dollars, depending, of course, on the size of the cut used.

Formerly it has been the custom to destroy these layouts when they had appeared in the papers, but Mr. Branham is now saving a lot of expense by using these again in his advertising on the current attractions or in later attractions featuring the same star. Of course, extreme care has to be used in selecting the photographs that are used in the newspaper layout as strictly scene or costume pictures would not be of use in advertising other attractions.

This cut used many times, but in different ways

The result of this policy has been to build up a "morgue" that is probably not equaled by any theatre in the country. Mr. Branham has now a wide selection of actual cuts of the various stars playing his theatres regularly, in various sizes and styles, and these can be used again in his displays. One result has been that when an attraction is changed at the last moment he doesn't have to worry whether the engraver can finish a cut for him on time, but he merely goes to his "morgue" and digs out a cut, with the result that the copy can immediately be placed in the hands of the printer.

For instance, the cut of Mabel Normand which is used in one of the advertisements reproduced here was originally used in the newspaper layout when she appeared at the Strand in "The Venus Model." So it came in handy when she came to the Lyric in "Peck's Bad Girl." The cut of Viola Dana in another display has been used several times, but not enough to become too familiar to the patrons.

In one of the first issues after the establishment of the Exhibitors Service Bureau, we urged that every theatre, no matter how small, should establish itself a "morgue" such as this. It is mighty little trouble, and if you can afford no better way a series of drawers for the different letters will suffice. The exhibitor will be surprised at the saving this will result in and the variety of appeal that you will be able to give your advertising.

Walk into the average theatre and you will see cuts scattered around everywhere. They are used as paper weights, stacked around in corners and in the way generally. And you will usually find that the manager of that house is a careless advertiser and that he gets about half of the pulling power out of the space that he does use.

Then walk into the average composing room and you will find that most of the theatres are accustomed to leaving their cuts to the tender mercies of the printer, who will sometimes file them away, but who will most generally consign them to what is known in printers' terms as the "hell box," meaning that from there they go away to be melted up or junked.

Mr. Branham's plan is just another evidence of progressive management. It is not merely saving of money, but it is an evidence of the desire to equip the theatre with the material to meet all sorts of emergencies. We are sure that many an additional patron has been brought into his theatres through the very fact that he has preserved this material until the right day to use it comes.

Theatres Celebrate Victory with a Single Word

On both coasts there were exhibitors who took advantage of the chance to celebrate the defeat of Germany with a single word over their theatres.

J. A. Quinn, of Los Angeles, is always on the job, and as soon as the official news of the signing of the armistice was received he had his electricians put in huge letters on the top of the theatre the one word, "Yanks," and that just about told the whole story.

In front of both the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York, S. L. Rothapfel had the word "Victory" displayed in such huge letters that they attracted the attention of all the Broadway thousands.

Huns Quit Fighting When Cohn Starts to War

Sam W. B. Cohn, manager of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., had hard luck though it was good luck for the rest of the country—at the same time meaning no reflection on this member of the Advisory Board of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. Mr. Cohn resigned his post to enter the officers' training camp at Camp Pike, Ark. Evidently the Huns heard that he was to get in service against them, for just about the time that he arrived on the job the armistice was signed and Mr. Cohn was informed that the camp was all off. His future plans have not been announced

Two Kunsky houses in Detroit stir interest in Talmadge Sisters this way

Detroit Manager Cleverly Arrays "Sister Against Sister" in His Advertising

A CLEVER plan to "put over" two Talmadge pictures was employed by John H. Kunskey in Detroit last week. Mr. Kunskey had Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City" at the Madison, and Constance Talmadge in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots" at the Adams. Both houses are a block apart.

Mr. Kunsky advertised the two stars and theatres jointly and asked Detroit film lovers to visit both theatres the same week and to let him know which star they liked best. As both have long and loyal followings the theatres were packed and many hundred answers to the request were mailed in.

Reports from Detroit are that this caused all sorts of excitement and good-natured arguments among the followers of the two stars, and resulted in a jump in attendance because the admirers of Constance brought along the Norma fans to "see how much better Constance is" and vice versa.

It is a plan that can be followed any place where there are two theatres under the same management or where you show one picture the first half of the week and the other later, or even where double bills are used. But of course the chief value of the stunt is its novelty. It makes people talk about your theatres, and that is the main thing that you are looking for.

FINDING THE PUNCH

Another One of McCormick's "Zero Hour" Articles Next Week

WE have had scores of commendations on the "At the Zero Hour" articles published here and written by S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis. The "zero hour" is the moment just before the soldiers go over the top, the time they spend in wondering whether what they have done is right and what is to eventuate. And so it is with the exhibitor.

Next week Mr. McCormick will tell of the methods he uses in analyzing the productions that he is to play and the processes he follows in the production of the advertising for the Circle theatre. Scores of you have read with interest of his advertising. Now he is going to to take you "behind the scenes" and show you how he does it. Mr. McCormick is doing wonders in helping other exhibitors to advertise and there is no one who will fail to derive benefit from reading these articles carefully.

Theatre Helps Newspaper in Celebrating Election

Albany, N. Y. election crowds sang patriotic songs between the receiving of the returns without knowing that the enterprise of an operator at one of the motion picture houses made it possible. There is said never to have been such a demonstration in the state capital before.

Clifford Hoffman, operator at the Beaver theatre, had been preserving the slides that he receives from the song publishers, and he conceived the idea of turning some fifty of them over to the Albany Journal. They were thrown on the screen and more than 5,000 people sang them to the accompaniment of a thirty-piece band. And inasmuch as the theatres were closed at the time the event was all the more enjoyed.

"Under Four Flags" to Boost Fifth Liberty Loan

Indianapolis means to use "Under Four Flags," the third Official War Picture issued by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information for the purpose of boosting the Fifth Liberty Loan which is scheduled to come about the first of the year.

This picture is to be shown at the Circle theatre during the week of November 24, and the Marion County Legion, which is in charge of the various loan drives, has issued a call to everyone of its 6,000 lieutenants to see the film during the Indianapolis showing. Further than that the lieutenants are urged to act as boosters for the picture and get the public to attend.

This Manager Uses Peace and Closed Period Both in Boosting Picture

MANAGER HERB JENNINGS, of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, employed many methods of showmanship to boom the presentation of "To Hell with the Kaiser" in his theatre during the week of Nov. 11, which was reopening week in Ottawa after five weeks of darkness.

Jennings had a special lobby display, consisting of a representation of Hades with the Kaiser in the very thickest of the heat. Hanging suspended in the lobby was a periscope, and a passerby, taking a look, discovered the Kaiser's portrait and a line advising the people to see "To Hell with the Kaiser." To one side was a small table on which was placed thousands of cards enclosed in envelopes, bearing the words "Good Dope—Dr. Joy." On the cards was the printed advice "Keep Your Feet Dry; See 'To Hell with the Kaiser' at the Strand, week of Nov. 11, and then Buy Victory Bonds." The crowd made a great grab for the envelopes for two days before the picture opened.

Jennings also built a horse-drawn float showing the Kaiser behind the bars of a cage and the inscription of the picture's title. He held this in reserve until official word that an armistice had been signed would be received. Then he used the float for the peace parade and demonstration.

Jennings also secured the endorsement of the Ottawa branch of the Army and Navy War Veterans for the picture and secured the free service of the band of the organization for a demonstration.

On the Saturday night before the opening, the manager of the Strand conducted an open air "slide show" in the wide lobby of his theatre with the aid of a stereopticon machine. Slides of various sorts, advertising both coming attractions and the theatre, were shown on a small screen.

When the theatre re-opened the doorman turned out with a very thrilling comic opera dress uniform, while another attendant was dressed as a sailor.

Small City Manager Proves it Can Be Done

TO HIS PATRONS AT ALL TIMES.

How often do you find exhibitors doing their own "operating," janitor work or other things that could best be handled by someone whose ability ends at the broom handle, yet these same exhibitors are doing this work thinking that they are saving themselves ten or twenty dollars a week, but in reality are costing themselves dollars upon dollars. When these exhibitors learn these facts, then they will see just what a huge mistake they have made in the past. They will do as I have done a number of times when I have tried to economize at the wrong end, THEY WILL FEEL AS IF THEY WOULD BE GLAD TO HAVE SOMEONE KICK THEM AROUND THE BLOCK FOR SUCH POOR JUDGMENT.

THE BROADWAY THEATRE
CHARLIE CHAPLIN
IT WILL BE YOUR UNIQUE PLEASURE TO SEE MR. & MRS. CHARLES CHAPLIN ON THE SAME PROGRAM

View of front of lobby and interior of Kashin's display of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chaplin

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chaplin Featured in Lobby Display and on Bill at the Broadway

MR. and Mrs. Charles Chaplin are both appearing at the Broadway theatre this week.

This clever idea was conceived by M. Kashin, manager of the Broadway, as soon as he read the announcement that the secret marriage of the comedian and Mildred Harris, Universal star, had been made public.

Chaplin was appearing in the fourth week of his engagement in "Shoulder Arms," and with this Mr. Kashin booked "Borrowed Clothes," in which Mildred Harris is starred. The bill made an immediate hit, with the result that as this edition of the NEWS goes to press the Broadway was packing them in, with every prospect of continuing the run of the same bill for another week.

The front of the lobby, which is shown in the photograph printed above, was very simple and showed a large oval of Miss Harris in bridal clothes and Chaplin in his trench outfit. On either side were two more paintings of the stars. All the cards and other matter impressed the public that they were recently married.

The inner lobby showed the reproduction of wedding announcement from the bride's parents. This was carried out in the usual style, though, of course, greatly enlarged. Other details of the decorations were little cupids, some of them as cameramen and others as ministers.

The idea was carried out in the same way on the screen. Preceding the showing of "Shoulder Arms" there was a special title bearing the wedding announcement. It gets a big hand at the Broadway. The same thing was done last week, the wedding announcement being used as a trailer to announce "Borrowed Clothes" for this week.

It was simply a case of taking advantage of an opportunity, and any other manager can do the same thing with the two pictures. There is no danger of giving offense with a stunt of this sort. There is probably not an event in the history of motion pictures that has caused more discussion among fans than the marriage of the million-dollar comedian, and certainly the greater share of them, no matter how familiar they are with the way Mildred Harris looks on the screen, will want to come to see her again.

Incidentally, it might be stated that as the result of the policies that Mr. Kashin is pursuing the Broadway is now at the height of its success and playing to packed houses. The greatest reliance is placed on the lobby displays and on the mailing system that is employed. For instance, this week some five thousand of the wedding announcements were sent out. These go to carefully selected lists of people, and the returns from them have been unusually good.

The Broadway theatre was never a success as a motion picture house until Mr. Kashin took charge of it, though various managers had spent immense sums in the high-priced New York newspaper advertising. While Mr. Kashin continued the use of the newspapers, he figured that with so many thousands passing in front of the theatre every day his lobby ought to have the real pulling power, and so he set about to make these as striking as possible.

And Stanley C. Chambers Is a Real Believer in Advertising

STANLEY C. CHAMBERS, manager of the Palace and Princess theatres, Wichita, Kan., is a firm believer in advertising and he is one of the best and most consistent in the country.

That helps to make the compliments equal for Mr. Stanley writes:

"One of the principal reasons for my writing you is to state that I think your Exhibitors Service Bureau is the 'best ever' and should be appreciated by every showman. Whenever I tell some exhibitors of the amount of money that we spend on newspaper advertising, etc., it usually knocks them dead, because they cannot realize the possibilities in using space intelligently. But I do know one thing and that is that good advertising gets results."

Newspaper Guarantees Aid in Putting Over Picture

Employment of ideas used in motion picture trade journal advertising has been urged constantly in these columns and there have been reproduced from time to time examples of how exhibitors in various sections have taken advantage of the work of high salaried advertising men employed by the producers. But no better example has come than that from Dye, Ford and Rogers, holders of the First National franchise in Amarillo, Texas.

The feature of the trade journal advertising campaign conducted by First National on "Italy's Flaming Front" was the signed statements of the trade publication editors that the facts advertised as part of the production had actually been witnessed by them and were in reality a part of the picture. To make this idea applicable to newspaper advertising, it was suggested to exhibitors that they use the same copy, or text very similar to it and have it signed by the local editors.

One instance of the practical advertising value of the idea, as related to exhibitor promotion for the picture, is the experience of Dye, Ford and Rogers, who used almost identically the same copy for the idea that was given in the press sheet for "Italy's Flaming Front," for a full page newspaper ad, with the signature of Ross D. Rogers, president of the firm, as guarantee the films showed actual battle.

Fox Names "Great Nine" Series

Will Include Nine Reissues of Features Which Company Classes Among Its Best—Expects Big Box-Office Results

THE Fox Film Corporation, according to an announcement this week, has decided to reissue nine productions which it classes among its best features. The series will be distributed under the name of The Great Nine, described in the Fox offices as "a million dollar group."

One of the reasons given by the Fox Corporation for the reissuing of these nine features is the need for conservation of man power and material. A statement credited to William Fox said: "The necessity for economy continues." Continuing, Mr. Fox said: "In two years motion picture audiences in this country have increased 100 per cent, so that today pictures which were released two years ago are entirely new to 50 per cent of the patrons of motion picture theatres. A large portion of the other 50 per cent will want to see again pictures which have proven successful."

Figuring along these lines, it is the contention of the Fox Corporation that the reissues will no doubt prove financially successful to exhibitors, even more so than new films would do.

It is said that special attention has been given to the tinting and toning of the new prints. The revising has been done personally by William Fox and his film editor, Hetty Grey Baker. Length has been limited to 4,500 feet and care has been taken to eliminate everything interfering with fast, snappy, sustained action. Many stars of today will be found in the casts as portrayers of minor roles, it is said.

The first release will be December 29 and there will be subsequent releases at intervals of one week. The opening feature will be the first picture made at the California studios of William Fox. It is William Farnum in "Fighting Blood" and is declared to have been played a greater number of days, in all parts of the world, than any other picture that William Fox has made.

Theda Bara will first appear in "The Great Nine" releases in "The Serpent," which was made under the direction of Raoul A. Walsh. Miss Bara's support includes George Walsh.

Raoul A. Walsh's first picture for William Fox, "The Regeneration," will be the third production released in "The Great Nine" series. The fourth release will be "The Broken Law," with William Farnum as the hero. Following "The Broken Law" will come another Theda Bara production, "Under Two Flags." A melodrama, "Dr. Ramean," and now retitled "Infidelity," will be released as the sixth of "The Great Nine." The cast includes Frederick Perry, Dorothy Bernard, Jean Sothern and Kittens. Valeska Suratt in "The Soul of Broadway" will be included in "The Great Nine" series.

The eighth picture will be the Theda Bara super-production, "The Darling of Paris." "Hoodman Blind," featuring William Farnum, is to be the last production of "The Great Nine" releases. Like "Infidelity," this production has been retitled, having previously been released as "The Man of Sorrow."

Goldwyn Changes Title on "Southern Pride"

Because of the discovery that the title had recently been used for a motion picture, Goldwyn has changed the name of Mae Marsh's next release, now completed, from "Southern Pride" to "The Racing Strain."

It was written by Tex Charwate especially for Mae Marsh. Many of the scenes were photographed in the south, others at New York's famous Saratoga track at the height of the recent racing season.

Geraldine Farrar Appears in "Shadows"

Goldwyn Pictures announced this week that with her second production, "The Hell Cat," beginning its first run career, Geraldine Farrar is to be presented by Goldwyn in her third picture for that organization. In this the star will have the role of an Alaskan dance hall girl, which is expected to be decidedly different than anything she has yet done in pictures.

Reginald Barker is announced as the director of the feature, which is to be called "Shadows." The story is by Willard Mack. The picture has not been scheduled, but it is understood Goldwyn intends to make a mid-winter release of it.

Incidental with the announcement of "Shadows," Goldwyn makes known that four of its Geraldine Farrar series have already been completed. Tom Santschi and Milton Sills are prominent in the male leads of these films.

"Civilization" May Be Reissued by Hirsh

Nathan Hirsh, President of the Pioneer Film Corporation, believes that this is the opportune time for the re-issuing of "Civilization," and declares that it is properly a peace picture and for this reason it should go over particularly well now that the terrible World War is at an end.

This feature, which scored on Broadway during its long run, was made under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and is declared to be one of the most pretentious films ever presented to the public. Dealing as it does with peace the opportunities for doing big business on it at this time are said to be quite apparent.

Whether or not Mr. Hirsh will determine to re-issue the film is still to be decided. Should he do so, which appears most likely, a detailed announcement will soon be made.

Truesdell Impersonated Wilson Many Times

Fred C. Truesdell, specially engaged to impersonate President Woodrow Wilson in the Screen Classics, Inc., production, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," is said to actually resemble the nation's chief executive so closely that he is constantly being accosted and reminded of the fact.

The actor has recently been impersonating President Wilson in a vaudeville sketch called "The Message," and also in the parade of the Green Room Club, of which Mr. Truesdell is a member.

Mandelbaum Tries New Booking Plan

Ohio Franchise Holder of First National Claims Many Good Points to Original Idea—More Money Promised to Independent Producers

LESS than $600 a week for first run in Cleveland on Chaplin comedies, with return dates rental free, and assessing exhibitor members for film rentals by a method which guarantees profitable returns to independent stars and producers on larger investments of money and time for the attainment of superior quality in their releases, are some of the features claimed for a new and radical exhibitors' co-operative booking plan originated and launched in Ohio by E. M. Mandelbaum, owner of the State franchise for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

Sponsors of the plan, and they are said to include many exhibitors in Ohio, claim that it is more fair and profitable for the independent producers and stars than either a program or State rights releasing arrangement, providing that their output has box-office merit.

Repaid with Profit

They are said to go beyond this in their enthusiasm for its possibilities, and declare that a distributing policy is in use which enables a producer or a star to invest $75,000 or more in a quality picture with positive assurance that they will be repaid with a commensurate profit.

According to Mr. Mandelbaum, the enfranchising and booking system he has adopted for the First National exchange in Ohio was conceived and put into operation as the result of constant complaints from theatre owners about the "take-what-we-give-or-leave-it-alone" policy of some of the program exchanges, particularly those controlling the productions of big stars.

"The situation in Ohio," declared Mr. Mandelbaum, "has become almost intolerable for exhibitors, large and small. I understand that the same conditions exist in practically all territories. And the stars and manufacturers who are losing money on their productions, or failing to make a justified profit, because of it, are experiencing financial difficulties equally with the exhibitors.

Unfair All Around

"It is absolutely impossible for exhibitors, under the present systems of distribution, to keep their box offices open and give the producers a square deal. And it is equally impossible for the exhibitor to get a square deal. Knowing that program distribution will not pay the costs and show a profit on a $75,000 production, the manufacturing distributors, planning a series of that calibre, create special brand names for them and then proceed to offer them through separate departments in their own exchanges, to exhibitors who do not have contracts for their regular program releases.

"That is absolutely unfair to the exhibitor who has a program contract. He is entitled to first call on the real quality specials made by the manufacturers whose 'regular stuff' he is playing every week in the year around. Does he get first call? He certainly does not. Instead, he gets up some morning and finds the opposition house plastered with six-sheet announcements of the first of a series of Masterman features. He can read over again the trade journal announcement of three or four of the profit-mulcting premiums demanded weeks before that Masterman was under contract to the program company whose productions this exhibitor uses on contract. But that doesn't make any difference. The exchange promptly notifies him that he is booked solid, that he cannot cancel without forfeiting his 'good-faith-I-won't-steal-but-you-can' cash deposit, and that the opposition is paying three times as much a day for these Masterman specials as he is paying for the regular stuff. The fact that this exhibitor would have been willing to pay the same amount didn't merit consideration.

Shied at New Plan

"When our cooperative booking policy, based on the fundamental features of the franchise system upon which the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is founded, was first presented to Ohio exhibitors, they looked upon it with suspicion. They had been fooled and betrayed so many times, by so many different methods, that anything new was distrusted. They admitted that there was an urgent and vital need for some system that would relieve them by exchanges for permitting them to book star productions of known popularity and appeal. They were doubtful, not of the practicality of our plan, but of the sincerity of purpose behind it.

"This plan consists of making each exhibitor who adopts it a stockholder in The First National Exhibitors' Company of Ohio. This is the same general relation which exists between the exchanges owing First National franchises and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., itself. The exhibitors of Ohio, similarly with the various exchanges of First National have their theatres figured on a percentage basis. These percentages vary from ten per cent down to one per cent, and as low as one-tenth of one per cent. To illustrate: one theatre, because of size, location, gross earning power and necessity for first runs, it classified as a ten per cent franchise holder. Its stock holdings in The First National Exhibitors' Company is determined by that percentage, and after the franchise is granted, it pays in on each production as it is purchased by the distributing company, ten per cent of the cost price. This sum represents its rental for the film. The duration of the run is determined by the exhibitor at the time he obtains his franchise. He plays the picture for the agreed length of time, meanwhile having absolute protection against competition, and against the possibility that another exhibitor, competing with him, may go to the exchange and have his offer of a higher rental accepted.

No Repeat Rental

"The print then goes to the Franchise holder who has second run. If the first-run account desires to play a return date, he can do so by application for the first open time which does not conflict with later run accounts in his territory. He pays no film rental for this repeat booking. The only charge made averages one dollar a reel to pay for the labor of inspecting, cleaning and handling print in exchange.

"The exhibitors own the film for their territory, and by this plan of cooperation they have all the opportunity they want to make every production earn the greatest possible revenue for them, and for the star or producer who makes it.

"The dolars and cents value to exhibitors of real cooperation is shown in numerous instances which have arisen since The First National Exhibitors' Company was started. One theatre, a first-run house, is paying less than $600 a week for Chaplin comedies.

"The plan is graduated so that exhibitors with small theatres can obtain franchises for amounts as low as one-tenth of one per cent of the cost to the exchange of each print purchased.

"Consider the value of this system to stars and independent producers. It enables the exhibitors to vary their rental prices in accordance with the value, quality and box office merit of each individual production.

It is understood that a booking policy somewhat similar in application is in operation in the Dallas, Texas, exchange of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Paramount Gets Drew Comedies

One to Be Released Each Month Beginning in January—Three Productions Already Finished for Distribution

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced this week that it will distribute the Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies, beginning in January. It is the plan to release one each month, known as Paramount-Drew Comedies. The contract between Famous Players-Lasky and the Drews, or V. B. K. Film Corporation as producer, was arranged through W. E. Shallenberger.

Through mutual friends, Amedee J. Van Beuren, whose active connection with the Van Beuren Bill Posting Company and control of various motion picture theatres and places of amusement in the United States, was brought in touch with Mr. and Mrs. Drew, with the result that a contract was executed, the V. B. K. Film Corporation was formed and the production of two-reel comedies was commenced almost immediately.

Thus with the signing of the contract for distribution through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is also announced that three attractions are already finished for release. They are "Once a Mason," written by Albert Payson Terhune, an adaptation from a story published in the Green Book; "The Amateur Liar," by the same author and published in story form in the same magazine, and "Romance and Ring" by Emma Anderson Whitman.

"These productions, as in the case with all the pictures in which the Drews have appeared, have been directed solely by Mrs. Drew and edited by her. The interiors were screened at the Biograph studios.

In connection with the future producing plans of the two screen stars, Mrs. Sidney Drew said: "Comparisons are ofttimes odious, but I want our host of friends to know that we are doing bigger things than my fondest ambitions ever hoped to realize.

"In the pictures to be released through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, there will be no limit to expense, so long as we get what we want. The first three releases already completed, in each instance cost more than five times what we expended on our other productions; not a single prop, whether furniture, costuming or anything that goes to an interior set, has ever been used in pictures before and not an exterior location used by us was ever photographed for the screen. This will give an idea as to what detail and originality we are employing in our new films.

"I feel that the time has come when new ideas and brains unhampered by studio traditions must be engaged and no expense has been or will be spared to realize the last word in quality of production. All our interior sets are made up from drawings, worked out by an interior decorator."

In connection with the distribution of the Paramount-Drew Comedies, Walter E. Greene, Managing Director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of this department, said: "The contract with the V. B. K. Film Corporation for the distribution of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew's comedies includes the foreign, as well as the United States rights. The Drew comedies are unlike anything else the screen has to offer. Their popularity as dispensers of good cheer comes as a direct result for exceptional ability backed by hard work. The comedies will be booked on our star series plan and our agreement which calls for a minimum distribution of one hundred prints in the United States gives an idea of what a great circulation these films will have. A big advertising and exploitation campaign, prepared along novel lines, is already under way based on the widely established popularity of these artists."

Six Vitagraph Stars Complete First Cycle

VITAGRAPH inaugurated the Corinne Griffith series of nine Blue Ribbon features on November 25 with "Miss Ambition," a modern drama based on an original story by Rex Taylor. Miss Griffith is the fifth of Vitagraph's star sectette to appear on the program since the announcement some time ago of the company's new booking plan whereby exhibitors are supplied with stars and release dates a year in advance.

Up to now the Blue Ribbon releases under the new system have been: Earle Williams in "A Diplomatic Mission," Gladys Leslie in "The Mating," Harry T. Morey in "The King of Diamonds," and Alice Joyce in "Everybody's Girl."

The latter was listed for release the week of November 18, immediately preceding "Miss Ambition."

Bessie Love, the sixth of the Vitagraph feature stars, is scheduled to make her first appearance on the Blue Ribbon program on December 2 in "The Dawn of Understanding," this completing the first cycle of star series releases under what has been termed "A Democratic, not an Autocratic, Booking Plan and Policy."

In "Miss Ambition" Miss Griffith was directed by Henry-Houry, who directed her in "Love Watches" and "The Clutch of Circumstance," two of her recent releases. She has with her a supporting cast which includes Betty Blythe, Walter McGrail, Denton Vane and Templar Saxe.

"Musical Comedy Picture" Next for Lee Kids

"Smiles," described as "the first musical comedy of the screen," has been started in Los Angeles by Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox kids, under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom.

This is the third of the Lee children's pictures that Mr. Gillstrom has staged—the others being "Tell It to the Marines" and "Swat the Spy." Ralph H. Spence, special writer of humorous subjects and sub-title specialist for William Fox, wrote the original story of "Smiles."

This Happy Little Party is Composed of Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph; Corinne Griffin and William Duncan

Bluebird Names Its New Releases

Bluebird last week announced what its officials regard as an important schedule of films for the period extending from December 23 to February 3.

The list comprises seven subjects and features six of the Bluebird stars. Priscilla Dean is featured in the productions, "She Hired a Husband" and "Miss Doris, Safe Cracker."

Carmel Myers, in "The Beautiful Mongrel," has also a role that calls upon her verve and dash, it is said.

The films and their release dates on the Bluebird advance schedule are as follows: "The Light of Victory," featuring Monroe Salisbury, December 23; "The Sea Flower," featuring Juanita Hansen, December 30; "She Hired a Husband," January 6; "The Beautiful Mongrel," January 13; "Home, James," featuring Ruth Clifford, January 20; "Sealed Orders," featuring Fritzi Brunette, January 27; "Miss Doris, Safe Cracker," February 3.

"Hearts of Love" Goes on Program

The American Feature Film Corporation, New York, this week sent out notices to the effect that "Hearts of Love" is not a state rights production, as various buyers throughout the country think. The picture has been placed for distribution through the General Film program, and no territory in the States is open. Foreign rights of the picture are being disposed of through the American Feature Film Corporation.

Stage People Witness Houdini Serial

Officers and members of the Dramatic Comedy Club, the Theatre Club, Inc., and men from the State Women's War Relief Service Club, the Theatre Assembly Service Club, and the Y. M. C. A. Eagle Hut in Bryant Park attended the private showing of "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, at the Strand theatre recently.

"The Master Mystery" Is Novelized for Book

Grossart and Dunlap announce the December publication of "The Master Mystery," novelized by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey from the serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini and produced by the B. A. Rolfe Productions.

The book will be profusely illustrated with scenes from the photoplay.

Do You Want Foch?

NO—we are not offering you the services of the distinguished commander himself, but those of his double—Captain Joseph Morrison.

With a record of twenty-four years' service in the French army the Captain had been honorably pensioned when the Hun set out in 1914 to place his blood-stained mark on the soil of France. Pensions stopped when France found it necessary to pay the cost of a new war, and the Captain was not fit for active duty.

So he came to this country, where his brother, Maurice Morrison, had become a celebrated tragedian on the Yiddish stage.

The Captain has acted a bit since he came here—and he is said to be a good actor.

He has taught French with considerable success.

He helped train Uncle Sam's armies.

But now the funds are low—and he is striving hard to be able to go back to France in May.

He believes—and so do we—that this picture and story should throw enough work his way to chase a certain well known wolf. The photo shows Captain Morrison as General Foch in the Goldwyn Liberty Loan trailer, where he appeared with such stars as Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh, Pauline Frederick, Madge Kennedy and Tom Moore.

You can reach the Captain at 642 West 124th street.

IN full charge of the Goldwyn studios, secured from Triangle, at Los Angeles, is a man who less than a year ago had never been behind the scenes in a motion picture manufacturing plant. He is Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, which has moved its studio and producing staffs from Fort Lee to the Coast.

In regard to this position, Goldwyn said this week: "Back of the appointment of Mr. Lehr to this highly important post is a business romance paralleled by few in the history of the cinema, famous for overnight successes—and failures.

"A year ago he was a successful business man, a friend of Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn. When Mr. Goldfish cast about in his mind for someone to take the then vacant business managership of Goldwyn's plant at Fort Lee, he recalled that Mr. Lehr had spoken of his interest in motion pictures and his desire to enter the game from the producing end."

Presently Mr. Lehr moved his family to New York and took a desk at Fort Lee.

Mr. Lehr says now that it wasn't half as hard as he feared it might be to learn the motion picture business. Despite assiduously circulated reports to the contrary, he observes, it is much like any other mercantile business and can be conducted on lines fully as sane and safe.

Shortly after Mr. Lehr reached Fort Lee the big studios on top of the hill began to feel the effects of his presence. A few days after his arrival he installed a system of charting production that is said to have proved a remarkable contribution—almost a revolution—in the conduct of a cinema studio.

Graphic charts of productions under way were hung on the walls of Mr. Lehr's office, and almost without getting up from his chair he was able to tell at any moment what had been accomplished and what remained to be done if a certain production was to be finished in the time allotted to it.

American Enlarges Sales Force at Pathe

ACCORDING to an announcement from the headquarters of the American Film Company at Chicago, a new arrangement has been made with Pathe Exchanges, Inc., whereby the "Flying A" interests will have one hundred and fifty additional sales representatives to help push the rental of "American" productions.

President S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Company in conference with Mr. Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., stated that a clause was added in this corporation's contract with the American Film Company to the effect that all Pathe selling representatives will also push the sales of the American "Flying A" productions.

This, in addition to the regular "American" salesmen, operating through and stationed at the various Pathe exchanges throughout the country, will make the American sales ramifications comprise nearly two hundred active sales representatives.

All of these men are to be equipped with the complete sales paraphernalia of the American Film Company, such as campaign book for exhibitors, that are issued for each feature; the general comprehensive pamphlet giving the what-is-what and who-is-who of the organization, its stars and productions, a newly issued volume entitled, "One Hundred Reasons Why Exhibitors Should Book the "Flying A" Productions, etc.

The ammunition for the first part of the campaign will be data and details of "The Mantle of Charity," a Margarita Fisher comedy, and "Wives and Other Wives," a Mary Miles Minter screen farce comedy, as well as "All the World to Nothing," the latest of the William Russell Productions' subjects.

These pictures precede "Fair Enough," predicted to prove one of the greatest light comedies with Margarita Fisher featured and with Jack Mower, Bull Montana, Harry McCoy, J. Farrell McDonald, Eugenie Forde and many other well-known actors.

All the animals which from time to time have appeared in Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies are seeen in the latest product of the Sennett studios, "Her First Mistake," released December 1.

Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and Myrtle Lind are the featured players, and Walter Wright directed.

Cinema Gets "The Better 'Ole"

President Cromelin Tells of Acquisition of American Rights to Captain Bruce Bairnsfather's Play

ANNOUNCING its acquisition of the American rights to the motion picture adaptation of Captain Bruce Bairnsfather's celebrated play, "The Better 'Ole," the Cinema Distributing Corporation, through President Paul H. Cromelin, says that Bairnsfather and his creation, Old Bill, the character upon which the play is based, are two names to be conjured with in the United States.

President Cromelin feels that Bruce Bairnsfather needs no introduction to American exhibitors, and that his work as the deviser of a war figure that has made the world laugh, is best told by Major George Haven Putnam, head of the American publishing firm, who knows Bairnsfather intimately. "Captain Bairnsfather,' declared Major Putnam, "has had long practical experience in the fighting line. He has been in the service from the beginning of the War, and for a large part of that time has been actively engaged at the front. The early breaks in his service in the field and in the trenches were caused by the necessity of retiring to hospital for the healing of honorable wounds.

"The young Scotsman began his drawings merely for the amusement of his comrades in the shacks or in the trenches. The first sketches were made on the rough boards of a more-or-less ruined hut, or on the rocks which were dislodged in the digging of the trenches. These sketches were later transcribed for the amusement of the home folks to whom the artist was writing, and were passed from hand to hand in the home circles.

"One of his pictures Bairnsfather sent to the editor of The Bystander, who realized that here was value not only as a work of art, but as a means of inspiration for loyal service and for the cheerful influence with English-speaking people throughout the world. The sketches have also been reproduced in connection with French text and with Italian text."

Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather, Who Contributes "The Better 'Ole" to the Screen

The stage adaptation of "The Better 'Ole" continues to attract in New York at the Greenwich theatre. The Cinema Distributing Corporation expect to have a releasing announcement regarding the film ready shortly.

Captain Bairnsfather was in New York conferring with Cinema Distributing Corporation officials on plans for national publicizing of the picture. But he is now back in London, where a troublesome ear must be treated by his physicians.

It can be said about the publicity campaign, however, that its slogan will be that peace and "The Better 'Ole" bid the people to forget the dispiriting side of the war from which the world is just emerging.

Paramount Studios Again Busy on Features

FOLLOWING the five-weeks' period of enforced inactivity, production work was resumed at the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The first picture to be started after the long lay-off was "Here Comes the Bride," a Paramount production in which John Barrymore is starred.

The director is John Stuart Robertson, and Fair Binney, whose work in the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Sporting Life," produced by Maurice Tourneur, is one of the features of that melodramatic production, appears in the leading feminine role.

Max Marcin and Roy Atwell were the authors of the play, "Here Comes the Bride," which enjoyed a run at the George M. Cohan theatre during the 1917-18 season, and Charles E. Whittaker adapted it for the screen.

Marguerite Clark made a hurried trip from Washington to make a scene to be used as an introduction to her new Paramount picture, "The Golden Bird," which, except for the scene referred to, was completed a month ago.

Miss Clark starts work at the Fifty-sixth street studio on an adaptation for Paramount of Alice Hegan Rice's "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Hugh Ford, who produced it on the stage a dozen years ago, will direct.

The filming of "Two Brides," Mme. Cavalieri's newest Paramount picture, which was started before the shut-down agreement was entered into, has been completed and Director Edward Jose is now engaged in cutting and assembling the film. Cameraman Hal Young is said to have obtained some artistic shots along the Massachusetts coast and in the vicinity of Huntington, L. I. Margaret Turnbull wrote the continuity from Alicia Ramsay's story.

Elsie Ferguson, whose last picture, "His Parisian Wife," was completed a month ago, will soon start on another Artcraft production, probably under the direction of Emile Chautard.

Select Names Cast for Lewis Film

Select Pictures this week announced members of the cast who are to appear with Mitchell Lewis in "The Code of the Yukon," which is to be the first of that star's series for Select.

Tom Santschi and Vivian Rich are foremost in support of Lewis. The comedy end is handled by Jack McDonald, familiarly known as "Slapjack" for his performance of that part in "The Spoilers." In addition to his acting ability, Santschi has also had experience as a director.

Others who have not already been mentioned are Goldie Caldwell, Margaret Landis, Franklyn Hall, William Effee, and Arthur Morrison. In fact, the entire cast is one that lends itself admirably to this production. It was personally selected by Mitchell Lewis.

"Code of the Yukon," as already announced, is a story of the gold fields, in which there is a strong underlying current of love, pathos and humor. It was written by Anthony Paul Kelly, author of "Safe for Democracy," another picture in which Mitchell Lewis is now appearing.

"A Daughter of the Gods" Has Special Drive

According to reports on "A Daughter of the Gods," the Annette Kellermann production, on which the Fox Film Corporation launched a special sales drive about two months ago, nearly 200 theatres all over the country have signed contracts.

Many of these theaters, it is said, booked the picture for a second showing, and in not a few cases—especially during the no-release period—for a third time.

"Although 'A Daughter of the Gods,'" an official of the William Fox organization said this week, "is of course a sufficiently strong attraction to succeed by itself, exhibitors have found "Queen of the Sea" the later Annette Kellermann submarine phantasy helpful to "A Daughter of the Gods."

French Directress Blache Works on Peace Film

Mme. Alice Blache, the French motion picture directress, is working on a new feature, yet unnamed, in which she is starring Dolores Cassinelli, the Italian star, and Albert Roscoe.

"Peace" forms the nucleus of the scenario and it is built around the idea of America rebuilding the devastated parts of France and Belgium destroyed by the Germans in the last World War.

"I am conceiving a film which I want to take to France myself," said Mme. Blache, "the moment that final and enduring peace is signed, and I can cross the ocean.

"I want to visualize the rebuilding of France with the aid of America—I want to picture the transformation of the ruins of Rheims—the ruins of Ypres into prosperous cities. I want to show the world how the war-ridden districts of France, Belgium, the many ruined cities, will be transformed from a smoldering heap of bricks of stone, once more into prosperous towns and villages.

"I want to show in this film how 'No Man's Land,' the barren ground filled with shell-holes where not a tree, nor blade of grass has grown for the last three years, will be transformed by the French peasants into a rich, beautiful agricultural district, where cows will once more graze on green meadows interspersed with fruit-laden apple trees."

Lieutenant Hall Tells of Aviators' Risks

Lieutenant Bert Hall, the American ace who has taken active part in his three years at the front in over one hundred aerial battles, and who is featured in Carle E. Carlton's production, "A Romance of the Air," says that the average life of an aviator is just about twenty years.

In "A Romance of the Air," which recently played at the Rivoli theatre, Franklin B. Coates has interwoven a love story with the thrilling air battles and the scenes of the life of an aviator.

Metro Completes Move to Coast

All Metro and Screen Classics Studio Activities Have Been Permanently Removed from New York to California

MOVING day has arrived at Metro's Eastern studios. All the studio activities of both Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., have been permanently removed from New York to California, and all actual production work will henceforth be done in the new half-million dollar plant being erected at Hollywood, near Los Angeles, Cal.

This will be completed within two months, until which time pictures will be made in the studio at 1025 Lillian Way now in use.

Maxwell Karger, who has long been supervising director of the firm's Eastern productions, will be director general of the entire Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., output. He will be assisted by George D. Baker, present supervisor of Western productions, and formerly director of Metro productions.

The Eastern photographic and camera departments under the supervision of Ray Smallwood, the technical department under Edward J. Shulter, and all other studio business will be transferred to the Western location, and the exodus of players, directors, cameramen and craftsmen of all departments will be complete.

Arrangement for the transportation of this small army of people has already been made by David M. Thompson, studio manager, and the Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., organization will leave at once for its transcontinental trip, headed by the director general himself.

Metro stars in the entourage will include Viola Dana, Emmy Wehlen, and Hale Hamilton, and these will be followed by others at an early date. May Allison and Bert Lytell are already in California, where they have for several months been engaged in the making of Metro feature pictures under the general direction of George D. Baker.

Directors who will accompany Mr. Karger include Herbert Blache, who has just completed the direction of "The Man Who Stayed at Home"; John Ince, whose latest Metro achievement was "Secret Strings," starring Olive Tell, and Henry Kolker, who has been associated with Charles Miller in the preparation of "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," and who also plays the ill-fated "Kaiser" in the same super-feature.

Another Metro director, Harry L. Franklin, accompanied by Mrs. Franklin, left a short time ago for the West Coast. His assistant director, Fred Warren, has already arrived in Hollywood. Albert H. Kelley, assistant director connected with Viola Dana's producing organization, will go to California in the Metro party, and Directors Charles Swickard and Webster Cullison are already on the West Coast.

Ray Smallwood and E. J. Shulter will supervise the installation of their respective departments in the Western plant. M. P. Staulcup, Metro's art director, will also go West, Mr. Karger considering this branch of the production work of the utmost importance.

Henri Menessier is already on the West Coast. Patrick Carey, chief carpenter of the Eastern studios, will be in the party, and will co-operate with the West Coast working crew in the handling of the arrangements for the new plant.

Interest Stimulated in "The Prussian Cur"

"WILLIAM FOX has always been known as a keen judge of motion picture values, but he never picked a bigger winner than 'The Prussian Cur,'" declared a man prominent in the Fox Film Corporation who was checking up a list of so-called war pictures.

In the conversation that followed was revealed a bit of motion picture history that illustrated the genius of William Fox for looking into the future and producing pictures that will not lose value because of a sudden change in conditions or because of the limitations of interest in the theme treated.

"The war play I think should be produced," Mr. Fox is quoted as saying, "is one that will have for its theme some phase of the struggle that will be of permanent public interest. Mere battle scenes are not enough; there have been happenings in this conflict which will always be the cause for public discussion, and which always will make this picture a great drawing card.

"The signing of the armistice and the approach of the peace conference have proved the wisdom of this course. The basic theme of 'The Prussian Cur' is the frightfulness of German methods, the treachery of German diplomacy, the efforts of the German Government to debauch and corrupt the governments of other nations and to work its own will even though it had to violate the whole fabric of international law."

Industry Showed Its Strength

Pathe Official Declares That Epidemic Shutdown Was a Revelation of the Industry's Strength

"THE influenza epidemic, which, while it has vistied many personal bereavements on the industry and has caused severe hardship in some quarters, has brought with its blight many beneficial results," declares Mr. Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe, in discussing the outlook attending the period of resumption after the five weeks' shut down.

"It was just as though a vital and overwhelming war demand were made upon a nation, sudden and imperative, and upon the response depended the revelation of the spirit of the people. We all know now how this nation has responded; and it is gratifying now, that the five weeks' cessation of production and release are over, to realize how and in what measure of unity the industry answered the demand.

"The 'shut-down' period has had a unifying effect; it has showed us our strength and our weakness; it has given us a valuable opportunity, in the midst of the headlong rush of production and competition, to pause and take stock of ourselves," continued Mr. Brunet. "It has been both a period of survey and of reconstruction.

"When the representatives in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry of eighteen producing and distributing companies met and signed the agreement to suspend production and release for four weeks, beginning October 14, seventy-five per cent of the theatres of the country already had closed. That seemed to spell wide calamity. Those that remained open promptly rose to the emergency in cooperating with the health authorities and aiding the work of prevention by slides carrying official warning.

"'Put your house in order!' was the slogan all over the country, and that New York City remained open, with its teeming population must stand as a testimonial of the intelligent professional and broad public-spirited work of Sydney Cohen, New York State President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the various members who gave the fullest cooperation to the Health Commissioner.

"This is cited as merely being typical of other sections that remained open, of which our branches have furnished the most complete data. The spirit has been to aid and to serve."

Valentine Grant to Star in Olcott Film

VALENTINE GRANT, whose past appearances in motion pictures have been reported as very successful, is to return to New York within the near future, it was announced this week, to star in a production to be produced by the Sidney Olcott Players.

Wide publicity has not been given the proposed feature as yet, but it has been made known the picture is to be based on the reconstruction that must enter the lives of men and women after the sacrifices made during the world war. The story is said to be written from a viewpoint hitherto undeveloped.

Last spring Miss Grant suffered a nervous breakdown and was confined to her bed for ten weeks through her intensive efforts on behalf of various war funds and charities.

She had given a great deal of time to the welfare of Uncle Sam's boys at Castle William, Governors Island, and was at the same time very active with the work for the relief of the Belgian war orphans and homeless children, in connection with the Princess Albert de Lign Fund, for the maintenance of her "Rescue Home" at The Hague. The results obtained by Miss Grant have been especially commended by His Excellency Baron de Cartier, Minister to this country from Belgium.

Not content with her other activities, she also devoted a portion of her time in aiding Lady Kingston of Rosscommon, Ireland, with her Shamrock Fund for the building of a hospital in Dublin for the care of disabled Irish soldiers and sailors.

After her long illness Miss Grant, when able to travel, went west to her home in Seattle, Wash., to recuperate and immediately upon the return of her strength she plunged into the work of entertaining the boys of her own U. S. A. at Camp Lewis, near Tacoma, Wash. Not only did she become a great favorite with the men, but the officers quickly realized what a helpful influence she exerted. So welcome were her efforts that during the quarantine of the camp, owing to the epidemic of Spanish influenza, Miss Grant was the only civilian possessing a pass to come and go, and many a boy was made happier for the little kindnesses.

Universal Announces Its Revised Schedule

In concluding an elaborately planned advertising campaign for their many offerings the officials of Universal carefully revised the releasing schedule as follows:

"The Wildcat of Paris," featuring Priscilla Dean, December 16; "Danger—Go Slow," with Mae Murray as star, December 30; "Roped," featuring Harry Carey, January 13; "Destiny," featuring Dorothy Phillips, January 27; "Dearie," featuring Mary MacLaren, February 10; "The Scarlet Strain," featuring Mae Murray, February 24, and "Boiling Over," featuring Harry Carey, March 10.

Reports were said to be at hand from many sources that "The Lure of the Circus," in which Eddie Polo, "the strong man of the screen," is starred, was in strong demand. The release dates for the first episode of this serial was set forward to November 18 instead of November 25.

"The Turn in the Road" Feature Completed

The Brentwood Film Corporation has completed the filming of "The Turn in the Road," and King W. Vidor, who directed it, is now cutting the picture and personally supervising its tinting.

King Vidor uses a megaphone only when directing a large number of people, but when they were filming a big cafe scene at the Brentwood studios, Vidor became so accustomed to his "Shout Horn" that he materially added to the gaiety of his extras by continuing to talk through it even when making a few emphatic remarks intended only for the ear of his assistant standing close at his side.

No Change in Blackton's Producing Plans

Though the victorious ending of the world war will materially change the plans of many film producers, it will have no effect on Commodore J. Stuart Blackton's schedule.

At least not so far as "The Battle Cry of Liberty," which he has announced as the sequel of "The Battle Cry of Peace" is concerned.

New Distributing Company for New England

PARAGON Pictures, Inc., enters the motion picture field to distribute big pictures throughout New England States.

George A. Dodge, who conceived and built Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, New England's largest pleasure resort; the Georgian, Boston, Mass., and Pemberton Inn and Hotel Pemberton, Hull, Mass., is the President of Paragon Pictures, Inc.

Hovey Dodge, also well-known to the New England exhibitors as sales representative of Pathe for the past two years, is Secretary and Treasurer.

Mr. E. E. Weakley, former booker and office manager of Pathe Boston office, has joined Paragon Pictures, Inc., as Office Manager and will be assisted by Miss Dorothy Pearlman, also formerly of Pathe.

Messrs. Dodge and Hand intend to cover the New England Territory personally in the interests of the new company, thereby maintaining a closer and more pleasant relationship between distributor and exhibitor, carrying out the policies that earned for Mr. Hand the title of "Billy Sunday Hand."

"Carmen of the Klondike," has also been taken over from S. A. Lynch Enterprises for distribution through Paragon Pictures, Inc., which serves all existing contracts from November 20. Dolores Cassinelli Has Patriotic Suggestion

Dolores Cassinelli, the Italian film star, is nothing if not patriotic. After her activities for the war, she is now apparently concentrating her attentions on "Peace Celebrations." She has just made the following suggestion by letter to Mayor Hylan:

"Having read your cablegram to Marshal Foch and your invitation to him, may I be permitted to make a suggestion.

"Although there is no deed, there is no action too great to show our deep gratitude, it seems to me only just if the invitation you have so kindly extended to the Field Marshal should also comprise those other leaders of Victory and Freedom—Gen. Sir Douglas Haig, General Diaz and last but not least, the King of the Belgians.

My humble suggestion is that the City of New York should have an International Peace Celebration to which the abovementioned leaders of Victory and Freedom, together with General John Pershing, should be invited.

"I should feel happy if this suggestion should meet with your approval."

Edward J. Hayes, Who Has Been Placed in Charge of the Mutual Offices in Buffalo

Hayes Brings Experience to Buffalo Job

Edward J. Hayes, better known to countless western new exhibitors as just plain "Eddie," and who during his long film career has managed the local General Film and Metro exchanges, has now been appointed manager of the Mutual Film exchange in Buffalo, succeeding W. A. V. Mack, who takes the Gotham branch.

Mr. Hayes, though still a young man, has had much experience in the film industry, and prior to entering the distribution end of the game managed several big theatres in this part of the state, among them being the Colonial theatre in Elmira and the International in Niagara Falls. As manager of the local Metro office he made a splendid record. He has an unusually wide acquaintance and intimate knowledge of conditions in the trade. Mr. Hayes' successor at the Metro branch is H. W. Kahn, who comes to Buffalo from Albany, bringing with him E. Markins as salesman.

G. E. Dickman, who was connected with the local Metro branch as salesman, has taken a similar position with the Victor Film Exchange, handling the Universal films. The Albany Metro office has been abandoned and combined with the Buffalo outfit. Mr. Hayes has already lined up some big bookings for Mutual in his territory, according to report and anticipates a busy season.

A company has been formed and incorporated at Denver for the production of six or eight state rights subjects during the year, the title of the firm being The Art-O-Graf Film Company. A. B. Thayer, formerly with the Selig Company, is president and producing director, and Tom Gibson is managing editor. Gibson has written the first story which will be released under the title of "German Gold" or "Wolves in Wall Street." The studio of the National Film Company in Englewood, near Denver, has been leased and production work will be started there shortly.

Three Companies in Big Film Deal

Robertson-Cole, Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, and Affiliated Distributors Corporation Agree on Long Time Contract for Film

WHAT an official declared to be one of the most significant and constructive deals in the history of the motion picture industry was closed on Wednesday, November 20th, when a long-term contract was signed between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors Corporation.

The officials of the two corporations who have been in conference in New York since Monday with Walter Hoff Seely, director of the department of motion pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company, are William J. Clark, H. A. Brink, James M. Sheldon, H. C. Cornelius and Charles C. Pettijohn.

Those who read between the lines of film announcements will realize the importance of the transaction. It is expected to be a distinct step towards eliminating haphazard methods and establishing the country's fifth biggest industry upon a sane business basis.

The Banking Affiliations

The transaction marks the entrance of staple business methods into the industry. The Robertson-Cole Company is a banking institution and was one of the country's most important exporting organizations before it became interested in the handling of pictures. Finding a steadily growing demand for American films in every part of the globe, they entered the motion picture business.

At first they were interested in the film solely for export. Realizing that, in order to secure the best in photoplay productions for the world market, they must also control them for this country, a domestic department was organized.

From the first Robertson-Cole have been applying established business methods to the exploitation of their film products. Since their entrance into the field of motion pictures Robertson-Cole have steadily demonstrated that they intend doing things differently. By the terms of the new contract, Robertson-Cole will furnish all pictures for the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation. They have in full operation twenty-six exchanges in the United States and three in Canada, which is expected to guarantee a consistent distribution.

Will Not Produce

"The Robertson-Cole Company is not going into the producing or distributing business," said Walter Hoff Seely, director of the department of motion pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company. "It is determined to act solely as banker and exclusive agent for manufacturers of high-grade pictures who are worthy of the support and co-operation which the Robertson-Cole Company are able to offer through this splendid organization and offices throughout the world.

"We have made a contract with the Mutual and a contract with the Affiliated because we believe they represent the best thought in the industry, and have the most comprehensive plan of distribution and operation."

By the terms of the contract, the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, which is reported to be owned and controlled exclusively by exhibitors, will maintain a committee, which will select from the pictures furnished by Robertson-Cole those best suited and adapted to be marketed as distinct Affiliated releases.

The Robertson-Cole Company are now prepared to furnish to the exchanges of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation at least one feature a week. They have acquired control of the world's rights to the series of de luxe features starring Billie Rhodes, of which eight will be produced in the next twelve months, eight with Henry B. Walthall; eight William Desmond productions, eight features starring Bessie Barriscale, eight with Sessue Hayakawa, besides Martin Johnson's remarkable feature, "Cannibals of the South Seas." News of the transaction whereby Robertson-Cole control the rights to the Barriscale and Hayakawa pictures came to light yesterday.

Several other contracts of reported significance are now pending, including the release of a number of super-features. One of these, announcement of which was authorized yesterday by Robertson-Cole, is Hallie Ermini Rives' story, "Long Lane's Turning," which the National Film Corporation of America is producing, with Henry B. Walthall in the stellar role.

New Releases Scheduled

According to Mr. Seely, definite plans have been formulated for the following releases:

Dec. 8 Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas."

Dec. 15 Billie Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams."

Dec. 22 Henry B. Walthall in "And A Still Small Voice."

Dec. 29 Bessie Barriscale in "A Fair Impostor."

Jan. 5 William Desmond in "The Love of William."

Jan. 12 Sessue Hayakawa in "Bonds of Honor."

Robertson-Cole announce that the deal will not affect its foreign business, which will continue to be expanded along the same lines as formerly.

James Sheldon, former president of the Mutual, and now chairman of the Board of Directors of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, announces that the status of the Mutual Film Corporation has not been changed, except in the name, and will continue to handle the product of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation and the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in their various units.

William J. Clark, the new president of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, announced likewise, and H. A. Brink, president of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, declared as follows:

"The Affiliated Distributors' Corporation having organized its five unit corporations, and effected satisfactory distribution arrangements with Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, is pleased with the arrangement made with Robertson-Cole Company, who will act as bankers for Affiliated and the independent producers of this country."

W. H. Official Talks on Williams Letter

"There is a great deal being said about the wastefulness and consequent bad business in the industry," says an official of W. H. Productions Company, in a noteworthy and interesting message, "and the blame is being placed to a great extent on the producers.

"Producers are no doubt doing everything possible to remedy these discrepancies, and, as Mr. Williams points out in his letter to Motion Picture News, in the issue of November 23, the exhibitor has not been looking far enough ahead in some cases, than the actual dollar he can get today. He has not felt himself a sufficiently important and active enough part of the actual producing of motion pictures.

"He has forgotten that the public will pay up to $2 to see a really good motion picture. Give the public a good show, and give it to them consistently, so that you will warrant their confidence in the dependability of your program, and they will pay a little more to see it.

"If the exhibitors have the courage of their convictions as to the proper method of motion picture exhibiting, and if they will require and get only the best pictures made, we will have less third-rate productions 'tried out' on the public at the actual expense of the exhibitor."

Charles Raven Lead in Rapf Picture

Charles Raven will soon be seen on the screen in his latest role in Harry Rapf's production, "Wanted for Murder." Mr. Raven, sometimes known on the stage as Charles Romeo, is well known in pictures, having played leads and juveniles opposite many of the prominent stars.

In one of the scenes in "Wanted for Murder," Mr. Raven goes up in an airplane. His pilot on this occasion was Allan Adams, who last Monday was killed when executing the dangerous "tail spin."

"After the War" Opens at the Broadway

M. H. HOFFMAN, sales manager of the Argosy Film Company, announces that, after much consideration, it has been decided to give the premiere showing of the film, "After the War," at the Broadway theatre. The picture will open at the latter theatre Sunday, November 24, for an indefinite run.

So much interest has been aroused in this subject, it is asserted, that M. Kashin, manager of the Broadway, contemplates breaking a rule to extend the run of "After the War" beyond the usual seven-day showing.

Mr. Hoffman, in the meantime, has had advance inquiries and proposals from state right buyers scattered over various important sections of the country for an early distribution of the picture. He asserts that the territorial film men recognize this subject as one of the timeliest on the market today.

"For those who wish to know the trend of expert opinion on the kind of pictures wanted now," said Mr. Hoffman, "the letters I have received would prove enlightening to the last degree. These letters prove that exhibitors and distributors are keen for subjects that take up the skein of human events from the finish of the war. The latter marks a starting point for all things that must arrest public attention."

Nathanson of Canada Boosts Houdini Serial

N. S. NATHANSON, managing director of Regal Films, Ltd., of Canada, on the occasion of his recent visit to the B. A. Rolfe Studios, where the Houdini serial is being filmed, is reported to have said:

"At last exhibitors have a box office insurance, fifteen consecutive weeks of big business.

"Take the star, in this instance Houdini was the inspiration for the story. In him we have a showman with predominant drawing power, a man who stands alone in his work, who has practically mystified the entire world, whose name is a household word.

"The story, 'The Master Mystery,' written by Arthur B. Reeve, a man whose successes have been the delight of millions of fans, whose short stories and books are not alone possessed by the major number of this country's inhabitants, but have been translated into many languages.

"In the producer, B. A. Rolfe, we have a name that when flashed on the screen is the epitome of keen dramatic values, fine attention to detail, artistic ensemble.

"I spent one day at the Rolfe studio and in that short time I witnessed much that was a revelation to me."

New Interest Created in Patriotic Films

DEVELOPMENTS growing out of the signing of the armistice which suddenly closed the world war, are reported by Jewel Productions to have created new interest in its chief patriotic films.

The latter are said to have been automatically converted by public sentiment into victory pictures. "The Yellow Dog," in particular, is declared to have accrued renewed value as the result of the sensational development of Bolshevism and post war propaganda by the enemy.

This is said to have been to a large extent disclosed by the activities of the boy detectives comprising the Anti-Yellow Dog clubs of the country.

These clubs, as a direct outcome of the belief that the Hun influence has come to life again, have adopted a new slogan, "The Dogs Are At It Again!"

One report was to the effect that the United States Secret Service had increased its forces nearly fifty per cent since the negotiations for peace began.

Screen Color Work in Pathe's "Infatuation"

THE colored scenes in the Pathe special offering, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, is said by them to mark the highest point in the achievement of chromatic cinema display, in which the house of Pathe was the pioneer more than twenty years ago.

At the Pathe Color Studios, where this latest achievement was made, there are said to be employed nearly 1,500 persons. The structure is an imposing six-story building and there are still in service there some of the workers who were with Pathe twenty years ago, when, seeing the great possibilities of the cinema, work was begun on the first colored film—work by hand, a tedious, painstaking process, which is declared to have justified all of the labor in the results, which pointed the way to ultimate perfection.

To this end Mr. Charles Pathe enlisted the services of chemists, engineers and specialists—trying and accepting, trying and rejecting various media—until thirteen years ago, when the first machine for color printing of film was perfected.

There has since been made frequent modifications, until now the process has reached a degree of perfection said to be unequalled by any other. It makes a quick production as well as absolute perfection in printing and registering.

And, in "Infatuation" it is said to show Gaby Deslys as a veritable rainbow girl.

Director Stahl Enthuses on New Reed Picture

John M. Stahl, who is directing the first picture Florence Reed, the emotional star, is making for United Picture Theatres of America, has nearly completed the production and is so sure of its great possibilities that he is unusually enthusiastic.

"One of the greatest characterizations ever seen on the screen," Director Stahl is reported as saying, "will be revealed by Miss Reed in the forthcoming and practically completed superpicture which Tribune Productions, Inc., is furnishing for the United.

"That popular star has accomplished such great work in the past, that we are confronted with the difficult task of reaching and of surpassing the high standard of artistry she has established."

Gordon's First United for Early Release

With the practical completion of production and the details of cutting and titling already in hand an early release of the Kitty Gordon first superpicture is promised by J. A. Berst, President of United Picture Theatres.

The production is adapted from the Red Cross romance "The Nurse's Story," written by Adele Bleneau.

In "Bad Men and Good Scenery," the second in the series of "Outdoor" pictures produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company and released through Mutual, is shown the "Jackson Hole," the former rendezvous of the gun-men and outlaws of the bad lands of Montana.

Mary MacLaren in "Vanity Pool"

THIS is melodrama, pure and simple, and as such it should be advertised.

Do not attempt to make it a problem play, an "expose of society" or anything of that sort. Base your whole appeal on the interest the plot holds, the thrills your patrons will get and on the strength of the cast.

It always pays to be honest with the public. And there is a big element of the public that likes melodrama, especially when there are six noted players in the cast. It likes to feel the heart strings pulling, to get a tear now and then and to be kept up in the clouds so far as the next developments are concerned.

There are times when "Vanity Pool" nears the daring, but it is really clean throughout. It might be called in your advertising a realistic story of a poor girl's adventures into the maze of politics and the shams of the upper strata. And by such exploitation you can make it appeal to all of those who haven't reached the top of the social ladder—and most of us don't want to get there.

THERE is plenty of "story" here. Let's look at the human appeal of it.

Gerald Harper and his wife, married fifteen years and childless, lives on the edge of Vanity Pool. Gerald wanted to be governor for the power that the office would give him and his wife wants him to succeed because she envies the social position that the mistress of the state would give her.

Drew Garrett is a "friend of the family." At the start of the picture we are led to believe that he is a little more than a friend of one of them, but that part is carried just far enough to heighten the plot without being suggestive. Diana Casper is in love with him and Diana has great influence with the political boss whose support Harper needs to win success. And so Mrs. Harper persuades Garrett to play his end of the game so that Diana may bring the boss around to Harper's support.

But while Mrs. Harper plays her part of the game in the political tangle, Harper takes her place for the moment as a social investigator and it is then that he meets Mary Harper, a pure woman-child of seventeen, the daughter of a down and out stage couple, the wife still believing herself beautiful and the father a drunken non-essential.

AT first Harper is moved by pity for the girl whom he sees gold amid the clay of her surroundings and he provided elegant things for her, under an assumed name. There is nothing improper in her relations, for really Mary believes that the man is in love with her and when he yields to the temptation to kiss her, she believes it a promise of marriage.

This is a one column star cut supplied by Universal Exchanges. It will fit into advertising or serve to illustrate stories

Through a chance observation on the street Diana is given cause to suspect Harper and follows him to Mary's house and there through the gossip of the neighbors learns that he and Mary are expected to marry. With this information Diana confronts Garrett and declares that unless she marries him she will take the information to the political boss, Flint. Garrett spurns her and then Flint is set on the trail.

But here the plot takes another turn. Mrs. Harper is willing to make any sacrifice to win the social position of governor's wife and with the aid of Garrett Mary is introduced into her home as her friend that she is about to adopt. The girl agrees to live there to silence the tongues of slander, but quickly a love affair with Garrett begins to develop.

THE climax comes when Flint denounces her as a woman of the streets and then she returns to her tenement home, where Garrett goes to seek her. In the meantime, Flint finds that it is impossible to win the favor of Diana and after a scene in the private room of a restaurant she plunges to her death.

In the meantime the sacrifice that little Mary has been willing to make have persuaded the Harpers that life on the edge of Vanity Pool is not worth while and they are won back to love for each other, while Garrett and Mary find true affinity.

The ending will entirely satisfy the audiences. It comes as the logical finale of a series of quick moving incidents and the best part of it is that one does not know until almost the end of the picture what is to be the fate of the little girl of the tenements, for it is not until the latter part of the picture that it is shown that the only interest that Garrett has in Mrs. Harper is in bringing her and her husband closer together again.

STRENGTH of the cast is one of the chief points to be brought out. In another article in this section you will find additional matter about the players who take part. We would advise not only featuring the star, Mary MacLaren, but playing up the names of Anna Q. Nilsson, Franklyn Farnum, Marin Sais, Virginia Chester and Thomas Holding Strong. In this way you are going to get a mighty wide appeal.

There is another strong point in the lavish scenes that are shown in the picture, especially as contrasted with the tenement settings.

Beautiful gowns always appeal and there are some striking ones worn by Misses Nilsson and Sais, some especially daring ones by the latter in her role as more or less of an adventuress.

But all in all the proper appeal to give this picture is that of one full of thrills, of unexpected turns in the plot, of good, old fashioned melodrama of the cleaner sort, with a kick in it and plenty of heart interest.

"Melodrama" is too often used in criticism as a reproach, but as long as people are human it is going to have an appeal and a big one with the masses.

We wouldn't try, therefore, to make anything of a class appeal with this production. We would go out into the highways and byways and try to get them all in. We would give it a straight heart interest and talk about that all the time.

At the left Mary MacLaren, in the center Marin Sais as the woman lobbyist and Frank Brownlee as the political boss. At right Anna Q. Nilsson as the wife

Straight Heart Appeal to Be Your Main Reliance With Thi

THERE are plenty of individual striking incidents and a lot of side-lines to talk about in advertising "Vanity Pool," but the wise policy with this picture is to appeal directly to the heart interest. When you are able to do that you do not need anything of the sensational in your exploitation.

We are all too familiar with the poor girl of the tenements who is forced by starvation to the brink of the precipice or who yields to the lure of society and the love of fine clothes. But there is nothing of this sort to this picture, except a few threads of the plot that lead up for a few moments in that direction, only to let us find that we are going the wrong way.

You do not need to be told that the women are the ones on which you center your main drives. When you get the women to your theatre they are pretty sure to bring the men folk along with them. And for this reason we would make the appeal directly to the woman element here.

And remember that the millionaires and the leaders of society who come to your theatre are few as compared with the other classes. This is a picture with which to put over a strictly popular appeal.

HERE you have an excellent title and one that should be used in big letters in all of your advertising. We would advise playing it even stronger than the name of the star, but we would use it so that the public would gather immediately what the title means.

For one of the first displays there could be an excellent effect achieved by using immediately at the top of the advertisement in, say, 24-point type, the words, "Are You Living on the Edge of (and then in large type) Vanity Pool," and under this, again in smaller type, the caution, "Don't Fall In."

If teaser campaigns go well with you, this will form an excellent one.

But we would not advise running a teaser campaign on this picture in the newspaper displays. If you can give a considerable volume of advertising to this in advance, we would rather touch on the interest in the story and on the noted players in the cast.

You don't need anything of the trick advertising here. It might only serve to mislead, while if you want to get over the heart appeal you ought to tell the real truth.

TO get back to the story: As soon as you mention the poor girl of the tenements a lot of people are going to jump at the sex stuff, and that's the reason why you should tell more about the production than you usually do—to let the public see what sort of a story it really is.

Now suppose you have used the general lines that we have just suggested for one of your displays, or merely the title of the picture with the name of the star:

"She loved her husband, but sh loved the glory of society the mor She was willing to connive that h might be governor and she becom the first lady of the state, but it too the purity and the innocence and th self sacrifice of the girl of the ten ments to show her the gold in th dross of life and the happiness true devotion."

"He kissed her. He didn't mea it, but she thought it a promise marriage. Then came the truth— that he was married—but she mad a sacrifice for him until true lov stepped in and she hurried back t her home in the tenements where th real man came for her and led he into the life of ever happiness."

"There are three women in th story, none of them really bad, bu two of them trying to use each othe and the innocent girl of the ten ments for their own ends. Yet he purity won the dominant man an he straightened it all out, too late t save the life of one, but in time t bring happiness to the husband an wife and to himself—and the girl.

OF course, you are going to take ad vantage of the name of the star i putting over this picture. She is well know as an actress who came up from the botto very quickly—as one of the finds of th screen. In some of your advertising yo will find it to advantage to use striking pi tures of her, but where the space is avai able we would certainly mention the name of the five leading players in her support- Anna Nilsson, Franklyn Farnum, Mari Sais, Thomas Holding and Virginia Che ter. On another page we are giving yo some facts about these players for use i your newspaper stories.

You can achieve a splendid effect i

WOMAN APPEAL

Director Helps You Put This Picture Over with the Fair

ELSEWHERE we have suggested that you play up the woman appeal strong in advertising "Vanity Pool." There are three strong woman characters in this picture and it is from them that the chief part of your word of mouth advertising is coming.

You have another strong point in this picture by calling attention to the fact that it was directed by one of the most successful of all directors, and a woman, Ida May Park. "Broadway Love" and "The Grand Passion" are among the greatest of her recent successes.

bringing out the woman element in this picture by using pictures of the three leading women characters. In this case we would take scene pictures (and let us say that they are unusually good in this case) and block out the figure desired, running a picture of Miss MacLaren in her dress as a girl of the tenements in the center and one of Miss Sais and of Miss Nilsson on either side.

Then either draw in or use in type form captions under each picture, with the name of the player at the top, something in this order:

ANNA Q. NILSSON

As Carol Harper—She lives at the edge of Vanity Pool. She wanted her husband to be governor because of the position in society that it would give her

MARIN SAIS

As Diana Casper—She plotted to win the politician's support for the society woman's husband so that in turn she might win the man she sought.

MARY MACLAREN

As Mary Royal—She was only a girl of the tenements, but the innocence of her brought husband and wife to know true love and herself real happiness.

FURTHER benefit can be had of this all-star cast by using in the corners and at the sides of the advertisement pictures of the various players. Some theatres find this a most impressive style of advertising. Be careful in doing this not to get a messy effect, but make each one of the players stand out for themselves.

It is not often that you have such an opportunity and while this sort of advertising is not a good thing to follow regularly, it is mighty good once in awhile. Everyone of these players has a following in your community and you certainly will not be doing the most possible with the picture unless you take advantage of that fact.

One trouble with many exhibitors is that they have either not analyzed the drawing power of certain players or they merely pass up the knowledge that they have gained. It is only too true that in many cases the patrons know more about the players than do the managers of the theatre. You have, then, a right to bank on a certain knowledge of the artists. We are generally opposed to the use of a series of names in a display, but this is a case where every name will be read with interest, and the effect upon the reader will be to convince him that this is a picture that he cannot afford to miss.

Leave out the adjectives. The names will do the biggest share of the work.

WE would carry this element of the picture still further and make some showing on it in the lobby. You are provided with large pictures of Miss MacLaren which can be used, and you can doubtless obtain pictures of the other players, but if you cannot there are scene pictures in two sizes, and these admirably picture all of the players.

Go to a little trouble here and make a different sort of display than you usually do. Instead of merely putting these pictures all together in the frame that you usually use, mount them on heavy cardboard and then have your artist put on them in letters large enough to attract attention the name of the player, at least, and better still, something about the character that each one plays in this picture. For instance, in connection with the newspaper advertising we have made some suggestions as to the lines for three of them.

In the scene pictures that we have reproduced in these pages we have shown all of the principal characters, with separate pictures of Misses MacLaren and Nilsson.

NOW under this matter use with each picture the words "In 'Vanity Pool.'" Now you may think that it is repetition to use this in poster after poster, but you are seeking to impress the public with the unusual quality of the cast, and this is the best way to do it.

By the simple use of the scene pictures or stills you can have a lobby display that will cause more comment than a dozen freak things that you might do.

You won't need to use "magnificent" or "wonderful," or any such expression. The people will stop and look at the pictures, they will read the captions and will "buy" the picture.

Referring back to advertising, if you can afford to have your cuts made and want to put on a real advance campaign on this picture there could be nothing better than to than to follow this same plan, using each of the characters separately in one column advertisements, with the captions as indicated below them, with the addition of the name of the theatre and the date.

Remember that here you have a story and a star PLUS the supporting cast.

TO GET BUSY WITH

Ample Material Afforded for a Lavish Campaign

FROM your nearest Universal exchange you can get a full line of material for the exploitation of this picture, including paper, advertising and scene cuts and two sizes of scene pictures, which will be found especially striking.

The paper includes two one sheets, one half sheet, two 3 sheets and one 6 sheet and one 24 sheet.

There is a set of black and white stills 8 x 10 and a set of gelatines 11 x 14 and a 22 x 28 picture of Mary MacLaren.

Advertising cuts come in one and two column sizes, there being two of the one columns. There are three scenes in one, two and three column sizes beside the star cut. All of these can be well employed in advertising of your own design.

Use All of These Players If You Would Get Full Action

USE of the expression "All Star Cast" has been so abused that it is almost meaningless now unless you back up the statement. You have a notable array of players here, and we have already made some suggestions for taking advantage of them. But let us add here the warning not to use that "All Star Cast" expression and let it go at that.

In all of the exploitation be sure to give the names of these players, and if you can add a few lines about what they have done in the past you are going to get more people into your theatre. And the unusual part about these players is that you have an opportunity to appeal to the followers of various sorts of motion pictures with their presence here.

Now by making reference to the supporting players we do not mean that Miss MacLaren should be played down. Use an attractive picture of her in all your advertising, but that does not keep you from using the other matter too. Where you have an attractive title such as "Vanity Pool" you get the attention to your displays quickly and you won't have to worry so much about crowding up the display.

Miss MacLaren has had one of the most meteoric careers in the history of motion pictures and the story of it makes mighty good reading matter for the papers. Most of you remember that she was discovered by the celebrated woman director, Lois Weber, when she had the part of the maid in "Where Are My Children?" Miss Weber saw in her a real star and since then she has scored some big successes. Her most recent pictures were "Bread" and "A Model's Confession."

WE mentioned the appeal to lovers of various classes of motion pictures. Now watch it and use it.

Marin Sais, who has the part of the woman lobbyist, is best known for her serial work. She is one of the most daring actresses on the screen, and if you are in a section where serials are popular it will be well to feature her strong. Her last work of this sort was with Kalem in "Social Pirates."

If you have a serial night in your theatre use a special slide that night saying that Marin Sais is to be seen in support of Mary MacLaren in "Vanity Pool."

Franklyn Farnum has been a star in his own right in many pictures. He has a strong following in many sections of the country and the mere mention of his presence in the cast is going to bring a lot of his admirers. In this picture he is the man who sets things straight and wins the love of the girl of the tenements.

Thomas Holding will appeal to an entirely different element. He is an actor of the more dignified type. He is an Englishman and has had a long stage career and has appeared in motion pictures since the days of "Bella Donna." He is probably best known to the public as the leading man for Mme. Petrova, and that is probably the best way to feature him.

VIRGINIA CHESTER has been a favorite with motion picture followers since the days of the Bison 101 Ranch productions and was long considered one of the best riders among motion picture players. She has been with Pathe, Universal and Mena Films.

Anna Q. Nilsson has lately been featured by Metro in big pictures. She is one of the most beautiful women on the screen and undoubtedly has a big following in your community. In this picture she plays the part of the socially ambitious wife and wears some wonderful gowns. She came to this country from Sweden in 1907 and has been in motion pictures since 1911.

Frank Brownlee is one of the best known of character men or heavies. Recently he has been playing with Universal, but he made many friends in the old Ince-Triangle days when he appeared in many productions with the Ince stars. He has the part of the political boss in "Vanity Pool."

WE would strongly advise one newspaper story devoted to the supporting cast. We would a great deal rather use this than a story of the production, for the interest in the picture depends largely on the suspense of it, and when you give the plot away you to a certain extent weaken the appeal.

We have already referred to an advance advertising campaign that would put emphasis on each of the players mentioned, but if your newspaper is very liberal in the way of reading matter we would try to use a cut of a different player with each day's story.

WITH A SONG

Favorite Can Be Introduced Either During or Before Picture

DURING one of the scenes in "Vanity Pool" there is a phonograph seen playing and when it stops the title of the record is shown, "Love's Old Sweet Song."

It will naturally occur to the manager to introduce a phonograph here and play this selection. We wouldn't do that, because the stunt is becoming too old and tiresome. Instead of that have a good singer render the selection from the back of the stage and you will make a hit.

Better still if you have this selection rendered just before the feature. If you can have your stage banked with roses to give the garden effect it will be most attractive. Don't think that your audience won't "get" the point.

Simplicity of this twenty-four-sheet will attract attention. The head can be used as a cut out

Lobby Should Be Simple With Vanity Idea and Cast Featured

THERE is a chance for a novel lobby display on "Vanity Pool," either as a teaser in advance of the production or during its run. It is very simple and if you have sufficient space in your lobby it is likely to create a bunch of laughs and cause talk about the attraction.

Take a mirror and place it on a table, draping the sides or building it up with rocks so as to get the necessary height. Around this you can use potted plants or the plants themselves to form the rim, and if you can build this sufficiently strong to prevent leakage it would be well to put it in water. Above the whole display hang a sign, "Vanity Pool." Of course, the person looking into the "pool" simply sees a reflection of themselves.

The idea might be elaborated still further as an advance advertisement by using a series of mirrors in the lobby with the word "Vanity" painted on each one in white letters. It is an old saying that a woman cannot pass a mirror without looking into it.

IF your lobby is too crowded for this you can get a good effect by using a cut-out of the three-sheet, which shows a picture of Mary MacLaren standing beside a pool. Other cut-outs could be made from the twenty-four sheet.

There is a most attractive one-sheet which carries a large head of the star, and this would be attractive in any lobby, and if a couple of these were used with the scene pictures in the manner that we have suggested you will attract plenty of attention.

Don't get too much paper in the lobby on this production. Use it on the outside stands, but keep your lobby as simple as possible, and it will be all the more striking.

At night we would have the front of the theatre brilliantly illuminated with many colored lights, for this carries out the idea of gaiety, or, by allusion, vanity.

Select Films Reopen Theatres

Houses in All Sections "Come Back" from Epidemic Darkness to Brightness of Select Stars —Denver Solid

ACCORDING to an announcement issued this week by Select Pictures Corporation, theatres in all sections of the country are reopening with Select pictures following the long epidemic period. Reports to the organization, it is declared, show that exhibitors who have followed this procedure have profited by it greatly, and others are following suit.

Select officials announce themselves as confident that the quality of Select films is responsible for the desire of so large a number of exhibitors to reopen their houses with the product.

In Detroit, Select asserts, three first-runs of Select subjects reopened three of that city's motion picture theatres: "The Forbidden City," at the Madison; "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," at the Adams, and "The Better Half," at the Washington. This left one downtown theatre in Detroit to reopen with the output of another company, Select declares.

Three Denver motion picture theatres reopened November 11 with Select Pictures. The American chose "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," while the Rivoli used the Select Special, "One Woman." Norma Talmadge's picture, "Her Only Way," was booked at the Ogden.

From the Buffalo Branch Manager S. S. Webster sends a list of re-openings in his territory in which Select pictures were chosen to bring the fans back into the playhouses from which they had been absent for four weeks. The Regent, in Rochester, opened with Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City." In Syracuse the Savoy theatre began with Clara Kimball Young in "The Claw," and the Eckel theatre, of that city, opened with Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City." The Avon theatre, Utica, showed Norma Talmadge in "The Safety Curtain." Proctor's theatre in Schenectady presented Alice Brady in "The Death Dance." The Regent theatre, Elmira, chose Marion Davies in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," and in Binghamton, the Symphony theatre presented Constance Talmadge in "The Lesson."

From Chicago, Branch Manager Fred A. Aiken telegraphs that many of the theatres in his territory have re-opened with pictures showing Select stars. Among these are the Bijou Dream, Chicago's downtown Loop theatre, which had to close its run after playing Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City" for three days, and which, despite this fact, has opened the Bijou Dream with the same attraction for its second run of a full week. Messrs. Lubliner & Trinz have opened the doors of their new Pershing theatre, showing "The Forbidden City" as the opening attraction. Ascher Brothers, Lubliner & Trinz, and other theatres have all opened with Select Pictures, Mr. Aiken states.

Other cities mentioned in the Select report as re-opening with Select Pictures are Milwaukee, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, New Orleans and Kansas City.

R. R. Nehls of American Back to Chicago

General Manager R. R. Nehls of the American Film Company is back at the corporation's executive offices in Chicago after a month's trip to the Pacific Coast film country in general and the "Flying A" studios at Santa Barbara in particular. Mr. Nehls followed suit with other producers and decided to close up the "American" studio for five weeks. William Russell Production's activities and Margarita Fisher's company ceased operations at once. Being in the middle of a picture, so far unnamed, the Mary Miles Minter company continued until the termination of the task.

Paramount Has Changes at Kansas City

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has announced two changes in the managerial personnel of its Kansas City District, P. C. Wreath becoming manager of the Kansas City branch office and George W. Weeks of the St. Louis office.

Mr. Wreath, who has been branch manager at St. Louis for some time, returns to his old position at Kansas City which he occupied for several years.

Great Expectations for "Cleopatra" Production

Americans, victorious, are expected to be very free spenders in gratifying their longings for wholesome entertainment and pleasure. William Fox sees a reflection of this new spirit in a heavy demand for the Theda Bar production, "Cleopatra," and says that from all over the country requests are reaching the Fox Film Corporation for this film.

"The success of 'Cleopatra' since its release on the open market in August has been sensational," declared a Fox official, "and exhibitors figure that it is just the sort of big picture for the holidays.

"During the no-release period just ended 'Cleopatra' proved the salvation of a large number of motion picture theatres. Many booked it for a repeat engagement, and reported big profits.

"The tremendous drawing power of 'Cleopatra' was thrown into sharp relief during the influenza epidemic, when it overcame the reluctance of many people to enter a theatre because of the peril of infection."

Frank Lloyd Returns to California

Having completed another William Farnum production at a studio in New Jersey, Frank Lloyd, director of "Les Miserables," "Riders of the Purple Sage" and other Farnum pictures given to the film world by William Fox, has returned to Los Angeles.

Mr. Lloyd came East for the sole purpose of making this one picture with Mr. Farnum. He is accompanied on the trip West by his assistant, Scott Dunlap.

Return Dates on Chaplin Said To Be $20,000

Twenty thousand dollars in contracts for return bookings on "Shoulder Arms" is said to be the record obtained without any selling effort by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange of New York on the second million dollar Chaplin comedy.

Other First National exchanges throughout the country report a phenomenal number of applications from exhibitors for return dates. In many instances, according to the managers, exhibitors have voluntarily offered to double and treble their rental prices on the comedy to continue its original run without interruption.

Exhibitors in small towns are said to be amazed at the manner in which "Shoulder Arms" is breaking house records for the duration of runs. Theatres that previously played attractions for two days as a maximum, because of limited population, are now said to be using the second Chaplin comedy distributed by First National for three and four days.

Harry Levey "Discovered" by Federal Employes

Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of the Universal, was surprised on last Tuesday to receive a special delivery letter postmarked New York, simply addressed "The Griffith of Industrial Pictures, America."

Not another name or word appeared, except Uncle Sam's official cancellation stamp. Enclosed was an appreciative letter from a big firm for whom Mr. Levey had finished an industrial picture.

"A Fascinating Widower"

Julian Eltinge is launching the production of "A Fascinating Widower," the scenario of which is by June Mathis, at his own studio.

"A Fascinating Widower" is said to be the antithesis of "The Fascinating Widow," as the name suggests. Robert Thornby will probably direct the picture, and the cast will include Sylvia Ashton and Charles Butler.

Sweet Picture Comes Through

"Flu" Restrictions Did Not Deter Garson and Neilan Securing Last Big Scene of "The Unpardonable Sin"

DESPITE the stringent influenza restrictions placed by the health authorities at Los Angeles, Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan found a way out of the difficulty and succeeded in securing their last big scene of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet.

During the rage of the influenza epidemic no more than ten persons were allowed to appear in any one scene. This ruling was disastrous to the prompt completion of "The Unpardonable Sin," which still had several very big scenes to take.

By considerable wire pulling and eloquent persuasion, Mr. Garson succeeded in securing permission for Marshall Neilan to picturize the last big scene. But one policeman from every precinct in the city was present, and ten doctors with twenty-five nurses were deemed essential by the authorities.

And everybody had to wear a gas mask. Director Neilan had to give his directions by a wave of his cap instead of by the customary word of mouth. The army of nurses busied themselves in promiscuously shooting the official disinfectants among the big array of players.

Blanche Sweet mournfully declared that she had never before appeared in a production where one of the biggest scenes was produced under such weird circumstances.

Messrs. Garson and Neilan, after viewing the final results, enthusiastically declared that the big scene was remarkable, and made a fitting climax thoroughly in keeping with the high standard set by them throughout the entire production.

They immediately entrained for the east with the negative. A stop will be made at Washington to permit an official review of the feature, and then the New York public will be afforded many opportunities to witness "The Unpardonable Sin," as a long run is planned at one of the large legitimate theatres in the metropolis.

This eight-reel production shows Blanche Sweet in a dual role. The story opens in Los Angeles and the scene of action quickly moves to Belgium. It is described as a powerful melodrama of high calibre with a very pleasing and happy ending.

Walter Beery is cast as Colonel Klem, the German officer who imposes "Kultur" upon a helpless American girl. The distributing plan of "The Unpardonable Sin" has not yet been announced.

U. B. O. Contracts for Red Cross Films

A deal is announced by which the United Booking Offices, Vaudeville Circuit, will program the American Red Cross war work films in hundreds of theatres. This arrangement is dated to begin generally at once, and is due to the active interest of John Murdock, manager of the U. B. O.

Mr. Murdock and E. F. Albee of the U. B. O. have joined in co-operation with the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures.

Vitagraph Has Eleven at Work

Eleven Major Companies Are Now Producing in East and West Studios for Vitagraph's Regular Schedule

WITH production about evenly divided between its eastern and western studios, Vitagraph now has eleven major companies at work on productions for its regular program, in addition to several companies working on short-reel subjects. The work is divided as follows:

Eastern studio—Alice Joyce company, Tom Terriss director; Harry T. Morey company, Paul Scardon director; Corinne Griffith company, Kenneth Webb director; Gladys Leslie Company, Joseph Gleason director; Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne super-feature company, Henry-Houry director.

Western studio—Earle Williams company, James Young director; Bessie Love company, David Smith director; William Duncan serial company, William Duncan director; Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway serial company, Paul Hurst director; Lawrence Semon "Big V" Special Comedy company, Lawrence Semon director; Montgomery and Rock "Big V" Special Comedy company, Gilbert Pratt director.

Six of these companies are engaged in the making of Blue Ribbon features, the Bushman and Bayne company is engaged in the production of a super-feature written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, two are turning out serials and two are making comedy features.

Among the important productions under way at the eastern studio is that of "The Lion and the Mouse," in which Alice Joyce is featured.

Corinne Griffith is winding up work in "The Adventure Shop," an original story by "Bud" Fisher, creator of "Mutt and Jeff," who enters the ranks of screen drama writers with this play.

Gladys Leslie, who recently appeared in "The Mating," has completed "The Beloved Imposter" and has just begun work on another Blue Ribbon feature, which has the tentative title of "Beth." It is an original story by Lawrence McCloskey.

At the western studio of the Vitagraph Company Earle Williams is deep in the production of "The American Ace," of which he is co-author with H. H. Van Loan.

"Made in America" Will Be in Eight Reels

"Made in America," the eight-reel film production, soon to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is said to tell for the first time the complete story in pictures of how the victorious armies of America were trained.

In it a story of strong dramatic incident is declared to be blended with historic incident, so that the tout ensemble is a series of pictures replete with human interest. It is the story of the experience of three American boys who don the khaki as the result of the first draft.

Two of them, John and Jimmy Evers, are typical young Americans—eager and ready to serve their country. The other, Joe Nelson, who represents the slacker type, is one of the few who have the wrong viewpoint and hope to evade military service by resorting to subterfuge.

"Made in America" is being produced by Ashley Miller, with the co-operation of the Government through the Division of Films, and published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"Retribution" Depicts Downfall of Kaiser

GEORGE EDWARDES-HALL, a director and scenario writer since the earliest days of the photoplay, is reappearing as the author and producer of "Retribution," a six-reel feature offering depicting the downfall of William Hohenzollern.

"Retribution" is said to have been under way for some time, and when the news of the downfall and abdication of the Kaiser came Mr. Hall reconstructed his script, and "Retribution" now reaches its climax with the flight of ex-Kaiser Wilhelm across the Dutch border to Maastrichten.

Care and expense, it is said, are not being spared to make "Retribution" historically correct in every detail.

Aside from presenting in spectacular form the events leading up to the collapse of the Kaiser's grandoise dream of being a world conqueror, "Retribution" tells a melodramatic story of an American girl's plucky fight against Hun trickery.

Mr. Hall, who wrote and directed "Retribution," came into prominence in the early days of the photoplay as director of King Baggot at the old Imp studios. There he produced Mr. Baggot's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and others.

He wrote "War Brides," in which Alla Nazimova scored her first screen success; "The Lone Wolf," which won Bert Lytell to the films; "Babbling Tongues," "The Iron Hand," "The Fall of the Romanoffs," "The Soul of Broadway," "The Kreutzer Sonata" and many other screen successes.

The cast of "Retribution" includes John Mason, Victor Sutherland, Teft Johnson, Stanley Walpole, Donald Hall, Peggy Shaw, Eugenie Woodward, Helene Hart and some two hundred others.

"Retribution" is being made under the production supervision of George A. Rush and the photography is in the hands of Walter Blakely and Max Schneider.

National Enlarges Studio for Walthall

The Hollywood studio of the National Film Corporation is to be enlarged and improved to take care of the Henry B. Walthall company, which is to start work shortly. The studio space is to be doubled and will occupy an entire block. A big outside stage is to be built, which is to be 175 by 100 feet, and will be 24 feet at the lowest point and 34 feet at the highest point.

A new administration building will be erected, which will contain executive offices, directors' room, scenario writers' room and office for the technical department. William Parsons, "Smiling Bill," president of the National Film, will have his offices and dressing room in the building. Twenty new dressing rooms will be erected for the Walthall organization.

Mr. Walthall will return to Los Angeles about December 1, when he will start work on his new picture, which will be the film version of a famous book, negotiations for the picture version of which are now in progress.

Billie Rhodes' next vehicle will be the screen version of "In Search of Arcady." The National Film Corporation has engaged John B. Clymer, who wrote "Poppies," "The Moth" and other screen plays, to prepare the scenario for Miss Rhodes.

"Too Fat to Fight" Stars Marines

Counting themselves fortunate in obtaining the co-operation of the United States Marine Corps, Rex Beach, as author of "Too Fat to Fight," and S. L. Rothapfel, who directed certain of the trench scenes, took full advantage of the aid offered them. The "soldiers of the sea" responded magnificently under the direction of Mr. Rothapfel, managing director of New York's Rialto and Rivoli theatres and himself a lieutenant of marines.

"Too Fat to Fight," in which Frank McIntyre is the featured player, is in no sense a war drama, but it is a patriotic story with trench scenes in it, and the background of battle is seldom out of the picture.

It was in connection with the trench episodes that the help of the Marine Corps was sought.

Maciste Appears in a Serial

Giant Star of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior" Completes Twenty-Four Reel Serial—Harry Raver Has Rights

CONFIRMING Harry Raver's denial some time ago, in which he asserted that "Maciste," the D'Annunzio star of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior," had not been killed in action on the Alpine front, according to Associated Press reports, the announcement has been made that "the Douglas Fairbanks of Italy," as the New York Times describes the herculanean comedian, has just recently completed his third production, "The Liberator," a serial in twenty-four reels, and the picture is in Mr. Raver's hands ready for the North American market.

In August, 1917, the first scenes were taken, leaves of absence from war duty being obtained for "Maciste" and the male principals in the cast. Reverses at the front necessitated calling every available man back to service within a few weeks, and the work had to be abandoned.

Mr. Raver had sent over the story of "The Liberator," and he wanted to see the finished picture. Three times the production was given up as an impossible task. Each time Gabriele D'Annunzio used his influence in behalf of the producers, and the players were allowed to return to the studio at intervals until the production was completed.

Writing to Harry Raver concerning the difficulties, Carlo Sciamengo said: "We are keeping up a brave heart and hope to dispatch a positive of 'The Liberator' by the next boat. Italia Manzini lost her brave father and brother in the last engagement with the enemy. Bianca mourns a husband. Pastrone (the director of 'Cabiria,' 'The Warrior" and 'The Liberator,') returned from the front wounded, but courageously sat in his invalid chair and directed the last scenes. 'Maciste' has many times proved his valor, keeping up the morale of his regiment by his bravery and good cheer. Italy is proud of 'Maciste.'"

"The Liberator" will be distributed in America without delay. Harry Raver would not state under whose auspices the release would be made. A private showing of the picture was given the press on Thursday and Friday of this week.

Francis Ford Busy on the New Serial

Hiller and Wilk of the Longacre Building, New York, announce that Francis Ford is very busy on his new serial, "The Silent Mystery."

They declare that Mr. Ford gathered a large and well-known cast of players with him in a new brand of successful thrillers. Mr. Ford, in addition to assuming the direction, plays the male lead, with Mae Gaston and Rosemary Theby opposite.

"Upon the arrival of each new episode from the studio in California," said Mr. Wilk, "it reveals, in addition to many of the elements of popularity which have put Francis Ford among the leading serial stars and directors of the entire industry, an unlimited amount of thrilling stunts that have never been attempted before."

Lasky Outlines His Producing Activities

JESSE L. LASKY, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production, has outlined for MOTION PICTURE NEWS the future producing activities of that organization and announced productions to be expected from his department within the next few months. Among these new films are a number of subjects that have up to this time not been made public.

"At the Fifty-sixth street studio, Elsie Ferguson has started on a new Artcraft picture after an absence of several weeks. This photoplay, under the direction of Emile Chautard, is temporarily titled 'For Sale.' Marguerite Clark also returned to the studio and started on her Paramount Picture, 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch,' under the direction of Hugh Ford.

"Douglas Fairbanks's picturization of Augustus Thomas's play, 'Arizona,' is already finished. Miss Ferguson has two vehicles completed. They are 'Under the Greenwood Tree,' an adaptation of Henry V. Esmond's comedy drama, and 'His Parisian Wife,' from a novel by Andrew Soutar. 'Captain Kidd, Jr., from Rida Johnson Young's comedy, it is expected, will be acclaimed as one of Mary Pickford's most delightful pictures.

"William S. Hart will next be seen in 'Branding Broadway.' Two additional Fred Stone subjects are also finished. They are 'Under the Top,' by John Emerson and Anita Loos, and 'Johnny Get Your Gun.' Caruso makes his screen debut in 'My Cousin,' his second Artcraft picture, The Splendid Romance,' also having been completed.

"Cecil B. De Mille has brought together an all-star cast in his Artcraft Special, 'The Squaw Man.' Following that, we have another De Mille production now being staged, 'Don't Change Your Husband. D. W. Griffith has completed his second and third Artcraft offerings. The first is 'The Greatest Thing in Life.

"In the Paramount series, John Barrymore is now at work on another comedy, 'Here Comes the Bride,' from the play by Max Marcin and Roy Atwell. He will next do a story by Maximilian Foster, 'Something to Do.' 'Good Gracious, Annabelle!' from the Clare Kummer play, with Billie Burke, has been finished and will follow 'The Make-Believe Wire,' released this week. Madame Cavalieri last week completed 'Two Brides,' by Alicia Ramsey, and we also have ready for release 'The Rose of Grenada,' which the operatic star made in Italy. Before 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch,' Marguerite Clark has two Paramounts finished. They are 'Three Men and a Girl' and 'Little Miss Hoover.'

"Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex will soon be seen in their second John Emerson-Anita Loos production, 'Good-Bye, Bill!' which I might best endorse by saying that it is even better than 'Come On In.' We also have ready for the distribution department two Pauline Frederick films, 'Out of the Shadow,' from a story by E. W. Hornung, and 'Paid in Full.'

"We are equally well prepared in the matter of productions made by our West Coast Paramount stars. Ethel Clayton, whose 'Women's Weapons' will next be released, has completed three others, 'The Mystery Girl,' 'Maggie Pepper,' from Charles Klein's popular comedy-drama, and 'Vicky Van,' by Carolyn Wells. She is now making 'Private Pettigrew's Girl,' from Dana Burnett's Saturday Evening Post story.

"Dorothy Gish's second picture, 'The Hope Chest,' is ready for release at an early date. Lila Lee is ahead of the game by two productions, 'The Secret Garden,' by Frances Hodgson Burnett, and 'Puppy Love,' by Monte Katterjohn. Three Vivian Martin films are now ready for release and the scripts of three others are prepared. Those now ready are 'Mirandy Smiles,' 'Jane Goes a-Wooing' and 'You Never Saw Such a Girl.' Wallace Reid pictures now completed are 'Too Many Millions,' from Porter Emerson Browne's comedy; 'The Dub,' by Edgar Franklin,' and 'Alias Mike Moran,' from Frederick Orin Bartlett's sensational Saturday Evening Post story, 'Open Sesame.' Bryant Washburn, whose first Paramount picture, 'The Gypsy Trail,' is released this week, has finished two others, 'The Way of a Man with a Maid' and 'Venus in the East.'

"From the Thomas H. Ince studios we have Dorothy Dalton in 'Quicksand,' Charles Ray in 'String Beans' and 'The Girl Dodger,' and Enid Bennett in 'Fuss and Feathers' and 'Happy Though Married,' all completed.

"In our series of Paramount-Artcraft Specials, in addition to Maurice Tourneur's 'Sporting Life,' we have Thomas H. Ince's production of 'The False Faces,' starring Henry B. Walthall, and 'The Silver King,' with William Faversham, supported by Barbara Castleton, now awaiting release. The John Emerson-Anita Loos production, 'When the Boys Come Home,' has been started and we are planning six others for this great series to follow the pace set by 'The Hun Within' and 'Private Peat.'"

Heffron Directs Desmond in "Deuce Duncan"

Thomas N. Heffron, who has directed "The Painted Lily," "Madame Sphinx," and "Tony America," has just finished his first Western picture, "Deuce Duncan," presenting William Desmond as the star, and it will be released by Triangle for the week of Nov. 24. It was written with scenario by George Hivey of Triangle's literary staff.

"Deuce Duncan" presents Desmond a a wild and reckless cowpuncher who fears neither God, man nor the devil. But he yields to the appeal of a little woman who is being persecuted by an escaped convict. Her gentle personality and soothing influence awaken his ardor and this wild bad man of the West is regenerated, as he turns his strength to good account, when in a man to man conflict he rescues the girl he loves from the villainy of her supposed brother. Then Ann is only too glad to permit Deuce to take her into his arms.

Big Poster Demand on "Kaiser's Finish"

One half of the total quantity of posters ordered by A. Warner for the entire United States and Canada on "The Kaiser's Finish," has been requisitioned by the Emanee Film Company, 145 West Forty-fifth Street, New York, to meet exhibitor demands in New York City, New York state and northern New Jersey, the territories they are booking on the production.

With this order as an indication of a greater demand than was anticipated in the forecasts by Mr. Warner and his associates, the quantity has been trebled not only on posters but for window cards, press sheets and cuts and mats.

The exhibitor requests for advertising material are taken to indicate that they are planning extensive local campaigns to tie up the production and its title with the timeliness of the events it picturizes.

Newspapers Boost Brady's "Little Women"

The newspapers of New York eulogized William A. Brady's picturization of "Little Women" during its engagement at the Strand theatre. The story, by Louise M. Alcott, had achieved such a tremendous circulation that the screen production attracted unusual attention.

"Little Women" was directed by Harley Knoles, and Anne Maxwell wrote the scenario. A few of the many favorable comments are as follows:

"William A. Brady has reached the top notch in photoplay achievement. 'Little Women' at the Strand is one of the most satisfactory pictures ever produced."—Evening Sun.

"The story is acted most sympathetically and the production created an impression that few motion pictures have done in a long time. So absorbed and responsive was yesterday's audience that the picture should draw full houses at every performance."—Evening Telegram.

"Admirers of the original 'Little Women' will find delight in the animated illustrations of the story—charming—spectators at the Strand seemed to respond with mirth and quick sympathy as gay scenes and grave were flashed before them."—Times.

New "B. B. Features"

B. B. Features is a new Arizona Corporation of which Howard Hickman is president and J. L. Frothingham of New York is treasurer.

Bessie Barriscale is called "The Big Boss" of the concern, and the features are being produced at the Robert Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, under Mr. Brunton's supervision.

Having a free hand in the selection of her vehicles, Miss Barriscale will go in for stories in lighter vein and her first offering under the B. B. Features banner will be a western comedy in which the star rollicks in cowboy regalia.

W. H. Hodkinson Corporation will release all B. B. Features through Pathe.

Patriotic Film Changes Its Title

William Fox Announces That "Why America Will Win" Becomes "Land of the Free" and Ready for Booking

"THE LAND OF THE FREE," a special production which not only shows the close of the Great War, but also, it is claimed, gives a vivid, moving epic of American heroism and sacrifice, is announced by the Fox Film Corporation as having been completed and now ready for bookings.

This picture, including the epochal events that occurred up to and through the signing of the armistice, is described as being one of extraordinary timeliness and authenticity, and affords exhibitors a unique opportunity to give their patrons a photodrama that pictures the closing chapters of the Allies' and America's triumph, including the capture of Sedan.

"The Land of the Free," it is stated, is based on "Why America Will Win," the William Fox photobiography of General John J. Pershing; but the revisions made in this picture have converted it into what is announced as the first picture that brings the war up to the minute.

With the announcement of these changes and additions, it is explained that in producing the original Pershing picture William Fox took care that it would be so arranged that important developments in the war situation could be satisfactorily met by revision of the film. Recognizing that the war was constantly changing conditions, and that the conflict might end at any moment, Mr. Fox prepared for any emergency. The result was that signing of the armistice found alterations already planned and new scenes prepared to bring the picture actually abreast of history.

"'The Land of the Free,'" said an official of the Fox Film Corporation yesterday, "is another example of the policy of 'Service First' which actuates everything planned by the William Fox organization. Many exhibitors had already contracted for 'Why America Will Win' and were preparing to show it.

By bringing the picture up to the second we are insuring to these exhibitors still larger profits. And, needless to add, it means more money for exhibitors who have not yet booked the picture, for "The Land of the Free" is the first photoplay that carries the war to the very end.

"Every detachment of troops that arrives here will be the object of great public demonstrations, and for many months parades and other marks of popular love and admiration will serve to keep Pershing's name and deeds fresh in the public mind. Pershing today is the idol of the American people, and his work will not fail to grip popular interest for many years."

Fannie Ward Looks Forward to Vacation

To a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in Los Angeles Fannie Ward last week stated that she expects to visit New York shortly, and possibly Europe. Miss Ward said she is now making the final scenes in her last picture under her present contract with Pathe.

"As soon as the epidemic subsides, I expect to go there for a vacation," Miss Ward said, "and if possible visit Europe for a short time. If that is impossible, I will take a short vacation before taking up any new work for the screen with any company."

Miss Ward states the Pathe contract has not been renewed and that no plans have been made for the future. She very recently purchased a home in Los Angeles from former Mayor Hazard. This is located in the Wilshire district and consists of four acres.

Wright Aims to "Open" Mexico

Educational's Director to Lay Before Mexican Authorities Plan for Safeguarding American Film Rights —Leaves Soon

GEORGE D. WRIGHT, having completed assembling for the Educational Films Corporation his "Mexican Topicals," expects to return to Mexico next month to put before the Administration the draft of a law for the proper protection of American film products in the South country.

The importance of this step may be gauged from the fact that hitherto Mexico has been the customer of European film houses almost exclusively or else of duping thieves who stole the American product.

Mr. Wright says: "The only American stars who are at all well known in Mexico are Charley Chaplin and Pearl White, the former as a film comedian of world-wide vogue and the latter because the French Pathe, of which the American Pathe is a branch, distributes her releases. On the other hand, the names and histories of leading French and Italian stars are known to all Mexican fans. The reputation of the American films in Mexico has been ruined by the practice of duping.

"Most of the dupes come from Central America and Cuba. They often arrive ahead of the buyer of the authorized rights and cut the ground from under his feet. A rich banker told me he could not understand why Geraldine Farrar in 'Joan the Woman' should be great in the United States and rotten in Mexico. Of course, the Mexican version was a dupe, and the result is that 'Americans' down there are considered inferior to any of the European makes. Poor, inaccurate Spanish titling gives them a further black eye.

"I have already sounded out President Carranza's government as to what can be done to stop the illicit traffic. That government is willing to consider an arrangement with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry whereby Mexican exchanges who buy from bona fide producers will be safeguarded. I have taken this up with representatives of the Association, and I hope to carry back with me to Mexico the draft of a law to abolish duping which shall be satisfactory to the Carranza government. If this can be done I predict for American features and shorter productions an era of unexampled prosperity in the southern republic."

Selig Polyscope Sells Mix Reissues

It was announced this week that Exclusive Features, Inc., of 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, has bought outright all negatives of the Tom Mix comedy dramas formerly owned by Selig Polyscope Company.

It is expected by Exclusive Features, Inc., that the two-reel productions to be regularly released will prove very popular among exhibitors and fans.

In an announcement this week Exclusive Features said: "Tom Mix is the last of those picturesque riders of the range who formerly were a so necessary part of the atmosphere of the great West.

"Since civilization has reached out and set its hand on the open plains, the cowboy of tradition has gradually disappeared, or so changed his appearance that he is hardly recognized in the modern product of today. No longer is seen the picturesque chaps and the wide sombrero. No longer is it considered necessary to be able to outride the daring Arab or the famous Cossacks in order to dry-nurse a herd of cattle. Instead the more workaday overalls and the omnipresent flivver have usurped their place."

"LET THE Simplex TWINS MAGNETIZE YOUR SCREEN"

The Screen is the Vital Spot of the House. It is what people pay their money to look at, and its attractiveness determines the number that come back for another look.

And there's no other way of making and keeping the Screen one-hundred-per-cent attractive than to employ the Simplex in the Projection Room.

The design of its Intermittent Movement, the excellence of the materials used, the lightness, large bearing surfaces and extreme accuracy of the intermittent parts, the manner of lubrication—these and other factors contribute to a permanent steadiness that leaves the wise Exhibitor no other choice.

Gain Knowledge

THE following letter was sent in to Motion Picture News by one of the operators from the Province of Alberta, Canada, with the request that he be sent a copy of any of the transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers which are available. These have been sent.

We might state here that following each meeting of the Society, Motion Picture News publishes in its Projection Department the various papers which have been presented at the meeting for the benefit of the operators and theatre managers, all of whom can benefit greatly by carefully reading them.

The letter is as follows:

GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF ALBERTA
DEPARTMENT OF THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY
OFFICE OF THE
CHIEF CENSOR MOVING PICTURES
EDMONTON.

DEAR SIR:

In view of the present scarcity of competent projectionists, and of the necessity of filling vacancies with inexperienced men, the Alberta Censorship Board has deemed it advisable to classify all motion picture operators throughout the Province.

A new set of examination questions has been compiled which covers the most practical phase of the profession as it stands today. It is the aim of the Board of Censors to improve the standard of motion picture projection as much as possible, and to elevate the industry generally with a view to giving it the position before the public to which it rightly belongs.

It is realized, however, that the point from which this must begin is the operating room; and the deciding factor is the operator, or projectionist. You are, therefore, urged to improve your present knowledge of the work by a careful study of the latest findings and standards of the New York Society of Motion Picture Engineers, as well as kindred publications connected with the industry, and to prepare yourself for a classification examination in January, 1919.

Motion picture machine operators in the Province of Alberta will be classed as first, second or third; and those holding third class licenses will not be allowed to operate in cities.

Your obedient servant,

HOWARD DOUGLAS,
Chief Censor.

RALPH R. KIEFER, ESQ.,
Alliance, Alta.

It will not be amiss to call attention of the entire trade to the fact that the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers contains detailed technical data which cannot be had from any other source, and that this data is of the utmost importance to every man interested or connected in any way with the problems which surround the proper projection of motion pictures.

Any one wishing the latest transactions may receive them by writing to Mr. A. S. Cory, Technical Editor of Motion Picture News, and send in with his letter 25 cents (which goes to the Society).

It is indeed pleasing to note the growing interest which is being shown in the activities of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. You may remember that this organization was started on July 24, 1916, at a meeting called in Washington, D. C., by C. Francis Jenkins.

Since that time it has grown till we now have a membership of sixty active men from every line of endeavor which help Motion Pictures to prosper—Electrical—Optical—Mechanical and Theoretical—all working for a better, bigger, broader, healthier Motion Picture industry.

This letter merely points toward the fact that the work which is being done is appreciated. Here is an official of the Canadian Government sending out a leter to all operators and theatre men in his province telling them that they should obtain a copy of the transactions of the Society, in order that those who put the picture on the screen may prepare themselves to pass an examination and qualify as operators worthy of holding down responsible positions.

The classification of operators according to their ability to produce results and in accordance with their actual technical knowledge has been advocated strongly by Motion Picture News in the past. It is the only way in which we may hope to ever have a differentiation between the operator who deserves no more dignified title and the projectionist, as the real men in the line are so rightly called by Mr. Richardson.

Not only does the Society of Motion Picture Engineers aim to help these men improve their knowledge, but likewise does Motion Picture News through its Projection Department under Mr. Cory aim to assist all those men in our industry who wish to help themselves.

We are here to answer all the questions you can fire at us. Mr. Cory is at liberty to use all the space which is necessary in any issue of the News in answering your questions, therefore come in and flood us with inquiries. Your names and initials will be entirely eliminated in the News in answering your questions if you wish. Try to ask some practical questoin you think Mr. Cory can't answer. I would like to see you stick him.

E. K. GILLETT.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Edited by ALFRED S. CORY

The Conservation of Projection Apparatus

THE war situation and activities of the past year have resulted in attention being directed to the conservation of resources in many directions, and in the motion picture industry the question of economy in electrical power and various accessory commodities has been investigated, with the result that numerous articles have been published on the subject.

In the field of motion picture projection great changes have occurred within the past two years, and it is a conservative statement that at least fifty per cent of the men engaged in projecting pictures two years ago are now with the colors or in some other branch of industry. Information collected throughout the United States by Motion Picture News would, indeed, make it appear that even a higher percentage of former operators than that mentioned above are now following some other occupation.

It is reasonable, therefore, to infer that a high percentage of the projection machines and accessory appliances throughout the country are now in the hands of new operators, and also that a large number of these newcomers in the field of motion picture projection are comparatively inexperienced in the manipulation and maintenance of projection apparatus, but it must be assumed, in justice to these men, that they are anxious to master projection in all its details, and that the majority of them will study hard to that end.

Under the circumstances it devolves upon the Projection Department to give sympathetic attention to the requirements of all elementary students of motion picture projection, and to bring before them suggestions and instructions covering the fundamentally important requirements for the successful projection of pictures and the maintenance of their apparatus, which requires us sometimes to retrace our steps, and to dwell upon matters which, while very elementary to experienced projectionists, and to our older readers, are entirely new to recently fledged operators.

While the conservation of electrical power and of cine film, as used in motion picture theatres, has been dwelt upon at considerable length of late, there does not seem to have been much attention devoted to the care and conservation of projection machinery, in spite of the fact that the large number of inexperienced men now practicing as operators must require some preliminary advice and instruction in the proper care of such appliances.

In the engine-room of a factory or steamship, or in the dynamo-room of a power-house, the greatest care is exercised in keeping the ponderous machinery in perfect condition and immaculately clean, because it is well appreciated that the full efficiency and proper performance of the apparatus cannot be otherwise maintained. But in motion picture projection, where a delicate mechanism is employed containing adjustments of the order of one ten-thousandth of an inch in fineness, it seems to be the opinion of many operators, if they ever think of the matter at all, that the projector mechanism should continue to delivery first class screen results, and give no trouble in operation, in return for a complete lack of care and attention.

Thus it occurs that breakdowns occasionally interrupt a performance; screen results are in some instances miserable; and an excessive and unnecessary amount of money has constantly to be spent upon repair parts, whereas, none of these contingencies would arise if each operator gave five minutes of careful and intelligent attention to each of his projector mechanisms each day.

It has been found by the repair department of the Nicholas Power Company that as high as 90 per cent of the Cameragraph mechanisms turned in at their factory for repairs have been incapacitated for use by accumulations of dirt, or by the failure of the operator to lubricate them properly; some mechanisms, in fact, not having been lubricated at all. The failure to clean the projector mechanism each day, including a thorough, over-all cleaning at least once each week, is not only on the part of the novices in motion picture projection, but some of the best known operators in large cities habitually allow their projectors to remain in a disgracefully dirty condition. On the other hand, there are, of course, theatres where great pride is taken in the projector installation, and where the operating-room and its appliances are maintained in immaculate condition at all times.

As it remains, however, a stubborn and indisputable fact that numerous operators and especially newcomers in this line of endeavor, are prone to neglect the proper daily care of the mechanism, we would like on the present occasion to lay all possible emphasis on the fact that a high-class, consistent performance, free from interruptions and annoying breakdowns, cannot be expected from a projector mechanism unless it is kept scrupulously clean, and properly lubricated in all its running parts.

In the case of the motion picture projector mechanism the questions of cleanliness and lubrication are closely allied, since the manner in which the mechanism is lubricated, or oiled, has a direct influence upon the amount of dirt which will collect upon the mechanism when it is in operation.

As previously stated, many operators expect their projectors to consistently maintain a good performance without any attention or oiling at all, but when we have the other extreme—the operator who oils his projector as if it were a locomotive, and pours quarts of oil upon its defenseless head, where a few drops only are required.

The intermittent movement of a projecting mechanism consists of delicate and accurately constructed members, which operate at high speed and perform a heavy task, and this movement should therefore be provided with a never failing supply of lubricant. This is facilitated in every modern projector by enclosing the intermittent movement in a metal casing, which latter is intended to serve as an oil reservoir. Every user of a modern projecting mechanism should, therefore, see to it that a sufficient amount of suitable lubricant is at all times contained in the intermittent casing, to insure that the intermittent movement is always properly lubricated, and not runnng dry, as a dry and bound-up intermittent is a prolific cause of breakdowns in projector mechanisms, and is entirely chargeable to the negligence of the operator. A somewhat heavier oil is required by the intermittent movement that is desirable for the general oiling of a projector, and every maker of motion picture projection machines can supply a suitable lubricant for this purpose, or will be glad to advise any user of a machine as to what is a suitable grade of oil to use.

While the intermittent movement of a projector is provided with a reservoir for holding a quantity of lubricant, this is not the case with the other bearings of the mechanism, and the procedure of oiling the numerous other revolving members must, accordingly, be different from that followed in lubricating the intermittent. In going over a projector with the oil-can it is the common and indifferent practice of too many operators to supply each oil-hole with a copious flood of oil, whereas, most every bearing on a projection machine will function perfectly if supplied with just one or two drops of the proper grade of oil, applied at least once each day. When the lubricant is supplied in just the right quantity it is retained by the bearings and utilized in facilitating the easy operation of the rotating parts, but when the bearings and mechanism frame are flooded by injudicious use of the oil-can, the surplus oil runs down and spreads itself over the mechanism, and all of its component parts, and then becomes the resting place for countless particles of floating dust, as well as for myriads of chunks of dirt and fragments of celluloid thrown off by the film in its rapid passage through the projector.

If, as is all too frequently the case, this accumulated dirt and grit is permitted to accumulate upon the projector mechanism, and to remain thereon, the moving parts of the machine are of course subjected to its abrasive influence, and are soon worn out —the result being the failure of the machine to perform its work, and the necessity of costly repairs.

Though it is seen, for the above reasons, to be highly undesirable to use oil to excess in lubricating a projecting machine, the cardinal mistake is neglect on the part of the operator to thoroughly clean the mechanism each day, because the grit and dirt collected by superfluous oil does more harm to the mechanism than the mere existence of the oil.

It frequently takes a factory mechanic more time to remove the gum and grit from a mechanism sent in for repairs than it takes to actually execute the required repairs, and, in fact, the majority of mechanisms turned in to the repair shops are in a disgracefully dirty condition which is usually the origin and main cause of the trouble encountered in their operation. Indeed, the average operator struggles hours each day in combating troubles which could be entirely eliminated by a few minutes spent daily in oiling and cleaning, and it cannot be denied that a properly cared for mechanism presents a much neater appearance, and is far easier running, than one which receives this attention only occasionally, or perhaps not at all.

In the cleaning of projector mechanisms kerosene is a valuable ally of the operator, and in addition to his cans of proper lubricant for the intermittent and the mechanism in general, the operator should have handy a supply of kerosene and an oil-can for applying the same to the various bearings. By washing out the bearings and running parts at least once a week with kerosene, the life and smooth running of the mechanism is promoted, and there is no better way of cleaning up a badly fouled head than to remove the lenses and immerse the same in a pail full of kerosene, operating the mechanism to insure that the cleaning liquid penetrates to all bearings, and washing off the scum and dirt collecting on all parts of the mechanism and frame. After such treatment the mechanism should be wiped free from all surplus kerosene, inside and out, and then lubricated in the proper manner for use.

Such drastic methods will be seldom necessary, however, if the machine is properly (sparingly) oiled each day, and also gone over with a cloth to remove surplus oil and the inevitable daily accumulation of dust. When this is conscientiously done by the operator, no large accumulation of dirt and gummed up matter has any chance to accumulate, and hence the machine troubles due to these causes, which are the principal causes of projector trouble, are removed; the result being increased life of the machine, better screen results, and greatly lessened effort in the use of the projector.

Picture Moves Sideways

Mr. S. T. Stanley, Darlington, S. C., inquires: "When the picture moves from side to side on the screen and the sprocket is in good condition, the tension springs tight, and the rollers good, what causes this sideways movement of the picture on the screen?"

Reply: If the correspondent had given us further particulars as to the type of projector used, and the character of the sidewise movement of the picture on the screen, we could advise with more certainty as to the exact cause of the trouble.

The movement of the correspondent's picture from side to side on the screen is, however, very likely due to:

(1) Excessive end-play of intermittent sprocket, or:

(2) Swaying of the machine, due to same not being anchored firmly enough to floor of projection room.

To ascertain if excessive end-play exists in the intermittent sprocket, set the movement on lock and grasp the sprocket between thumb and forefinger. Then attempt to move the sprocket sideways, first to one side and then to the other. If the intermittent sprocket can be shifted sideways to any very noticeable extent it is evident that there is end-play, and that the sprocket can, therefore, shift back and forth laterally during the operation of the machine, thus causing a magnified sideways motion of the projected picture upon the screen.

Should end-play be found in the intermittent sprocket, this may be removed in the manner directed by the makers of the projector (correspondent does not mention make of his machine, hence further particulars are not given); but in eliminating the end play from the intermittent spindle, or from any other spindle on a projector mechanism, the operation should not be carried to the extreme of removing all play and making the shoulders on the spindle bind against the bearings, as this would cause the machine to run hard, and might also result in undue wear of the parts in question.

Considering next the case when a projector is not firmly anchored to the floor of the projection room, or when the floor of the room is flimsy and liable to vibration, the projected picture will then sway on the screen in concert with any swaying or vibration of the projector, and by reason of the screen being a considerable distance away the movement at the screen will be much greater than it is at the projector.

In the case of a hand driven projector which is not properly secured to the floor, the machine will sway periodically with each turn of the crank, as may be readily noted by the projectionist. Whether this is the cause of the correspondent's trouble is merely a matter of conjecture, however, as he has neglected to state how his machine is driven.

Wants to Be Cameraman

Mr. R. C. Bell, Charleston, S. C., writes as follows: "I am twenty-five years old and have been operating picture machines for the past five years; at the same time I have studied the technical end of projection. What chance would I have if I went to the West Coast to take up the profession of cameraman? How shall I proceed after having arrived there? If it is practicable, could I set to work to locate from this point? If so, how?"

In reply: It is the ambition of many a projectionist to eventually become a cameraman, and we are glad to encourage this aim because a well-trained, experienced projectionist brings to the work of cinematography an appreciation of many fine points in connection with its requirements which are not possessed by some cameramen who have been recruited from the ranks of the still photographers. Moreover, preliminary experience in projection gives the prospective cameraman a knowledge of cinematographic mechanisms, which are all fundamentally similar, and a familiarity with the physical characteristics of film.

In the case of the present correspondent, we think, however, that it would be a rash experiment for him to go to the West Coast prospecting for a cameraman's position, without having first gained a fair mastery of cinematography. There are already more cameramen in California than there are berths to be filled, and in the event of the correspondent's failure to connect with one of the producing organizations, he would probably find himself unable to fall back upon projecting as a means of support, on account of the thorough manner in which operators are organized in the large cities of the Golden States. As we do not, therefore, advise the correspondent to take the step he suggests, it is unnecessary to go into further detail on this phase of the matter, but we will point out what seems to us the most certain method of effecting the transition from projectionist to cameraman.

Although friendship has been the means of getting many a man his chance as assistant photographer in a studio, the majority of aspirants are not so fortunate, but the man who has mastered cinematography has a fighting chance with other cameramen in securing any position which may be open, his chances of connecting depending to a certain extent upon his ability, which he will at once have to demonstrate in the event of his being hired.

We think, accordingly, that projectionists, still photographers, and all others anxious to become movie cameramen, will be promoting their desires in the most direct and effective fashion, by securing a cine camera and film and devoting their spare time to familiarizing themselves with the operation of the camera and the actual exposure of negative film. Cameras of moderate price may be obtained, and are suitable for this experimental work, while many a now successful cinematographer constructed his first camera with his own hands.

New Floodlighting Booklet

X-Ray Floodlighting is the name of a new booklet recently published by the National X-Ray Reflector Company of Chicago.

This booklet explains at some length the important part flood lighting is playing in the winning of the war. Protection lighting as well as outdoor lighting for light work is being especially well cared for by the X-Ray projectors.

Several new silver mirrored reflectors for projectors and three new X-Ray projectors are featured in this bulletin. These additions make the X-Ray line of flood lighting units extremely comprehensive.

Tinting and Toning of Eastman Positive Motion Picture Film

IN the production of motion picture film it is becoming more common to vary the color of the film either by toning or tinting or by a combination of the two processes. Toning consists in either wholly or partially replacing the silver image of the positive film by some colored compound, the clear portions or highlights of the image, consisting of plain gelatine, remaining unaffected and colorless. Tinting, on the other hand, consists of immersing the film in a solution of dye which colors the gelatine itself, causing the whole picture on the screen to have a veil of color over it.

PART I—TINTING

In "tinting" the following factors must be taken into consideration:

Nature of the Dye Employed

Dyes are chemically of two different types, acid and basic; so-called acid dyes are the alkali salts of organic acids, while the basic dyes are the chlorides, sulphates, etc., of organic bases.

For the tinting of film only "acid" dyes have been considered since it is not possible to make a complete selection from basic dyes alone, which would necessitate the use of acid and basic dyes in admixture—a procedure highly undesirable and in many cases impossible.

Any dye suitable for admixture with others to produce intermediate tints should possess the following properties:

A. The dye should be inert and not attack the gelatine or support. This is of fundamental importance as the gelatine coating of dyed film in many cases has a tendency to lose its flexibility, giving rise to what is known in the trade as "brittleness."

Several dyes when employed at a concentration of 1% attack gelatine readily at 70 degrees F. and vigorously at 80 degrees F., especially in presence of small amounts of acid, producing a marked softening and often partial dissolution of the film. The effect is roughly proportional to the concentration of the dye and to the temperature, and varies with each individual dye.

Experience has shown that the gelatine coating of film which has been softened in this way by the dye becomes "brittle" on subsequent projection.

The actual factors in the production of brittleness are:

1. The hydrolysing action of acid which in many cases is added to assist dyeing. In case a solid acid is employed the heat encountered during projection will greatly accelerate this hydrolysis.

2. The corrosive action of the dye itself. Dyes vary considerably in this respect according to their particular composition. So far, it has not been possible to make any general classification of dyes in this connection, though nitro compounds appear to be particularly corrosive in their action.

3. The presence of impurities in the dye. These take the form of excessive amounts of loading material such as sodium sulphate or chloride, or small traces of iron, the latter having a tendency to harden the film considerably.

In all the above cases, the physical nature of the gelatine is altered, whereby it loses its property of remaining resilient under normal conditions of temperature and humidity, resulting in "brittleness."

A suitable test as to whether a dye has any propensity to produce brittleness is to incubate a sample of film, half of which has been dyed, for about 48 hours at 212 degrees F. If any difference in brittleness is noticeable between the dyed and the undyed portions so treated after the film has been allowed to stand in the air for some time, the dye is unsuitable for tinting.

Apart from the above, most dyes when used at a concentration of 1% and at 80 defrees F. produce more or less softening of the gelatine, which may be prevented by:

(a) Use of only dilute solutions. Except in very special cases, a dye solution stronger than 0.5% is seldom required, the usual strength employed being about 0.2%, at which concentration softening is unusual.

(b) Use of a minimum amount of volatile acid in the dye-bath or omission of the same whenever possible.

(c) By working at temperatures not higher than 70 degrees F.

(d) By slight hardening of the film before dyeing and subsequent softening by glycerine, as described below:

B. The dye should not "bleed" to any considerable extent when the film is washed; in other words, the rate of removal of the dye should be slow and only a slight amount should wash out in a period of, say, five minutes.

In tinting, bleeding is of very considerable importance, since, during the periods between rinsing after dyeing and the placing of the film on the drying rack, any drops of water on the surface of the film become more or less saturated with dye, and these after drying remain as spots and irregular markings which are very apparent on the screen.

It is possible in some cases to modify this bleeding by an acid "stop bath," or by adding acid to the dye-bath; though it may be considered a general rule that the bleeding of a dye is a property peculiar to itself. In making a selection of dyes therefore, it is necessary to choose only those whose propensity for bleeding is a minimum.

C. The rate of dyeing should be only slightly affected by the addition of acid to the dye-bath, although most acid dyes are more or less sensitive to acid.

In case the rate of dyeing is appreciably affected by the addition of acid it is possible to take advantage of this fact since a much weaker dye solution may be employed to obtain a given tint, while an apparently exhausted bath may be revived by adding a small trace of acid.

Only a volatile acid such as acetic acid should be used since this will evaporate on drying, while the strength of the acid in the dye-bath should not exceed .05% or one part in 2,000, otherwise softening of the gelatine is liable to occur, especially if the temperature exceeds 70° F.

In the case of a bath containing a mixture of dyes, owing to the fact that acid affects some dyes more than others, as the dye-bath becomes exhausted and the acid content changes, the tint obtained will gradually change also. It is only possible therefore to use acid with any degree of certainty in the case of dye-baths containing a single dye.

D. The dyes should not fade on exposure to heat or light and should not be "dichroic" or change color on dilution.

Moreover, the wear and tear of the film should not be impaired in any way after dyeing, and even after incubating for 48 hours at 212 degrees F., afterwards allowing the film to humidify; no difference should be discernible between dyed and undyed film so treated.

E. The dye should not be affected by the acid fixing bath, since any fixing solution accidentally splashed thereon would destroy the dye immediately.

In view of the large number of tints required in commercial work, it is undesirable to keep a separate dye-powder for the preparation of each particular bath, but rather to prepare the same by admixture of three or more dyes. If three only are employed, mixing must be conducted with great precision in order to reproduce any given tint, but this difficulty is removed by the use of intermediate colors.

The following six standard dyes have been chosen as fulfilling

The strength of the dyes may vary slightly from batch to batch, but this variation is usually so small as not to materially affect the nature of the tint obtained from any particular formula.

Method of Mixing

Dissolve the solid eyes in as small an amount of hot water as possible, and filter through fine muslin. Pour hot water over any residue remaining, which should only be slight, in order to ensure thorough solution of the dye, and dilute the solution in the tank to the required volume at 65 degrees F.

Nature of Positive Film

Only good, snappy positive film may be successfully tinted, since tinting tends to reduce contrast.

The depth of the tint obtained depends on the following factors:

Nature and Strength of the Dye-bath

Except in special cases such as fire scenes, sunset and moonlight effects, and the like, it is very undesirable to employ strong tints, since apart from the displeasing effects and irritation to the eye, the dyes produce a slight softening of the gelatine film when used at 80 degrees F. in 1% solution.

Should it be necessary to employ concentrated baths in summer, either cool the dye-bath or use a suitable hardener. This will be unnecessary if hardener is employed in the fixing bath after development, but otherwise if formalin (40%) be added to the dye-bath to the extent of 1 volume to 400 volumes of dye solution, no trouble will be encountered. During the winter months, when it is advisable to treat all film after developing and fixing, with glycerine, the latter may be incorporated with the dye-bath, thereby eliminating an extra operation. The strength of the glycerine should be 2%, or two volumes per one hundred volumes of dye solution. In most cases, however, the addition of glycerine considerably retards the rate of dyeing, so that in order to obtain the same degree of tinting within a period of ten minutes, the concentration of the dye-bath should be increased accordingly.

When delicate tints are employed, the effect is both to remove the contrasty black and white effect, and to add a touch of warmth to the black deposit of silver, even in cases where the highlights are insufficiently stained to be noticeable. The result in many cases is equal to that obtained by partial toning, for example, tint No. 11 gives the effect of a blue-black tone.

Temperature of Dye-bath

Although temperature has little effect on the rate of dyeing with the dyes recommended, when used without the addition of acid it is advisable in all cases to work at 65 to 70 degrees F. in order to produce uniform results and remove any danger of softening the film.

Time of Dyeing

In order to duplicate any particular tint with a given dye-bath the film may be dyed either by time or by inspection. Dyeing by time is reliable if the dye-bath does not contain acid, though if acid is present, in time the acidity decreases, causing a slowing down of the rate of dyeing so that it becomes necessary to judge the progress of dyeing by inspection.

If two or more tints of the same color are required, in order to reduce the number of individual dye-baths to a minimum, it is better to vary the time of dyeing rather than to vary the dilution of the bath, providing the time of dyeing for the lighter tint is not less than one minute, which time is considered a minimum for the production of uniform results and for complete control of the dyeing operations.

The time of dyeing also depends somewhat on the previous handling of the film. Film which has been fixed in a bath containing ordinary, or chrome, alum dyes more quickly than that treated with plain hypo and hardened with formalin.

It is probable, therefore, that small traces of alum are left in the film even after prolonged washing, which serve as a mordant for the dye.

Should the film for any reason be over-dyed, a small portion of the dye may be removed by washing for 10 to 15 minutes, though the nature of the dyes will permit only slight mistakes to be rectified in this manner.

Life of the Dye-baths

This averages about 40,000 feet per 50 gallons of dye-bath. The baths may be revived at intervals by the addition of more dye, though this procedure is uncertain and it is generally advisable to mix fresh solution.

The addition of a trace of acetic acid (1 part in 1000) will revive an apparently exhausted bath, though, as stated above, it is only advisable to do this in the case of baths containing a single dye.

Method of Procedure

Either the "drum" or "rack" method may be employed, and in either case after dyeing for ten minutes (during which time the drum or rack should be agitated to ensure even dyeing and prevent accumulation of air bubbles) the film should be given a thorough rinse in plain water.

Before drying films on racks it is advisable to set the rack at a slight angle for a few minutes, to enable the surplus water to drain off more readily through the perforations. If drums are used for drying it is advisable to remove the surplus water by whirling the drum previous to drying.

If uniform results are to be obtained, film should never be passed through the projector before either tinting or toning.

How to Obtain Intermediate Tints

The twelve tints above are given merely as examples; other tints may be readily obtained by making a trial with a small amount of solution on a short length of film, taking care to match the tint in artificial light and not by daylight, since any dye containing Cine Blue appears redder by artificial light than by daylight.

When matching think of the tint as being made up of one or more of the colors, red, yellow, and blue. Colors such as orange are made by mixing yellow and red, violet by mixing red and blue, and green by mixing yellow and blue. Browns are obtained by mixing all three colors, red, yellow, and blue.

When comparing any two particular tints, it is usual to say that one is redder, yellower or bluer than the other, and the two may therefore be matched accordingly.

Choice of Tint

Almost any tint, if delicate, may be employed with advantage, though for general use those ranging through pink, rose, orange, yellow, pale green and pale blue are to be recommended; others are for special purposes.

It is always desirable to obtain harmony in color, especially when combining tinting with toning, so that the combination is pleasing to the normal eye.

For local tinting and hand coloring, the above dyes are likewise satisfactory.

TROUBLES IN TINTING

Streaks and Uneven Coloring

Cause:

a. Grease on the film. Never project film before tinting.

b. Slight bleeding and insufficient squeegeeing when on the drying rack. Always carefully remove any surface moisture from the film with a damp chamois before drying.

Importance of the Organ in Motion Picture Theatres

I HAVE said this and will repeat it that a successful musical interpretation is as necessary to a picture as good projection, and this cannot be denied. I also reiterate that music is the only means of providing suitable atmosphere and of enthusing the mute action of the motion drama with life. I would again emphasize that music means to the silent drama what the spoken word means to the legitimate stage.

Now that music for the film is an established factor, we will now deal with a phase of the matter which will enhance the musical interpretation of the screen. There is no question that the organ employed as a lone instrument is just as indispensable as an accompaniment to the orchestra. The lone organist is only a single person, an individual, and yet he has at his instant command the resources of a wonderful instrument with a great variety of stops and the true tones of every conceivable instrument employed in an orchestra. He can at a moment's glance portray sorrow, joy, tense dramatic emotion, agitation or any phase of emotion displayed by the characters on the screen.

As an orchestral accompaniment, I believe that there is no other instrument which can support the orchestra in a more artistic and effective manner than an organ. One of the main reasons why the organ is better than the piano as an accompaniment to the orchestra is that the organ has the power of sustaining tone indefinitely and is equipped with the so-called damper used for binding tones together and for furnishing harmonic background.

It is most natural that an organist playing with an orchestra must use discretion and common sense and must be extremely careful not to allow the tremendous volume of the organ to drown the orchestra. In most cases, organists are using the bass too loud and heavy. At times this will not be noticed by the player or even the leader, but a heavily predominating bass can easily be heard in the back of the theatre and hence an effective, well-rendered selection will be spoiled by the organist being careless in this respect. Many of the publishers are now including harmonic and organ parts with orchestrations, and the organists playing with orchestra should therefore not experience great difficulty in following the orchestras correctly.

Organ accompaniment for the orchestra demands more accuracy and more musical skill than any other instrument for the reason that the organ is situated so that it is not easily heard by the organist. Therefore, his technique must be clean and his harmony perfect, for unlike other instruments, the organ depends entirely upon sense of touch instead of sound. Inexperienced organists are sometimes inclined to play piano parts as written including variations and the parts of other instruments, or to express my opinion a little better, they are striving to be the whole show. The fact of the matter is, as previously mentioned, it takes good judgment and great care to correctly accompany an orchestra with the organ.

I have had the occasion at various times to observe organists at their work and in nearly every instance I have come to the conclusion that when exhibitors condemn the organ as a surplus, unnecessary instrument, it was in every case, the organists who created such an opinion. I therefore earnestly suggest that every exhibitor who has an organ irrespective of what the purpose, whether he employs it as a lone instrument or as an accompaniment to an orchestra, to see to it that the man manipulating it is capable of handling the instrument perfectly.

An organist who is a real master of the keyboard is master of every situation portrayed on the screen. He is the living interpreter of every shade of emotion registered by the silent players. He can express the sorrow of the life stories enacted through heart-rending melodies of the organ's great voice, or he can add life to a comedy film with an accompaniment which puts a spirit into the fun making of the screen comedians.

I hope that the above will sufficiently prove that the organ in the motion picture theatre is the best investment and one of the greatest assets to the exhibitor.

THE EDITOR.

For example, Schuman's "Traumerie," Rubenstein's "Melody in F," Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" and later works such as "Hearts and Flowers" which of course all musicians know is really Czibulka's "Love and Roses." Mr. Sol. P. Levy, a musician of ability and reputation, has just finished a composition which those musicians who have tried it in manuscript form believe will be a future "Traumerie" or "Hearts and Flowers." The title of this composition is "Bleeding Hearts," a floral poem, and it is one of the simple, broad, beautiful melodies which however frequently repeated, seems to fascinate and charm the listening ear more and more. 7—"Geo. M. Cohan's Historical Medley"—One step. Here's combination which always makes a big hit with the dances. Geo. M. Cohan's three favorites in a medley one step. Review of the Latest Musical Compositions

9—"Comedy Allegro." It is oft times said that "a rose by any other name smells just as sweet," but a Comedy Allegro by any other name would not imply what is meant by this term. If our readers had been in the Strand Theatre and seen the presentation of Charlie Chaplin's latest picture, "Shoulder Arms," in the scene where he was chasing the Huns, and had heard the Symphony Orchestra playing "Comedy Allegro," they would then have realized that correct music for the film can and does interpret the actions depicted on the screen. Tinting and Toning of Film

Sludge in the Dye-bath

This is due to the precipitation of the dye by small traces of alum or iron in the water supply. In many localities water is purified by adding alum, and only the smallest trace need be present to throw some of the dye out of solution.

Frothing of the Dye-bath

This occurs only when tinting on the drum with Cine Scarlet Cine Orange, and Cine Green, but no inconvenience will be caused if the drum is revolved slowly.

The Complete Plan Book

Compiled by Peter Milne

Index to Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors Box Office Reports

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to September 1, 1918.

Two Elgin Theatres Raise Admission Prices

TO meet increased cost of operation, for the first time since the beginning of war, managers of the Temple and Star theatres, Elgin, have raised admission prices.

Excepting the required additional war tax of one cent, the two houses have been charging 11 and 6 cents. They have increased to 15 and 7 cents for evening shows, keeping the same matinee prices.

Several weeks ago the Grand adopted a fixed afternoon and evening price of 15 and 17 cents. When the two other houses raised their prices, the Grand came up again to 17 and 20 cents for all shows.

The Orpheum retains its past prices, 11 and 6 cents.

The Temple reports an increased patronage since the "flu" closing, despite the price raising.

Manager Crocker of the Star states that while there have been no complaints nor objections to increased prices, the fact that papers continue to fill their columns with "flu" casualty figures and local news of the spread of the disease, is a "scareout" to the theatre-goers still. He does not look for a boost in patronage until the fear of the "flu" in theatre crowds dies out.

He argues that, could there be great danger of the spread of influenza in crowds, Elgin's two wild peace orgies would have brought unlimited spread of the disease. As it is, the most severe cases and the greatest spread has been in rural districts, far from the theatres and crowds.

"FAN FAN"—FOX EXTRAVAGANZA

Artistry Is Chief Asset, But Film Claims Little More

THE chief asset of this contribution is artistry. As a rule, in portraying Chinese atmosphere, most of the directors have shown great aptitude towards that end, especially when climate and natural scenery, such as California is blessed with, are at their disposal.

Outside of artistry, however, there is little else that would commend it to a critical audience.

The plot of the story resembles greatly that of the opera "Mikado." In fact, some of the situations are identical. The hero's attempt to hang himself to a tree, for instance; the appointment of the villain as chief executioner by the Emperor; the decision of the Emperor to have him executed for his failure to find some one to behead; his pardon at the last minute, for consenting to marry the Emperor's ugly daughter, etc.

Barring the role of the Emperor, all other prominent parts are played by juveniles.

The picture is clean, but will hardly have universal appeal.—Released Nov. 17.—Length, 5 reels. —P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Fan Fan.....Virginia Lee Corbin
Hanki Pan.....Francis Carpenter
The Ancient and Honorable Lady Shoo
Carmen DeRue
The Chief Executioner.....Violet Radcliffe
Head Collector.....Bud Messinger
The Emperor.....Joe Singleton
Scenario by Bernard McConville.

THE STORY

Hanki Pan, Prince of old Japan, looks up into the face of little Fan Fan, lovely as any cherry blossom. He forgets that his honorable father has decreed that he marry the Ancient and Honorable Lady Shoo—forgets all save fair Fan Fan. Deserting his high station he seeks Fan Fan in disguise, but her father on his death bed has promised her to the Chief Executioner as his bride.

Nothing loath, Fan Fan elopes with Hanki Pan and, confronted with necessity, they obtain employment at the Wisteria Tea Garden as entertainers. Misfortune overtakes them and they are discovered by both Lady Shoo and the Executioner.

Fan Fan is dragged off to durance vile and Hanki Pan is relentlessly pursued by his intended bride.

The Executioner must furnish a star performer for an execution that is scheduled for that day, and he selects Hanki Pan for the job. Royal father arrives in time, however, to postpone the performance and the Executioner is given the choice between his own sword and the Lady Shoo as a bride.

Hanki Pan and the two brides are made happy through the peculiar administration of law in the Ancient Land of the Rising Sun—law which royalty was wont to apply, if not to invent, to suit the royal purpose of the moment.

AD TALK

The management of the ———— theatre will present on ———— of ———— week the Fox extravaganza entitled "Fan Fan." This is a fantasy of old Japan and is enacted by the Fox child players who appeared with such a signal success in those other special productions, "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" and "The Babes in the Woods." Headed by Francis Carpenter, Virginia Lee Corbin, Carmen DeRue and Violet Radcliffe, these little players perform the principal roles of the old legend with a charm that is not to be denied.

"Fan Fan," made into a scenario by Bernard McConville and produced by the Franklins, is a lavish production from first to last. The settings made to represent the Japan of old form background of the finest atmosphere for the actions of the little people who portray the principal roles. This collection of children is, without doubt, the brightest group that ever faced a battery of motion picture cameras. Golden-haired Francis Carpenter is one of those kiddies that will cause the feminine portion of any audience to exclaim "oh" and "ah" whenever he appears. In "Fan Fan," however, his golden curls are well covered up with a silken black wig. But Mr. Carpenter is still his same little self.

The story of "Fan Fan" has to do with the romance of Prince Hanki Pan and Fan Fan, two youngsters, each ordained by their elders to marry others whom they do not love. After many wonderful adventures the two little people are united and receive the blessings of the self-same elders who previously had striven to keep them apart.

CATCH LINES

Enacted by the same cast of little people who appeared with such signal success in "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "The Babes in the Woods.".

A fantasy of old Japan, laid in the richest of settings and played by a cast headed by those adorable little folk, Francis Carpenter, Virginia Lee Corbin, Violet Radcliffe and Carmen DeRue.

An amazing extravaganza—something new in motion pictures—see the wonderful scenes laid in old Japan and the thrilling romance played by the leads of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp."

There are extravaganzas of the stage, "The Winter Garden" and "The Follies" shows. Here is an extravaganza of the films, more wonderful, more gorgeous, more pretentious than any stage production could ever hope to be. See "Fan Fan" and be convinced.

ADVERTISING CUTS:—Fox publicity department has supplied some attractive art cuts for this production, all of which serve to bring out the Japanese atmosphere contained in the picture. In three-column size there is one containing girl holding a fan over part of her face (in the accepted Japanese style) on which appears the title in characters resembling Japanese lettering. Space for announcement is left in mortise below. A circular art cut (two-column size) is dressed in similar display type while there is a novelty one-column cut.

TEXT CUTS:—Six two-column; four one-column. All cuts contain interesting scenes from production with the child players prominently displayed in the majority of them.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course there is the usual opportunity to play this as a children's matinee attraction. But the aim of the producers is not to cater to this particular "class" audience but to make its appeal universal. To let the people know that you have something different to offer, it would be well to decorate your lobby if you plan playing the picture for any length of time. As a rule lobby decorations, that is, appropriate decorations, are rather hard to find. A domestic drama offers little material with which to work. But with the case of "Fan Fan" you have something different and something that immediately suggests an attractive display. Your decorations are, of course, anything Japanese. Lanterns in front of the house would be attractive and any Japanese banners for the lobby would be appropriate. There are a variety of other ways to bring out the proper atmosphere, all quite obvious to the exhibitor. Such things as rickshaws and dressing the ushers up entail expense and should not be turned to unless the feature is due for a long run.

All Cuts on this Production, both Advertising and Text, Bring Out the Japanese Atmosphere of the Story to a Marked Degree. There are a Number of Cuts Procurable in which the Child Players are Shown as the Various Characters they Portray. These are Unusually Good from all Standpoints and Should Be Utilized if the Exhibitor Aims to Get the Full Worth of the Picture

"EYE FOR EYE"—NAZIMOVA PRODUCTION

Metro Subject Has Many Good Advertising Aids

Posters that instantly attract the passers-by and hold their attention undividedly. Unusual care is said to have been taken in preparing this line of paper on "Eye for Eye," in view of the worth of the production and the star. Here are three and six sheets

Here's One Ace High for Artistry; Nazimova Good

IN "Eye for Eye," you again come upon a production whose artistic merits stand high. These merits are so distinct that no one will fail to recognize them at a glance; but the story is untimely; consequently, not what the majority of pleasure seekers want; it has so proved in the past, by the continual failure of this sort of subjects. In this case, however, the star will draw.

It is evident, in this picture, that the artistic effects have been considered of supreme importance. At the same time, of the other entertaining elements, some have been entirely disregarded, while others, given a subordinate position.

To use an illustration: In the written or spoken word, poetry is divine; it is the surest means of reaching the emotion; but the number of those who understand and appreciate poetry, when compared to the opposing number, indeed is small; since pictures are made with the express purpose of reaching, if possible, all pleasure seekers; since chiefly commercial success, not art, lies underneath all picture production, it stands to reason, then, that it is unwise to disregard or subjugate such elements as are necessary to help make a picture entertaining to the great majority.

The story is based on the book L'Occident, by Henry Kistermaecker. The hero is a captain of a French battleship; the heroine, the daughter of a tribe chief; the place, Tangier and the deserts in Morocco.

Above all other factors, one stands out—the acting of Madame Nazimova. Possessing agility, graceful flexibility of body, personal magnetism and the all important ability to express all emotions, she is, without the least doubt, an artist.—Length, 7 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE STORY

The Comte de Cadiere, Captain of the French battleship Fraternite, is aiding the authorities in spreading Christianity among the tribles of Morocco when he is captured by a band of Arabs and sentenced to die. Hassouna, the Shiek's daughter, falling in love with him at first sight, aids him in his escape during the night. For this she is cast out in the desert by her tribe and later is made captive by a band of hostile natives. They take her to the slave mart at Tangiers, where she is sold to Rambert, proprietor of a French circus. Back in France, Cadiere attends the circus with his wife Helene, who has been unfaithful to him. The feature of the circus is Hassouna, now a dancer. When she sees Cadiere she swoons.

Cadiere takes the girl into his home. Later she discovers the disloyalty of Cadiere's wife. To get rid of her, Helene accuses Hassouna of an attempt to kill her husband. She is sent to a convent but shortly makes her escape. Returning to Cadiere, she discovers that Helene has eloped with her lover. She consoles him. Then Ensign Arnauld, Cadiere's son, as yet unaware of the stainless name he bears, arrives. And then comes Taieb, of Hassouna's old tribe, to tell her of the death of her mother and little sister through the meddling of the "Christian dogs." Infuriated, she strives to kill Cadiere, but something within her holds her back. When he goes to look after his dying wife, now deserted by the false lover, Hassouna turns to Arnauld, thinking to strike Cadiere through him. He is near public disgrace when Cadiere returns and informs Hassouna that she is mistaken regarding her family's death. And so the two are happy in their love.

AD TALK

"Oh, East is East and West is West
And never the twain shall meet
Till earth and sky stand presently
At God's great judgment seat."

So sang Kipling in one of his poems of India, and that there is truth in the statement there is no denying. But there are exceptions to every rule, no matter how bounden it be by conventions of race and section, and in "Eye for Eye," the special production which will be revealed at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, one of those exceptions is set down in startling and vivid scenes.

First of all it is to be noted that Mme. Nazimova is seen as the star in this production. From the very first picture this actress made, "War Brides," a brilliant career on the screen was predicted for her, and the prophets of the trade and press who dwelt on her praises then have had no cause to regret their enthusiasm. Mme. Nazimova's wonderfully expressive self was meant, it might seem, specially for the screen. And certainly in "Eye for Eye," in which she essays the role of an Arab girl, Hassouna, she surpasses all former performances.

The story of "Eye for Eye" was based on Henry Kistemaeckers' drama entitled "L'Occident," and tells the love story of Hassouna and Captain de Cadiere of the French battleship Fraternite. It is filled with color, life; situations that were created by a skilled dramatist. The story is unfolded on the screen with compelling force. There are Charles Bryant, Donaldy Gallagher, Sally Crute and E. L. Fernandez, who add to the merit of the production by skillful playing in supporting parts.

CATCH LINES

Though it was a case of love at first sight, the struggles and sorrows of Hassouna and Cadiere were manifold before they attained ultimate happiness.

PAPER:—Three one-sheets; three three-sheets; two six-sheets; one twenty-four-sheet. Paper on this production is all unusually striking. with Nazimova in prominent evidence.

SCENE CUTS:—Four two-column; four one-column.

ADVERTISING CUTS:—One four-column; one three-column; two two-column; one one-column. These advertising cuts deserve special consideration from the exhibitor, as they were designed by Lambert Guenther, a well known artist. They are something of a departure from the usual ad cut supplied by the majority of houses and can be called "artistic" without stretching the point. If it is planned to play the feature for an extensive run it will no doubt prove to the exhibitor's advantage to secure either the three or four-column advertisement.

BIG HOUSES

HERE is a chance to arrange most impressive settings, stage, musical and incidental.

A man to recite Kipling's poem, the inspiration of the play, while you show a stage setting typical of some portion of the far east and dimly illuminated.

A dancer to perform the dance of the veils also before some similar setting.

Either or both of these acts will help a long way toward creating the proper atmosphere for the picture.

Audiences will be put in the right frame of mind!

DON'T FORGET THAT—

MME. NAZIMOVA has appeared in two of the most talked of pictures, "Revelation" and "War Brides."

She is an emotional actress of the first class and well known both on the screen and stage.

The drama "L'Occident" upon which "Eye for Eye" is based, was a sensation on the boards.

"Eye for Eye" is extra length and extra quality, telling one of the most absorbing love stories of all time.

"THE ONE WOMAN"—SELECT

Production Is Excellent; Entertainment Depends on Politics

FROM a production angle, "The One Woman" is excellent, as it has been handled well. From an entertaining, the satisfaction it will give depends on the political views of the individual.

The subject is strongly anti-Socialistic. It will divide people into two distinct factions: those who oppose Socialism, will enjoy it; those who favor it, will be highly offended by it.

As this is a SECTARIAN subject, however, and as it is within our province—our duty—to help you determine whether a certain picture would or would not suit your particular audience by explaining the most important points, we may impartially say this much about it: that the picture condemns Socialism simply by building its arguments on individual passages taken from Socialistic literature.

The non-Socialist, in all probabilities, will offer no objection to this procedure. The Socialist, on the other hand, may advance this reasoning: that Socialism is not a creed; nor a belief; nor a party; nor is based on the sayings of a book, or the acts and sayings of any one individual—it is a philosophy; and as such, it should be praised or condemned as a whole, because only so it can be understood. Besides, although it condemns, it offers no means of defence; it presents, therefore, a one-sided argument; to him, then, such a procedure will appear unfair and not becoming free peoples. Clemenceau, he will point, and Viviani, and many other high French personalities, are Socialists. So is our own Charles Edward Russell. New Zealand has had a Socialistic form of government for a long time; but their homes are models.—Length, 5260 feet.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Are you a Socialist?
Are you a Democrat?
A Republican?

No matter. Whatever your political affiliations and feelings may be you will be interested in the picture which the management of the ——— theatre will present on ——— of ——— week for an extended run. This picture is entitled "The One Woman" and was written by Thomas Dixon, author of "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Dixon, to let the cat out of the bag, is emphatically against Socialism and in "The One Woman" he tells us just why he is. You will come to the ——— theatre, we feel sure, during the run of this picture. Will you come to be convinced? Will you come to scoff? No matter again.

In "The One Woman" Mr. Dixon took for his chief protagonist in his arraignment of Socialism, a young minister of various attainments who gives up his pulpit in order to pursue what he believes his ideals. These, he finds, are embraced in Socialism. And for these he gives up his wife, his two children, his happy home and allies himself in a common law marriage with a woman professing to be in sympathy with him. Then comes the rude awakening. The United States enters the war and the man finds that his companions-in-belief will not stand by the government. He finds his common law wife in the arms of another!

But the details and dramatic conclusion of "The One Woman" we will leave for the screen to tell.

THE STORY

Frank Gordon, a brilliant young clergyman, becomes imbued with the spirit of Socialism, until finally the members of his church take steps to have him resign. Gordon refuses to give up his new career and in a final speech from the pulpit of his church he calls for aid in building the proposed "temple of man." Gordon's wife is heartbroken, as she sees in his actions the influence of Kate Ransom, a beautiful woman, whose wealth and sympathy gradually win Gordon away from his God and home. At last Gordon divorces his wife and enters into a common-law agreement with Kate Ransom.

His former wife still struggles along with the hope that some day Gordon will return to her. Finally his colleagues take steps to vote against the government's order for conscription. Gordon refuses to enter into their plan, and as a result he is voted out of his own temple. Despondent and broken-hearted, Gordon goes home, to find that his common-law wife has become the mistress of another man. Gordon, in a furious fight, manages to kill the man with his own hands. He is found guilty of murder and sentenced to prison for life, but his former wife comes to his rescue and pleads for his pardon.

SUGGESTIONS

Inasmuch as Socialism is growing day by day and inasmuch as Thomas Dixon attacks it roundly in "The One Woman," you should be able to get a lot of advertising out of this picture and advertising that is different. If you are acquainted with Socialists you might get one of them to write a scathing and denouncing letter to a newspaper while you are showing "The One Woman." It will certainly bring replies in favor of your picture and there you will have a storm of public opinion centering around your picture. You might even run a slide inviting

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS"

Government Picture Shows Improvement Over Former Ones

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS" is the third film released by the Committee on Public Information. The picture is a vast improvement over the previous releases, both in regards to photography and subject matter. Some of the scenes are really marvelous. One can't help wonder at the courage and disregard for danger of the cameramen. At times it is apparent that the cameras have been set up in the battlefields during the thick of the fight.

The need for stimulating of our will to victory not existing now, due to the ending of the war, the films have been titled and edited with a new, but none the less interesting, object in view, to present a summary of the most notable events as concern ourselves and our Allies since our entry into the war. A few of such episodes are: an attack on American transports by German submarines; the battle of Chateau Thiery; with Field Marshal Haig on the British front; the battle of St. Mithiel; review of American troops by General Pershing and other Allied officers, etc. Worthy of special mention is the fight on the Piave; the scenes taken there are very exciting as they are photographically clear and taken from vantage points.

Not being fiction, this recapitulation of the most prominent points of the war since our entry should prove interesting to the extreme as a matter of past history.—Length, 7 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

The ———— theatre will present the third official war film released by the Committee on Public Information, entitled "Under Four Flags," on ———— of ———— week. The process of filming, editing and assembling "Under Four Flags" was started by the committee previous to the signing of the armistice between the Allies and the Central Nations, but when the news of peace was flashed throughout the world, the picture was altered in some few respects, its titles were rewritten and as a result the picture now stands as a historical narrative of the war since Foch was made commander-in-chief of the Allied forces until the end.

To say that the film is inspiring, considering it from the angle of the wonderful work done by the Allied armies and, more recently, by our own boys, is putting the case in mild terms. To watch the victors of Chateau Thierry and St. Mihiel, our own American troops, to see the dashing Italians in their last great drive across the Piave, to see the activities of the French and the British, the armies of nations that have borne the severest brunt of all when it comes to figuring in loss of men, to see all this and intermingled with it the daily routine of the soldier "over there," so interesting to the civilian, is to obtain one of the few real treats of the day.

The films have been intelligently assembled and titled by none other than Kenneth C. Beaton, whom many of our patrons doubtless read under the abbreviated title of "K. C. B." Mr. Beaton has furnished some excellent captions for the various scenes. On the other hand, the corps of photographers who are responsible for the pictures contained in "Under Four Flags" have secured some remarkable results. Not only do the scenes show that these men risk their lives in obtaining the shots but it is noticeable that the photography is truly superlative when the conditions under which the film was exposed are considered.

CATCH LINES

The sinking of a U-boat—the destruction of a German 'plane—the Americans at Chateau Thierry and St. Mihiel—Generals Foch, Pershing, Haig, Diaz—the reception of the American soldiers in France—the Italians in their victorious drive on the Piave—American troops brigaded with the British.

The third Official War Film. You remember "Pershing's Crusaders" and "America's Answer," the other two. "Under Four Flags" follows the war from the moment Foch took supreme command of the Allied Armies until the signing of the armistice.

The stars are Generals Foch, Haig, Diaz and Pershing—the support is the united armies of France, the British Empire, Italy and the United States—the best cast ever assembled for a motion picture!

SYNOPSIS

"Under Four Flags" is in seven parts and opens with the conference at Versailles when Foch was placed in supreme command of the Allied armies. The embarkation of American troops for France, scenes on shipboard and the destruction of a submarine are scenes that are included in this portion of the film.

In the second part the arrival of the American troops in France is shown together with the intensive training they underwent in the camps back of the lines and the royal receptions accorded them everywhere by the natives.

The third and fourth episodes comprise battle pictures taken during the Americans' victorious activities at Chateau Thierry. Views of the work done by those troops of ours that were brigaded with the British are also shown. These portions of the picture also show interesting scenes incidental to the fighting, such as the transportation of supplies, etc.

The fifth episode is a vastly interesting one, showing, as it does, the activities of the Italian troops on the Austrian front during their victorious drive which shattered the hopes of Austria.

The sixth and seventh episodes portray the battle of St. Mihiel, another fierce combat in which the American soldiers distinguished themselves before the whole world.

SUGGESTIONS

Don't fail to bring out in your advertisements that this is a review of the war since the time General Foch became Commander-In-Chief of the Allied Armies.

"MISS AMBITION"—VITAGRAPH

Lacks Heart Appeal; Action of Plot Is Fairly Steady

"MISS AMBITION" can only be classed as an average program offering. The story lacks heart appeal, and although its continuity may be called faultless, it fails to arouse strong interest It depends on the fairly steady action of the plot, on one or two scenes of an artist's model—not bad enough to shock anybody,—beautiful gowns, sharp photography, and splendid outdoor locations to entertain. It appeals to the senses rather than to the feelings.

As the ending can be foretold more or less accurately, the suspense is somewhat destroyed. For instance, when the heroine leaves her sweetheart in the country to accept a position as maid to a wealthy city lady who had made her the offer attracted by her beauty, you feel sure she would some day come back to him. Each subsequent situation, difficult as well as unpleasant, the heroine encounters with while in the city tends to strengthen that conviction. So it offers no surprise to you when it ends as you have anticipated.

By Rex Taylor.
Directed by Henry-Houry.

THE STORY

Marta, a working girl, secures a position as maid to Edith Webster, a society girl and for the time being sees no more of her sweetheart, Larry Doyle, a struggling architect. Ambition asserts itself while she tends her new duties and she longs for wealth and the power that it will bring. One day she has occasion to visit the studio of Nowland Wells, a sculptor, and Edith's fiance. He is much taken with her and unaware of her position, engages her to pose for his statue of Ambition. On the day that it is completed he is so delighted with it that he seizes the girl in his arms. And just at that moment Edith enters. No amount of explaining will convince her that Marta is innocent of any wrong doing and as a result the girl finds herself an outcast.

But still longing for wealth she marries Dudley Kelland, a millionaire. After the ceremony he discovers that she does not love him and seeks to win her affections by tendering her a large banquet. None of his friends appear, owing to the fact that he married a woman whose name was in disrepute. Kelland seeks to drown his sorrow in drink. The statue of Ambition which he purchased from Wells, overturns and kills him.

Now a rich widow, Marta finds herself still an outcast. Larry, now a prominent contractor will have nothing to do with her. She, however, hears that he is near bankruptcy in endeavoring to fulfill a big contract for the city. She goes to his partner and makes him accept her money, at the same time exacting a promise from him to keep her identity secret. But when the job turns out successfully and Larry demands to know the name of his benefactress his partner tells him, and thus are the lovers reunited.

AD TALK

Corinne Griffith, the beautiful young Vitagraph star, returns to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest photodrama, "Miss Ambition." This is an absorbing romance of the manner in which Marta, a young girl, is lured from the right path by an insatiable desire for wealth and the power that wealth brings to its possessor. She becomes a maid to a society woman. Later she meets her fiance, a sculptor who urges her to pose for his statue, Ambition. When it is completed he is so delighted with it that he seizes Marta in his arms and, of course, at that very moment, the other girl enters the room.

Thus is Marta's reputation blacked for the time being, even though she is innocent of any real wrong doing. She finds herself turned down by the man who once loved her, Larry Doyle, now a promising contractor and so she marries a disreputable old millionaire, her longing for money and power still getting the better of her good judgment. Soon after she is rendered a widow and then it is that she realizes her folly. She learns that Larry is in sore financial straits and tides him over with her money, not letting him know who his benefactress really is. And this act of hers is the means of reuniting the lovers.

Miss Griffith is, as ever, an adorable sight in the stellar role of this feature, while she receives sterling support from such well known Vitagraph players as Walter McGrail, Betty Blythe, Denton Vane, Templar Saxe and Fred Smith.

CATCH LINES

Corinne Griffith, the beautiful young Vitagraph star in a romantic-drama of compelling interest.

Ambition is all very well if it is motivated by sound judgment. Where Marta made her mistake was in the fact that she sought wealth for Wealth's sake alone. After she had achieved riches she realized her mistake and realized it only in the nick of time.

The tragic episode in the girl's life who sacrificed Love for Ambition.

She sacrificed love for ambition and then, when she awoke to the wrong of her act, sacrificed wealth and position for love.

Corinne Griffith, newest of Vitagraph stars, proves her right to an advanced position in the luminaries of screendom in this, her latest feature.

SUGGESTIONS

Feature Corinne Griffith in this production. She is one of the most beautiful stars on the screen today and her every appearance is a real treat. The story, that of a girl's vaunting ambition that truly "o'er leaps itself," is one that lends itself well to heavy advertising. By this we mean that you can well "ask questions" in your copy if you favor this type of advertising. Such lines as "Should a girl sacrifice Love for Ambition?" "Should a girl marry without love to gratify a vain ambition?" and others similar, will suit the action of the story.

"HITTING THE TRAIL"—WORLD

Another Blackwell-Greeley Production

THE Carlyle Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley combination is again in evidence in "Hitting the Trail," an underworld story of New York. To the reviewer it does not appear as worthy of some of the previous pictures turned out by this pair. Their recent comedies have been meritorious in many respects. "Hitting the Trail" is more "dime-novelish" in character and many of its scenes are overdone to the extent that their melodramatic values are lost in the shuffle.

There are, however, certain qualities about the melodrama presented that will, no doubt, have their desired tenacious effect on the mob audience. To wit: the factory boss who would ensnare every pretty girl employee; the reformed gangster and the settlement-working young lady who accomplishes the reformation; as well as other characters, to say nothing of situations of similar kidney.

"Hitting the Trail" has little if any comedy, but the stars are altogether satisfactory in this line of work: melodrama. Roy Somerville, author, has endowed his story with an unusually realistic underworld atmosphere and Harry O. Haupt and Dell Henderson, respectively adaptor and director, have brought it out on the screen with strict attention to all important details.—Length, 5 reels.—Dec. 2.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Kid Kelly	Carlyle Blackwell
Flo Haines	Evelyn Greeley
Joe Carelli	Joseph Smiley
Rev. Thos. Roberts	Geo. MacQuarrie
Mamie	Mabel Bunyea
Annie	Muriel Ostriche
Tony	Walter Green
Goldberg	Edward Elkas

CATCH LINES

When Kid Kelly quit his gang and hit the old sawdust trail to reformation there was something doing on New York's lower East Side! Kelly's old pal refused to believe that he had reformed for the sake of a mere "skoit." But "skoits" can accomplish much as the gang discovered.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley, that starring team responsible for so many enjoyable World Film comedies and the novel patriotic picture "The Road to France" turn to melodrama in "Hitting the Trail" with results that are strikingly successful.

Joe Carelli, factory owner, was told to go to a certain number on a certain street where he would find the girl he coveted. In passionate excitement Carelli lifted the heavy covering on the bed where, he had been told, the girl was lying. And then there was a command: "Hands up, Carelli!", and Kid Kelly poked a gun in the Italian's face! Carelli hadn't figured on the quick wit of the Irish!

AD TALK

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley who have jointly been responsible for some exceedingly pleasing comedy-dramas on the World Film program turn their attention to more serious work in "Hitting the Trail," a feature to be displayed at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "Hitting the Trail," to be quite frank, is melodrama—underworld melodrama of the most thrilling type. Its hero is a gangster, Kid Kelly, by name, whose reformation is brought about through the love and trust of a girl. Having taken this theme on the basis of the play, Roy Somerville, author, has conceived a story of unusual interest and one which from the standpoint of melodramatic suspense has much to commend it.

Mr. Somerville is one of the best known authors whose talents are claimed almost exclusively by the screen. It was with the old Fine Arts company that this writer first gained his reputation. He prepared one of the most successful earlier Fairbanks pictures "Reggie Mixes In" to say nothing of numerous scenarios for the Gish sisters and Mae Marsh. The Fine Arts school of scenario writing taught "Progressiveness" in capitals. These pictures always kept moving ahead and this is only only of the valuable technicalities that Mr. Somerville carried away with him from this studio.

Harry O. Hoyt, author of the Blackwell-Greeley comedies as well as "The Road to France" prepared the scenario from Mr. Somerville's story, while Dell Henderson took charge of the direction. Mabel Bunyea, Joe Smiley, George MacQueerie and Muriel Ostriche are seen in support of the principals. Other features on the bill at the theatre for the same dates are ———.

THE STORY

Kid Kelly is a leader of a gang in a tough district of New York.. One night he plans to rob the store of Goldberg, the milliner. At the time set for the trick, Flo Haines, who works in a flower factory and spends her spare moments helping Rev. Thomas Roberts who conducts a mission, is examining a hat that has attracted her but which she is unable to buy. When Kelly and his gang enter she hides behind a mirror. The police get wind of the raid and enter the place. The crooks escape but Flo is found and accused of being an accomplice. Kelly makes an effort to free her from the bulls but is unsuccessful and later rather than see her serve thirty days for a crime of which she is entirely innocent, he gives himself up and does the time himself.

This is the beginning of Kelly's reformation. Another encounter with Flo who is leading her sister workers in a strike against her employer, Joe Carelli, a lustful Italian, and Kelly is ready to set forth on the straight and narrow path. In the meantime the ex-gangster has grown to love Flo and this makes his old girl, Mamie, "sore." Together with Joe she plans a trick. She succeeds in doping Flo and calls for Joe, who covets the girls. Kelly, however, gets wind of the game and arrives in time to frustrate the plans of the Italian.

Later, however, he sees Roberts making love to Flo and believing she loves him he writes her a note saying that he was "camouflaging" all the time and returns to his old haunts. Flo refuses to believe the note and goes to him. In the meantime Kelly has gotten into a gang fight and is seriously wounded. Believing he is going to die he confesses that he really loves Flo. And so when he recovers all ends happily.

"DEUCE DUNCAN"—TRIANGLE

Fans Strong for Westerns Will Like This Desmond Subject

THIS picture will satisfy the majority of Desmond followers as well as most of those who enjoy Western photoplays, as it has been produced well.

Rapid action of plot as well as suspense are the chief elements upon which the story has been based. To these may be included the element of heart appeal which, to a certain degree, is roused by some of the situations.

The hero awakens the picturegoer's sympathy because he is given a human role to portray. For instance, when some intoxicated "Bad Men" annoy the heroine, he steps in and protects her. All through the picture he acts as her protector until finally, love having awakened in both of them, they marry.

As is common in all Western pictures, the usual amount of shooting, fighting and riding is done.

The picture is clean and may be classed as slightly above the average program contribution.—Released Nov. 24.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a western drama, purely and simply, and if your patrons are inclined toward this type of entertainment let 'em know what's coming. It is somewhat of an original twist to the story and you could benefit some by hinting at it in your advertisements. Tell part of it, briefly, up to a crucial point and then slide off into a few words of praise and advice to come to your theatre and see the rest of it. Bill Desmond is a pleasing star, possessed of an ingratiating personality and, particularly if you have played his previous pictures, it would be well to bill him in stellar type.

AD TALK

Bill Desmond, popularly known as "Smiling" Bill, will be the star at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest Triangle photoplay entitled "Deuce Duncan." This is a western drama written specially for him by George Hively who has long been connected with the production of western pictures and knows well how to construct them. Desmond's peculiarly happy personality and his ability to make the most of any situation in which he finds himself together with the unusually intense story that Mr. Hively has provided him, furnish a double guarantee of the true worth of "Deuce Duncan."

The picture shows him as a cowboy on the UR ranch. Cattle rustlers have been making off with portions of the herd and so the cows are greased by the hands of the ranch. What is Duncan's surprise when he goes to see the girl he loves to find traces of this grease on her brother's clothes. For love of her he makes no charge against the man but keeps a close eye on all his subsequent movements. But despite the good wishes of Deuce and the girl towards the miscreant, he soon shows himself in his true colors.

One day he attacks the heroine, the girl whom he has said was his sister. In a passionate rage he says that he is not her brother at all, that this man is still in prison where he was sent fifteen years before for a crime that he did not commit. Deuce arrives in time to save the situation and, incidentally, the girl, and after that, all is happy for the lovers. Luella Maxim is a strikingly appealing opposite for Desmond in this offering while Ed Brady and George Field have other principal roles.

THE STORY

Anne Tyson, living alone in a cabin on the plains, is one day surprised by a mysterious stranger who makes himself known to her as John, her brother, who had gone to prison fifteen years previous and had only now escaped. He urges Anne to flee with him and she, sympathetically, agrees. During the flight John steals Deuce Duncan's horse and riding outfit. Deuce is a cowboy and this theft leads him to suspect John. Later, Anne obtains a position as barmaid in the town saloon known as the "Half Acre of Hell," where she leads a miserable existence being subject to the insults of the various ruffians who infest the place.

After John has made good his escape, he joins Steve Clement's gang of cattle rustlers. Deuce, who is employed on the UR ranch, greases the cattle in order to apprehend rustlers. He visits Anne in her cabin after rescuing her from bar room ruffians and discovers some of the grease on John's clothing. But because of Anne's pleading Deuce leaves John alone. She tells him that he was innocent of any crime when sent to jail in the long ago. But despite Deuce, John is arrested along with the rest of the Clements gang. Deuce sees the sheriff and has John liberated.

The climax comes when John forces his attentions on Anne. He tells her that he is not her brother at all but that he exchanged places with him and escaped. He demands that Anne surrender herself to him in order that her brother may go free, he being the only one that is aware of his innocence. But Deuce comes to the rescue and fights off John. Clements, the rustler, in the meantime, has escaped and sneaking upon the scene, shoots and kills John. And then Anne is only too glad to permit Deuce to take her in his arms.

One Column Coarse Screen Star Cut

CATCH LINES

William Desmond in an original western picture—one that offers you a change from the usual "bandit reforms at shy glance of a girl" story and gives you a virile, red-blooded tale of the open plains—of real men and real women—one that reflects the true spirit of the West.

"John" introduced himself to Anne as her brother and because she had ever waited for the return of the prodigal, jailed fifteen years before, she took him under her wing and provided for him. What was her shock, therefore, to discover him one day in the role of the passionate aggressor. His attacks on her were only warded off by Deuce Duncan, the hero in this startling Triangle Play now showing at the ——— theatre.

William Desmond, the fellow with the smile that simply won't come off, in a western play of romance and thrills—one of the real old-fashioned sort—of that type that gave the present western picture the jump that it has today on all other productions. See it. You won't be disappointed.

"EYE FOR EYE"

LOBBY DISPLAY:—A hand colored lobby display gotten up on the same style as that furnished with the Screen Classics productions is furnished on this picture. There are 22x28 star photos; 8x10 scene photos and 11x14 scene photos, these last in black and white. A title and synopsis card furnished to complete display.

Other advertising accessories on "Eye for Eye" include special lithograph window cards, special heralds and plain heralds, slides and music cue sheet.

SUGGESTIONS

The paper and cuts, designed by Lambert Guenther, are specially attractive on this production, and these should be freely used, for it is to be imagined that the exhibitor will book the subject for an extended run. "Eye for Eye" is an extra-length production, it being in seven reels. This fact alone opens the way for advertising. While we doubt whether there are picture patrons in any large numbers who still rush to the place where quantity alone is shown, make it forcible in all advertising that you do that "Eye for Eye" presents quality as well.

Mme. Nazimova is a well known actress both with patrons of the screen and stage. If you are in a neighborhood where you have a high clientele, call attention to the fact that Mme. Nazimova appeared in Ibsen repertoire last season, and also bring out the fact that her first Screen Classics production, "Revelation," was acclaimed as one of the best pictures ever made.

You might use the verse quoted in the ad talk on this page in a special lobby frame, and if you want to make it the more impressive have your artist paint as a background for it a dim and shadowy desert or any Far East scene that you yourself select. Your artist will also be able to get in some good advertising of this sort if he glances over the stills on the production. The attire worn by the star in the first part of the production and the locale of the story will immediately suggest some angle to him that can be brought out impressively by the brush.

"ALL THE WORLD TO NOTHING"— WILLIAM RUSSELL

Reviewer Classes It Far Below William Russell Standard

THIS is probably as poor a contribution as any ever released with William Russell starring. It is practically a conglomeration of absurd situations placed together in the most incoherent manner.

To begin with, the story fails to appeal to the human sympathies; secondly, it contains hardly any other elements that could endow it with entertaining values; but the worst thing of all is the construction of the subtitles; the use of the Metaphor—the employment of one word to denote another—is most liberal; and being quite bombastic, the effect they produce is ridiculous. Here is one or two of them: "I've got you in my eyes—like the sun," and "It was a bitter cup—but with a word—you made it sweet." Both have been spoken by the hero to the heroine. In commonplace subjects, such as this one is, metaphor is altogether out of place.

In regards to the action of the plot, it is nil; for the reason that its unfolding depends almost entirely on the subtitles, which consist chiefly on talk back and forth.

The situation at the opening of the picture, where a bet is determined by the number of pieces a glass has been broken to, is illogical; it would have required a scientist, with the most accurate microscope, to have determined the exact number; even then, there could have been a doubt.

The death of the hero's pal and the showing of his covered remains at the hospital, certainly will not increase the entertaining values.

THE CAST

Richard Chester.....William Russell
Nora Ellis.....Winnifred Westover
Everard Peck.....J. Morris Foster
Chas. Rennalls.....Hayward Mack
By Wyndham Martyn.
Scenario by Stephen Fox.
Directed by Henry King.

CATCH LINES

William Russell in another romantic comedy-drama in which he loses one fortune in poker and gains another in marriage. But the marriage, he has nothing to do with that!

Once a gambler always a gambler. Richard Chester played cards and lost; played love and won. But he was gambling all the time. It's a brave man that will take a chance on a wife!

That old saying, unlucky at cards, lucky in love, held good in Richard Chester's case. He drew a queen to the middle of a broken straight and froze all the others out.

Of course its a bad thing to play poker three nights running—particularly when you can't better a pair of deuces. But just the same if Richard Chester hadn't lost his fortune at cards he would never have won a wife. Now, we ask you, is gambling a sin?

AD TALK

William Russell's comedies and comedy dramas have come to stand in the front rank of pictures. He seems to be able to get just the right stories, stories that fit him and give him opportunity to show himself to the very best of advantage. "Up Romance Road" and "Hobbs in a Hurry" will be remembered as two of his best subjects, and yet it remains for "All the World to Nothing" to set still a higher mark for him to strive for in future efforts before the camera. "All the World to Nothing" was written by Wyndham Martyn and directed by Henry King, the combination that has been in evidence on previous Russell pictures.

The story opens with a three-day poker session in which the hero, Richard Chester, speaking in the vernacular, loses his shirt. A down and outer, he happens to run into Nora Ellis' apartment while searching for someone else's. And he is in disguise. Nora, just at the moment, is in very much of a predicament, having received word that if she doesn't marry immediately she will lose her fortune. She takes Chester as a possibility and he takes Nora as his wife for Nora is very pretty.

Now here is a fine beginning, indeed, for an author who knows how to handle romantic comedy-drama which, suffice it to say, Mr. Martyn certainly does. The romance of Chester and Nora, the latter character charmingly played by Winnifred Westover, makes some of the most enjoyable "seeing" that it has ever been our pleasure to show and we trust that none of our patrons wil overlook this opportunity of having a good time at the ——— theatre.

THE STORY

Strange things will happen! And a series of strange incidents leads the financially embarrassed Richard Chester into the apartment of Nora Ellis, all the time in a peculiar disguise. Nora is in need of a husband to retain her fortune, and immediately enlists the aid of Chester, who gives his name as Chester Dick. Chester is quite willing, but while the ceremony goes on the butler makes off with the jewels. So when Chester departs, a wedded man, he is suspected. This is shortly cleared up, however, for the butler soon afterwards mails to Nora his confession.

Thereupon Chester gets to work and fares with moderate success. Nora has an ardent admirer, Rennalls. She tells him that she cannot marry him, but does not disclose that she is already married. He is puzzled, and believes that if he can reduce her to poverty she will listen to him. He starts to undermine her fortune by raiding "Brazilian Lead," a security on which her entire fortune rests. Chester learns of this and creates a market adverse to Rennalls' scheme and Rennalls goes broke. When the three million mark is reached, Miss Ellis instructs her bankers to credit to the "joint account of Chester and Ellis." She reveals by word and action that she loves Chester, but regrets that she is already married to a certain person by the name of "Dick." Rennalls rushes in and states that "this man is already married and carries his wife's picture in his pocket." There is a momentary estrangement, but when it develops that the picture is a small photograph of Miss Ellis which Chester "borrowed" off the mantelpiece at the time of his impromptu wedding, everything ends happily, as she recognizes "Dick" as being Chester.

"THE ONE WOMAN"

Then there is the free love angle to play up if you so desire. The man in "The One Woman" contracts a Common Law marriage. Certainly this angle affords something different. Here you have another opportunity to create discussion as well as to go the limit on sensational advertising if you so desire.

Then there is the talent that was responsible for the picture. Outside of his constant attacks of socialism Thomas Dixon is known from his connection with "The Birth of a Nation," certainly an advertising asset not to be overlooked. Reginald Barker, who directed it, is one of the best known men in his line and should be featured also. If you glance over the cast you will find a number of well known names and if "Hearts of the World" has played in your neighborhood don't forget that Ben Alexander made quite a hit in it.

CATCH LINES

When is a Socialist not a Socialist? When he's a patriot!

By Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," on which "The Birth of a Nation" was based.

Whether you are a Socialist or not you should see "The One Woman," in which this estate is the theme.

Is it to be Marriage or is it to be Free Love? Many claim that the marriage system is wrong. Few claim that Free Love is right. Thomas Dixon gives his views in the startling photoplay, "The One Woman."

Is Thomas Dixon correct in his assumption that Socialism is to be trodden down? We might still be at war with Germany if it hadn't been for members of this political party. And yet some Socialists, believing that war is wrong, have fought in the trenches of Europe! Where do we stand? See "The One Woman."

"The Mystery Girl," with Ethel Clayton

(Paramount—Directed by William C. De Mille)

THIS picture has been based on the novel "Green Fancy," by George Barr McCutcheon. All those that are familiar with this author's stories, know that they are more or less of the fanciful type, in which the imagination is granted quite a few liberties. Fictitious kingdoms and princes and duchesses are the chief things dealt with. Such a one is "The Mystery Girl."

The story begins in France, where the Duchess of a little kingdom is serving as an ambulance driver, just to avoid the Huns who have despoiled her country. The Prince, who is kept as a prisoner in the little kingdom, escapes to America. The heroine, who is acquainted of the fact by a message sent to her by the Prince with a pigeon, follows him there with the Crown Jewels. The balance of the story deals with the intrigues of the pretender to the throne who is in love with the Duchess, how he entered into a conspiracy with a notorious European Crook to help him get the girl in return for the jewels, and how he is outwitted. Of course there is a love affair between a U. S. Officer and the Duchess running throughout the story.

If you can manage to prevail upon your patrons to forget the plausibility of the plot by advertising it accordingly, they will enjoy it. In spite of the lack of convincingness, there are several highly enjoyable points in it, due to the mystery and the consequent suspense.

"Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas"

(Distributed by the Robertson-Cole Company)

TRAVELOGUES that present nothing new to the eye are very tiresome. Instead of entertaining, they bore. But when they describe regions with their inhabitants and their peculiar costumes never before explored, such as the Martin Johnson Cannibal pictures do, they arouse the interest to a high pitch; this is due to the inherent curiosity of the mind.

In taking these pictures, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson actually risked their lives. That they are alive to-day to tell the tale, it is a miracle. They were captured by the natives once, and but for the sight of a British Man-of-War, which happened to approach the island by accident, they would have been eaten alive. And it is said that the flesh of a white is very delicious to them. They prefer it to any other.

The expedition started from San Francisco. After visiting Honolulu, Pango-Pango, Samoa, the most beautiful natural harbor in the world; then Sydney, Australia, where provisions were taken, they reached the South Sea islands.

Throughout the ten reels, the unfolding of many interesting and worth knowing things takes place. The real interest, however, begins not where the hand of civilization has control, but beyond those limits—where the influence of the white man is not felt. The treacherous, man-killing and very often man-eating savages, with their peculiar costumes and their strange looks, are shown.

The subtitles are very appropriate. The element of humor is inserted in them in abundance, thus relieving the monotony to a great extent.

The photography is remarkable; so is the tinting and toning, which makes the sky, the sea and the scenery appear beautiful.

My understanding is that the ten reels are to be released so as to make one complete show. When the fact is taken in consideration that travel pictures, however interesting, become tiresome when too much of it is given, will be plainly seen that such a decision does not seem wise. From four to six reels, in combination with a two reel O. Henry, a two-reel high class comedy and a cartoon, would make an ideal bill. News-weekly should be avoided; while slap-stick comedy should be barred, as it would be entirely out of place.

These pictures should appeal well to high class patronage.—P. S. Harrison.

"The Wildcat of Paris," with Priscilla Dean

(Universal Special—Dec. 16. Directed by Joseph De Grasse)

THIS picture will rank among the best Priscilla Dean contributions. Heart interest, due to personal sacrifices for a higher ideal; mental excitement, caused by the rapid action of the plot; suspense, owing to inability of foretelling the action; these are its entertaining elements.

The Apaches of Paris, their relation to the community before the war and their conduct toward France after the memorable days of August, 1914, is the theme of the story. It is not, strictly speaking, a war subject, but one in which some war scenes have been resorted to in order to bring out more vividly the fact that even the Apaches, whose aversion for law and order is well known, when Paris, their home, was threatened, did not fail to rush to the rescue.

I doubt whether a real Frenchman could have imparted to this picture a more realistic atmosphere. To the great majority of us the knowledge of Apaches comes from the novels we have read. The scenes in this picture tally exactly with the images we have formed of them. As themes of this nature, in book form, have invariably proved popular, I am inclined to believe that, in picture form, they will prove equally interesting.

The acting of Miss Dean is marked by the same degree of virility, the same liveliness, as that of her past contributions.

The picture is clean and, though strong, owing to the uncommonness of the subject, should appeal universally. Length, six reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Keeping Up With Dubuque

THE Family in Dubuque, Ia., has changed the days for the showing of Goldwyn pictures from Friday and Saturday to Thursday and Friday. On November 7 and 8, "The Spreading Dawn," with Jane Cowl, was the feature shown. This was the first appearance of Miss Cowl at the Family, and her picture drew average houses both days.

WHEN "The Lone Wolf," with Bert Lytell, was shown at the Grand in Dubuque about two months ago, the fans liked it so well that they had been asking Manager Lorenz for a return engagement of the picture. He was able to get it back on Friday, November 8, and presented it to full houses. Mr. Lytell's popularity here is surprising, considering that Dubuquers have seen him in very few pictures.

Fox Studio Doings

Production work was resumed at the Fox studio when Director Lynn Reynolds began the filming of "The Framer," which will star Gladys Brockwell. The supporting cast includes William Scott, J. Barney Sherry and Harry Leopold Dunkinson.

Tom Mix and company will begin work about November 25 and the Madeline Travers company, under the direction of Frank Beal, the following week. Arvid E. Gillstrom has arrived at the Hollywood studio from the east during the past week and filming of a subject featuring the Lee children was begun.

Preliminary work has begun on a new juvenile William Fox production. Jane and Katherine Lee will star in this film, a title for which has not yet been selected. The story is being shaped by Director Arvid E. Gillstrom, who arrived in Los Angeles from New York early in November to take charge of the little actresses. Up to the present rehearsing has been the order of the day, but the camera will begin to work in a few days.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

The Lasky studio in Hollywood has resumed production, with three units at work. C. B. De Mille, producing a war play, has continued production throughout the close-down period. Monday Bryant Washburn will again take up the work of filming "Venus in the East," under the direction of Donald Crisp, and it was planned that Shirley Mason, who arrived in Los Angeles last week, would begin work about the eighteenth.

The filming of "The Heart of Wetonah" has been completed by the Norma Talmadge Select company at the Lasky studio, and Miss Talmadge, accompanied by Joseph Schenck, departed Tuesday for the east, where future productions will be made. Miss Talmadge will next appear in "The Probation Wife," and following that a story titled "New Moon" will be produced. The subject just completed is an Indian story.

Vitagraph News Bits

To be lassoed while speeding sixty miles an hour on a motorcycle and thrown over an immense cliff is thrilling to think about, and when it is seen done in reality to Antonio Moreno in the eleventh episode of "The Iron Test" it will make the hearts of the spectators stand still.

William Duncan says that if the Allied Governments will turn the Kaiser over to him, he will ask Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, Vitagraph's serial authors, to write a special episode in "The Man of Might" exclusively featuring sweet Wilhelm. He promises that all episodes of all serials will pale to the shade of thin milk beside this one and that thereafter will be only a memory.

Under the direction of Dave Smith, Bessie Love has almost completed work on "The Enchanted Barn," an absorbing love story by Grace H. L. Lutz, in which pure romance and melodramatic thrills are skillfully blended.

With an amount of subconsciousness that guaranteed its sincerity William Duncan received a high compliment on his attention to detail from a Pullman porter during the making of a train scene in the serial "The Man of Might."

Here and There

Charles J. Giegerich, press representative for Arthur Guy Empey and Lieutenant Pat O'Brien, is now at the head of the publicity department of the Vitagraph Company's West Coast studio. Mr. Giegerich arrived in Los Angeles Sunday, November 3, and made his first appearance at the Talmadge avenue lot Monday morning, November 4. He is now grinding out reams of press notices for the eight companies at work in Hollywood. Mr. Giegerich was connected with Vitagraph several years ago, when he organized the publicity department of the sales forces.

The Brentwood Corporation is putting the finishing touches on "The Turn in the Road" in the Mena Film Corporation studio, Fountain and Berendo avenues, Hollywood. The story has a rural touch. The method of distribution has not yet been decided upon. The cast includes Helen J. Eddy, Winter Hall, Pauline Curley, Ben Alexander, Lloyd Hughes and George Nichols.

After spending fifteen weeks at Camp Lewis entertaining the boys, followed by a vaudeville tour, Max Asher is back at the Vitagraph studio. He is now a member of the Rock and Montgomery Comedy company and is at work on the new comedy, "Boarders and Bums."

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF

In the quest of a correct answer as to why the reversal of motion on the screen, HOOKUM staff in a body, called at the Lois Weber studio. Due to the influenza close down, and the invasion of the matrimonial germ, the place was deserted save two—Phillips Smalley and the watchman. When this well known director was told how eagerly the entire world waited for an explanation of the most important phenomena of screen action, he delved into his library and memory, and came forth with an answer that should satisfy the questioner.

"It is commonly supposed," said Mr. Smalley adjusting his tortoise shells, "that the motion picture director is omipotent Canute. The earliest known would-be director of moving objects was humiliated by an advancing object which he would have retire. His megaphone was powerless. And so today inversley his prototype must need be for his good humiliated by the wheel which, though not as restless as the tide, is as powerful, and refuses to advance."

Mr. Lichtman was confined in Kansas City with a touch of influenza, but has now fully recovered and has resumed his trip. In his report about conditions as he found them on his tour, Mr. Lichtman said:

"While the situation has been serious I find that most exhibitors took advantage of the closing of the theatres by making improvements and preparing for the rush of business which was bound to come. Exchange managers have likewise put their offices in order and have been able to clean up a mass of detail preparatory to the reopening of business.

"With the great news of peace everyone has taken on a new spirit of optimism, and with the influenza abatement practically everywhere theatres are now opening up to patrons who are more enthusiastically inclined toward amusement than ever before."

Theatres of Springfield Come Through With Flying Colors

THEATRES of Springfield, Ill., opened auspiciously on the evening of Friday, Nov. 8, at 5 p. m., the official time set by the Influenza-Pneumonia Commission for the lifting of the ban. Hours before the specified time every playhouse was ready and watching the clock for the hour to strike. The reason the theatres were allowed to open on Friday night was that a big War Work Rally was to be held at the State Arsenal, and the only way it could be held was to allow the theatres to open ahead of the time for the meeting.

The opening went off smoothly. Every theatre had been cleaned and polished and gone over until they looked like glistening mirrors. Patrons were caught looking at the changed order of things in some of the houses with appreciative eyes. And some were kind enough to express their approval.

None of the theatres suffered a loss of employes, as far as can be ascertained. Some of the men secured temporary positions during the closing period, giving them up when the ban was raised. Everyone was happy to think the playhouses would again be running normally. Springfield theatres were dark from Tuesday, October 15, to Friday, November 8.

Springfield was lucky. St. Louis was closed four days before this city was ordered to shut down, and Nov. 9 the epidemic is getting worse in the Missouri city all the time.

Peace Celebrations Bring Another Ban

PEACE celebrations in Michigan, during which thousands were crowded together to sing dirges to the death of Kaiserism has resulted in an increase in the number of influenza cases and several Michigan cities have again established the ban which closes theatres along with other public places. This information was given out by Dr. R. M. Olin, state health officer, with offices in Lansing.

In Saginaw, Jackson, Pontiac and Port Huron, the closing orders are again effective and will remain operative until Dr. Olin sees an improvement which will assure the safety of not only residents of those cities, but the rest of the state as well.

Flint, Lansing, Detroit, Saginaw and several small towns report big jumps in the number of cases. Should the increase in new cases continue in these cities, the ban on theatres and other public places will again be put into effect.

Lansing, after being germ-tight for three weeks through the closing order, has had the number of new cases jump to between 20 and 50 daily. Dr. H. L. Wright, local health officer, after a conference with Dr. Olin, declared that unless there was a considerable decrease in the number of cases, steps to reestablish the ban might be necessary.

Michigan Again Faces Closing Order

ACCORDING to advices from Detroit, the State of Michigan is once again in danger of an influenza epidemic that may lead to state-wide closing. On November 15 the question was being seriously discussed by the State Health Board authorities and Dr. R. M. Olin, the state physician, is personally making an inspection of various cities. It is probable, of course, that the ban will only be placed on those cities where the conditions are considered serious.

New cases reported to the state health authorities on Wednesday were 689, or 30 more than the day before. In fact, the number of daily reports has been growing. Bay City, Saginaw, Grand Rapids and Pontiac are all reported in bad shape. In Bay City 60 new cases and six deaths were reported in one day.

There was great rejoicing in Detroit and elsewhere in Michigan when the state ban was lifted. Business did not, however, pick up as much as the exhibitors anticipated and they do not expect to make up the losses. During the peace celebrations the downtown theatres in the larger cities did a big business. The downtown theatres, generally, have done a better business proportionately than those in residential neighborhoods.

Detroit Universal Makes Changes in Staff

MANAGER Paul Bush of the Detroit Universal exchange announces several changes in his sales organization. R. Von Der Goltz, manager of the Toledo branch, has resigned to go to the Metro company in Philadelphia. His place will be taken by R. A. Adams. The local force now comprises Jules Leby, R. Mooney, Ben Goldstein, Herb Fowser and Charles Sturgis.

The Universal exchange has taken on new life during the past few weeks. A publicity department has been organized and an effort to co-operate with the exhibitors in advertising Universal pictures will be made. For the new serial, "The Lure of the Circus" newspapers will be employed as well as billboards.

Pontiac Theatre Changes Hands

ACCORDING to reports from Detroit, Mich., Lieut. A. J. Kleist has purchased from Helmer George the former's interest in the New Oakland theatre at Pontiac, Mich. Lieut. Kliest closed the deal while on a visit home from Camp Lewis, Washington. He plans to keep vaudeville in the New Holland and to offer pictures exclusively in the Eagle, Central and New Oakland theatres.

George Wilbur, formerly of the Majestic theatre, Wyandotte, has been appointed manager of the Oakland.

Madison Exhibitors Agree On Nature of Productions

A CONSENSUS of opinion of film men in Madison, Wis., and exchange men who make the city daily seems to be that the most desirable films to be shown at this time are those having a cheerful aspect. With the end of the war house managers throughout the state have pondered over the pictures that would be the most likely to appeal to their patrons. It is the belief here that the patriotic plan and the one most likely to succeed would be to avoid sordid and over-emotional pictures, at least until the boys come home.

In booking productions for the coming months, local theatres and those in this central district are inclined to favor comedies and light plays after the style of Madge Kennedy. There is bound to be a period of depression until the boys have actually arrived in this country and to relieve the minds of the parents and friends, pictures of a lighter trend is desirous.

Manager McWilliams of the Grand stated that war pictures will draw for a few more weeks, but that he believes that managers would be unwise to book any more of these pictures than they now have on hand.

Favorable Locations Help Dubuque Theatres

ONE of the reasons given for the popularity of Dubuque moving picture houses, is that they are all favorably located. The Princess theatre is in the very heart of the city, on one of the busiest streets. Being in the shopping district, it is noted for its successful matinees; it is within short distance of every car lne in the city, which insures a good attendance in the evening, no matter how inclement the weather may be.

The Dreamland is four blocks farther down the street than the Princess, and it has a patronage all its own among the downtown people.

The Family has all the north end patronage, while the Liberty has the people from the middle districts. The Majestic is a block below the Dreamland, while the Grand is within the same distance of the Princess. The four downtown theatres are the larger, and therefore have more trade than the smaller uptown theatres, but as a whole, every Dubuque theatre does good business.

Flickers on Milwaukee Screens

MABEL NORMAND in "Mickey," a special release, will be shown for the first time in Milwaukee, at the Merrill theatre. Following, Nazimova will be seen at the Merrill theatre in her latest screen production, "Eye for an Eye." This picture will have an indefinite run, beginning Sunday, November 24th.

EAU CLAIRE, Wisconsin, will have a picture machine installed in the public auditorium. The Kelly Construction Co. were awarded the contract for installing the machine, which will cost, when completed, $1,323.

THE NEW STRAND, under the new management, is doing double the business. The interior of the theatre has been newly decorated, and together with the new lobby furnishings it presents a very attractive appearance.

J. H. GRAUMAN, manager Metro Picture Service, reports that business in the state will be 100 per cent by the end of the week.

GEORGE FISCHER, manager of the Alhambra theatre, said that $1,000 was collected in the Alhambra theatre the first two days of the War Chest Drive, by ushers passing the hat.

COMMUNITY singing in the Alhambra is becoming more popular as the time goes on, said Manager Geo. Fischer, and Frederick Carberry is holding the interest of his large audiences right along.

THE recently installed $10,000 pipe organ, in the Alhambra theatre is the largest organ in the Milwaukee theatres.

LEO LANDO, manager of the Butterfly theatre, will have orchestral concerts Friday evenings. Two programs will be given during the evening, besides the pictures.

H. J. FITZGERALD, manager National Exhibitors' Exchange, says that the demand for Anita Stewart pictures has been very large and is being booked up very rapidly, although it has not as yet been released.

Flint Exhibitor Looks for Exceptional Season

WHILE business at all Flint motion picture theatres is declared to have been "off" during the week just preceding the reopening after the influenza epidemic, despite an encouraging start on the first Saturday and first Sunday, Manager Charles Garfield of the Orpheum refuses to become downhearted.

"Business since the reopening has only been fair," says Mr. Garfield, "but I look forward to one of the best seasons this theatre has ever known. The Orpheum has closed contracts with the Select and Goldwyn film companies to show their stars at my theatre exclusively in this city. The open booking will consist of the biggest features obtainable for the coming season. No money will be spared, nor space spared in the newspapers, to put the attractions across and bring the public back to the habit of theatre-going they had before the Spanish influenza epidemic.

"I believe the present slump in business is due to the fact that the public during the closing was weaned away from the habit of attending the theatre the same as they may be weaned away from any other habit, but that they will come back to it again."

Among the attractions announced for the near future at the Orpheum are "For the Freedom of the East"; Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City"; Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires"; Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde"; Clara Kimball Young in "The Reason Why"; Robert Warwick in "The Mad Lovers"; Mary Pickford in "How Could You Jean"; Thomas Dixon's "The One Woman"; "Edith Cavill, the Woman the Germans Shot," and Norma Talmadge in "The Safety Curtain."

They Say in Chicago That—

MISS OLGA HEILSTED of the Marquette theatre, LaSalle, Ill., was in Chicago Thursday arranging her bookings.

THE exhibitors from down state visiting Chicago within the last few days were W. H. Cadoret, owner of the LaPetite theatre, Kankakee, Ill.; S. R. Kraemer, Idle Hour theatre, Geneva, Ill.; J. H. Clauer, Galena, Ill.; W. E. Simons, Avon, Ill., and C. E. Faul manager of the Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ill.

THE Majestic theatre, LaSalle, Ill., managed by Mrs. Taylor, has been burned to the ground.

EXHIBITORS in Indiana are very much disturbed over a report that is current to the effect that their theatres are very apt to be closed again on account of the influenza. This, contrary to the expectations of all being able to open throughout the state by the 18th.

MORRIS FLECKELS, he of the Universal fame, New York office, has been in Chicago for the past few days on his way West. He is expected back by his many friends within ten days or two weeks.

ON Monday, November 18, the entire State of Illinois, including the extreme Southern portion, had the influenza ban lifted. The Southern part of Illinois had been closed four weeks owing to the severity of the epidemic.

AARON J. JONES is in New York City on business and expects to be gone a week. Rumor has it that important developments will show up when the gentleman returns to Chicago.

THE CENTRAL FILM COMPANY has just closed a deal for the State of Illinois for "The Kaiser's Finish," a timely production. Harry Weiss of this exchange, leaves Monday, the 18th, for a week's trip to the larger cities of the state exploiting the picture.

REPORTS from the Rialto and McVicker's theatres which are showing Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," are that capacity business is the rule both day and night.

ANDREW KARZAS of the Woodlawn theatre, Chicago, and one of the most popular exhibitors in Chicago, has just recovered from a serious illness.

MANAGER ROBINSON of the Apollo theatre, Peoria, Ill., is spending several days in Chicago visiting old friends.

J. COOPER of the Twentieth Century theatre, on West Twelfth street, has it all figured out that during the recent "flu" epidemic half a dozen exchange men and salesmen died, yet not one exhibitor was a victim—what's the answer?

CHARLIE PYLE, general sales manager for the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, has left for a business trip to New York City and the East.

NEL C. BISHOP, formerly manager of the Bishop theatre, is now located at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, and reported on a recent visit to his many Chicago friends that he had gained twenty-five pounds since last May.

HARRY WEISS is in the market for a limousine, so when it comes to selling Mary Pickfords this winter he won't have to travel in an open car. Mr. Weiss states Monday was a great day. He celebrated twice, once for the Armistice news and once for the Mary Pickford News. The Central Film Company will handle the State of Illinois on Mary Pickford productions.

I. L. LESSERMAN, manager of the Chicago office of the Universal Exchange, says that their bookings are in splendid shape, and picking up daily.

J. C. BENNETT, manager of the Princess theatre, Whiting, Ind., reports that business in his little city is exceptionally good, with every indication for a big season.

HARRY ASCHER of Ascher Bros., has gone to the Mercy Hospital to be operated on for appendicitis. Mr. Ascher says that if there is any meanness in him he expects it will all be cut out. His friends all figure that all the surgeons will find will be a great big bunch of good nature.

IKE VAN RUNKLE, genial manager of the Goldwyn Chicago office, has a smile that reaches a mile, reason for which is big bookings on "Thirty a Week."

WILLIAM SCHRIEBER has been discharged from the Quartermaster's Department, and is back in his old position as sales manager for the Goldwyn Chicago office.

SIDNEY SMITH, formerly manager of the Kedzie Annex, has joined the Heney forces, and is now located at the Madison Square theatre.

News and Gossip of Springfield Thatrees

BUSINESS opened up brisk at the theatres in Springfield, Ill., Friday, November 8. The Lyric and Gaiety played to big crowds, and so did the Princess, Royal and Savoy. The management of the Vaudette, Capitol and Amuse report that there was no great crush at their houses, but that everything was entirely satisfactory.

FRANK SANDS, formerly manager at the Vaudette, but now an Assistant Engineer in the Coast Defense at Boston, Mass., came home on a furlough November 4. The same day he married Miss Madeline Holzworth, who was for years cashier at the Lyric theatre.

THE GAIETY opened the new order of things with Jewel's "The Talk of the Town," which stars Dorothy Phillips. This picture had been booked when the "flu" hit the town, and Manager Thornton was fortunate in being able to secure it as his opening attraction. Miss Phillips has not appeared at the Gaiety before, so she was at a disadvantage. But in spite of this business was entirely satisfactory on Friday and Saturday, November 8 and 9.

MANAGER W. D. CAVE, of the Chatterton, announces that "Hearts of the World" will not be brought here now until January. This is the third time the picture has been postponed, though it has played here before, staying a whole week the latter part of August.

MAE MURRAY in "Modern Love" was at the Vaudette on Friday and Saturday, November 8 and 9.

THE LYRIC got off on the right foot with George Walsh in "On the Jump." It is doubtful if there has even been a play shown at the Lyric that aroused the applause that this one did. The youngsters—the star being very popular here—whooped things up in great style at everything George did, and went out tickled to pieces at the show. Bobbie Vernon and Dorothy Dane in "Some Cave Man," a good Christie comedy, was also on the bill, which ran for three days, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, November 8, 9 and 10.

THE PRINCESS could not have selected a better picture to open with than Bessie Barriscale in "The Heart of Rachael." Miss Bessie is well liked here, and film fans were hungry for something good, which they found by visiting the Princess on Friday and Saturday, November 8 and 9.

THE ROYAL opened with Mildred Harris in "The Price of a Good Time," The Savoy with Harry Carey in "Three Mounted Men," the Capitol with Roy Stewart in "The Fly God," the Amuse-U with Jack Richardson in "Man Above the Law."

COMMUNITY singing was held in the motion picture theatres as a stimulus to the War Work Campaign, under the auspices of the United States Four Minute Men's Committee.

MANAGER RIORDAN, of the Majestic, says that Sunday, November 10, was the biggest day the theatre ever had, from a box office statement. The Majestic is using Gaumont Weekly, The Official Allied War Review and "A Fight for Millions," Vitagraph serial, and is now showing the third episode of the chapter play.

ENRICA CARUSO in "My Cousin" did not draw so well at the Gaiety on Sunday, November 10. The picture pleased those who saw it. "His Wifes' Friend," a Sennett comedy, was also on the bill. Will Rogers came in for three days, November 14, 15 and 16, in "Laughing Bill Hyde."

BILLIE BURKE did well at the Vaudette the first two days of her stay in "The Make Believe Wife." Miss Burke packed the theatre both days. "Fatty" Arbuckle in "Fatty, the Dodger," and a Screen Telegram were also on the bill.

MONDAY, November 11, was one of the biggest days of the year for the motion picture theatres. Springfield went stark mad at the peace declaration, and celebrated from midnight of Sunday till long after daybreak on Tuesday. After the parading and noisemaking was over—or rather as folks sought rest from it—they flocked into the theatres, with the result that the box offices all showed a wonderful amount of coin when counted up.

NEWS from the outlying houses—Pekin, Empress, Palace and North End Circle—conveys the cheering information that business was never better, even when things were going good.

WHEN Private Harold Peat came to the Gaiety on Sunday, November 17, in "Private Peat," he had as his leading woman an actress well known locally. Miriam Fouche lived in Petersburg for many years, a small city a few miles from Springfield.

GUS KERASOTES "mopped up" for three days with "Over the Top," Guy Empey-Vitagraph production. Gus hit the thing just right, having the play here on "Liberty Day," and the big crowds went flocking in to see our boys go "over the top."

MANAGER MAISEL did nicely with Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million," a Goldwyn picture. Some of the good things coming to the Capitol soon include "Nine-Tenths of the Law," "The Crucible of Life," "Marriage," and "Out of the Night."

THE PRINCESS had three good days with Catherine Calvert in "Out of the Night" on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, November 10, 11 and 12. "The Struggle Everlasting," featuring Milton Sills and Florence Reed, succeeded "Out of the Night" for two days. Other plays soon to be seen at the Princess are "Playthings," "The Vigilantes" and "Riders of the Purple Sage."

BEN ROVIN started in to clean up with the opening day and has been doing well each day since. Ben runs Triangle, Metro, Fox and Vitagraph pictures—some assortment—and plays only the pick of them all.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN in "Shoulder Arms" comes to the Gaiety and Majestic theatre on December 8 for four days.

Princess in Dubuque Makes Up for Lost Time

ACCORDING to all reports from Dubuque, Iowa, the Princess theatre in that progressive Iowa town is making up for time lost during the epidemic ban. Patrons of the Princess are said to be getting the best pictures available.

On Wednesday and Thursday, November 6 and 7, Theda Bara was presented in "Under the Yoke." The Princess had a fairly good crowd during the two days of the picture's run. On Friday and Saturday Manager Billos put on "The Hired Man," with that Paramount star, Charles Ray. This young player has been a favorite with Dubuquers ever since his characterization of the boy in "The Coward." From all reports, box office and personal, Princess patrons thought that "The Hired Man," was one of his best plays.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

BESSIE BARRISCALE was starred at the Grand in Dubuque, Ia., on Monday and Tuesday, November 11 and 12, in "Rose of Paradise." Miss Barriscale is a good drawing card, having become popular here when she played in Triangle releases.

THE Dreamland presented "The Hypocrites," with Elizabeth Risdon, on Tuesday, November 12. This picture drew the usual Tuesday crowd.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG was shown at the Family theatre on Tuesday, November 12, in "Magda." Miss Young is becoming very well known at this theatre and her pictures always attract good houses. Manager Yount says that his patrons considered "Magda" one of her most interesting plays.

THE Grand and Majestic theatres turned over their places to the United War Drive Committee Saturday evening. The speakers were at the Grand at 7:30 to 8:30, and at the Majestic from 9:15 to 10:00.

MARGUERITE CLARK is coming to the Princess in "Rich Man, Poor Man," on November 28 and 29.

J. E. BOYLE, of the Dreamland, continues to lead with first run pictures. On Wednesday, November 13, he put on a picture just released, "Her Price," with Virginia Pearson.

THE Dreamland has a service flag withone star, and everyone connected with the theatre is mighty proud of that one star, for it represents Private Bud Hagner, who has not only seen service in France, but has been wounded. Before joining the army Private Hagner was machine operator at the Dreamland.

What Detroit Is Doing

TWO First National attractions, Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" and "Italy's Flaming Front," have been selected by Glenn Cross, of Lipp & Cross, to open the new Regent theatre in Battle Creek when it opens on November 27. Mr. Cross engaged both pictures for four days. Lipp & Cross also control the Garden, Strand and Rex theatres in Battle Creek.

THE Lyric theatre at Port Austin, Mich., has been leased by E. P. Learned.

H. K. MOSS is the new manager of the Triangle exchange in Detroit, succeeding Dave Prince, who joined the ambulance corps of the Red Cross. Mr. Moss came to Detroit from Chicago, where he was with the Triangle exchange.

A COMBINED bill board and newspaper campaign is being made in Michigan by the Universal company to put over the new Eddie Polo serial, "The Lure of the Circus."

A DEAL has been closed whereby the Detroit Free Press Film Edition will be combined with the Gaumont News and the Gaumont pictorial. The same local pictures will each accompany the Gaumont films, first runs going to the Broadway Strand and Regent theatres in Detroit. More than 100 theatres in Detroit and the state are now playing this combination.

THE George Kleine exchange in Detroit has been moved into the General Film Co.'s offices.. A. J. Reed remains in charge of the Kleine bookings.

IN the death of Charles J. Nevison, acting manager of the Del-The theatre, Detroit, lost one of its most progressive managers. Mr. Nevison took charge of the Del-The for Fred De Lodder about 18 months ago and through his policy made it most successful. He was responsible for many scenic and other effects with which he staged his big pictures. His death came a few hours after an operation for goiter at the Homeopathic Hospital in Ann Arbor. Burial took place in his old home at Dundee, Mich.

THE Detroit Universal exchange is now in charge of Paul Bush, who has made a number of changes in the appearance of the office. Bert Mooney and Herbert Fauser have been added to the sales staff.

GEORGE W. WEEKS, assistant manager for Paramount-Artcrart, has been transferred to St. Louis. G. Knox Haddow succeeds him as assistant manager, while Elmer Brient, former publicity manager, becomes city salesman.

EDGAR GARSON has resigned as house manager of the Broadway Strand in Detroit, to handle "The Battle of Vimy Ridge," a picture made of a local spectacle staged by and for the Michigan State Troops. The film will be exhibited throughout the state for the benefit of the various companies. George Cusick succeeded him as house manager. Phil Gleichman, of course, remains as managing director. Mr. Gleichman is one of the owners of the theatre, the other being Harry I. Garson.

What Racine Is Doing

ALL THEATRES in Racine opened their doors to the public November 4, Monday. People crowded the houses day and night, the first week after the opening. During the enforced closing on account of the influenza epidemic, the managers of Racine movie houses took the advantage of the opportunity afforded them to renovate and redecorate their theatres. Each place is now a beauty spot of unusual attractiveness. The Rialto being new, needed no beautifying and will open as usual with the same orchestra augmented by Miss Florence Bettray.

THE PALACE, not to be outdone by its sister house, the Rialto, has cast off its old attire, and now appears in an entirely new dress. The lobby has been done over in Caenstone effect, above which tiffany panels lend their shading. The verdigris effect of the stuccoed entrance in which tiny lights are artistically distributed is particularly attractive. Along the sides of the lobby are latticed windows filled with geraniums, and birchwood flower boxes adorn the top of the door casings.

THE REX THEATRE, under its new management, Norman and Blumberg, has been remodeled and refurnished in a manner befitting its growing popularity. The Rex is a household name among its patrons, and the managers have overlooked nothing which will add to their comfort and convenience.

LAST week the Bijou reopened to the public, one of the most beautiful theatres in the State of Wisconsin. The handsome marble entrance to the Bijou is in keeping with the improvements which mark the walk along the lobby to the main auditorium. Manager McKivett has conducted the theatre for seven years, and each year sees some added feature of loveliness, but the latest surpasses all the others. The six-piece orchestra under the direction of E. C. Sullivan, is one of the best musical organizations in the city.

Interesting Items of Elgin

MOTION PICTURES will soon be an institution at the Elgin high school. A picture machine, purchased by the last year's graduating class as memorial to the school, has arrived and is being adjusted in expectation of first performances in early December.

MANAGER R. W. CROCKER, of the Star theatre, recently joined the new United Pictures theatre circuit, and expects soon to show the Kitty Gordon-Florence Reed productions here.

ALL four Elgin theatres underwent thorough renovation, scrubbing, fumigation, redecoration and general house-cleaning during the closing, opening clean and attractive.

WILLIAM RUSSELL, in "Hobbs in a Hurry" was shown at the Star on Wednesday and Thursday, November 13 and 14. The show was a riot of laugh from beginning to end and appeared to please the crowds immensely.

GLADYS BROCKWELL in "The Bird of Play" pleased Star patrons Monday, November 11. "Hindoos," an Oriental comedy, was shown with it.

THE Fox animal comedy pictures are making a hit at the Star where they are part of the "small boy" program combination every Friday evening. "A Tight Squeeze" was on the bill for November 15. With it were shown Fatty Arbuckle in "The Broadway Stars," and a chapter in "The Fight for Millions."

GLADYS LESLIE in "The Soap Girl" was liked immensely by Star patrons. It was shown there on Tuesday, November 12. With it was shown the comedy, "Stenographer Troubles."

EARLE WILLIAMS in "The Diplomatic Mission" led the bill at the Star on Saturday, November 16. Peggy Hyland in "Are Marriages Made?" was there the next day and on Monday came Mary Miles Minter in "Rosemary Climbs the Heights."

JACK PICKFORD in "His Majesty, Bunker Bean" offered first refreshment to movie-starved Elgin at the Grand, on the date of reopening after the "flu" closing, Monday, November 4. The picture played matinee and night for two days to good houses and to general favor. The picture made the Tuesday bill also.

ENID BENNETT in "The Biggest Show on Earth" pleased patrons of the Grand on Wednesday and Thursday, November 6 and 7. William S. Hart in "Selfish Yates" completed the week, Friday and Saturday.

THE week of November 10, following the reopening, the Grand played to big crowds, eager for pictures after deprivation. In the first two days Wallace Reid in "The House of Silence" made big hit.

WEDNESDAY and Thursday the popularity of the crowd divided itself on the Lina Cavalieri picture, "Love's Conquest," the play a little too heavy for the average picture fan.

FRIDAY and Saturday Charles Ray in "His Own Home Town" was booked and the great following anticipated that customarily crowds the Grand when Charlie comes to town.

Latest Notes of Lansing

DURING the "flu" ban in Michigan when theatres remained dark, Manager E. C. Jarvis of the Orpheum and Garden theatres, directed repairs and a general overhauling of his theatres. A new tile floor has been laid in the lobby of the Orpheum and the walls and ceiling re-decorated. A white finish is paneled with mahogany wreath strips. Lights in the ceiling make it one of the best lighted lobbies in the city. The office was re-decorated and several loads of billings and junk removed from the work room.

"AMERICA'S ANSWER," the second of the official war films released by the committee on public information through the Michigan War Preparedness Board, had been booked by Claude Cady, manager of the Colonial theatre for the day the authentic report of peace was heralded by the newspapers. The theatre was packed to the limit every show. A special orchestra and several vocal numbers were added musical attractions during the day. The fact that several Lansing men were recognized in the film made it doubly popular. Everybody was there looking for "their boy."

"THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS," a serial in eighteen episodes, featuring Eddie Polo, will be shown at the Orpheum theatre soon. The film had been booked for showing starting December 4, but the "flu" ban in the state so jumbled bookings that it is expected the first episode can not be presented before the middle of the month.

IVAN D. MARVIN, who is staging a style show through Michigan, showed his models at the Colonial theatre for the first time last Wednesday, November 13. Several motion picture houses in the state are packing their houses the matinee of the "style show."

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "He Comes Up Smiling," with the Allied War Review and Burton Holmes' Travel pictures formed the bill at the Colonial theatre for the week end, just passed (Nov. 16-17). William S. Hart in "Riddle Gawn," and Enid Bennett in "The Biggest Show on Earth" are attractions this week. Enid Bennett is making hundreds of friends in Lansing and one of her pictures plays to good houses.

News of Fond du Lac Theatres

THE Fond du Lac picture houses closed all day and all evening Monday, November 11, while the entire community celebrated the ending of the war. The celebration began early in the morning and the managers of the moving picture houses were among the first to announce that they would close in honor of the event.

THE managers of the picture houses in Fond du Lac, who anticipated a strong business following the lifting of the health ban, have been clearly disappointed. Notwithstanding the fact that the weather has been ideal the business is reported below normal for this season of the year. This is possibly due in part to the fact that public attention has been riveted on the big events transpiring "over there." With the advent of peace and the readjustment that is sure to follow there is a growing hope that the picture fans will again wend their way screenward.

"TO HELL WITH THE KAISER" could't have possibly hit on a better time for Fond du Lac. It reached the Henry Boyle just between the two celebrations—the one which was pronounced by some premature and the grand finale, the following Monday. It caught the crowd. "To Hell With the Kaiser" was popular with the masses.

OWING to the fact that Monday, November 11, was the world's biggest holiday and that it took two days to recover from it the ever popular Billie Burke failed to draw the customary big houses at the Orpheum Tuesday and Wednesday, November 12 and 13.

MANAGER Ainsworth is leaving nothing undone that may contribute good publicity for "Over the Top" with Guy Empey November 25, 26 and 27. Large newspaper space is being supplemented with extensive billboard work in addition to which all the book stores are making special window displays of the book. The lobby has been converted into a series of trenches.

IT TAKES William E. "Billy" Ainsworth to make hay in cloudy weather as well as when the sun shines. When the health ban went on a little time ago did he droop his sails and worry? Not he. "Billy" had just been waiting for this opportunity and the "flu" afforded it. He had been wanting to install an "Echo" to the splendid pipe organ he put in last summer but the extensive carpenter work was impossible when there were shows every day. As a result he got right busy and when the ban came off and the first audience reached the Orpheum it was treated to a real surprise in an Echo organ in full working order.

Gathered In Green Bay

CHARLIE CHAPLIN packed the house at the Orpheum for the first two days of his run in his latest creation, "Shoulder Arms," which opened Thursday, November 14. The film made a bigger hit than any comedy offering that has been shown here.

"THE CITY OF DIM FACES," with Sessue Hayakawa, the Jap star, was shown November 5-6 at the Orpheum. It is a Paramount picture. A Chester comedy was given in the same bill.

MAE ALLISON was seen at the Colonial theatre in "The Winning of Beatrice," a Metro, November 10.

"A SOUL FOR SALE," with Dorothy Phillips starring, was presented November 13-14 at the Royal theatre. It is a Jewel. The patrons of the house were pleased with the picture and the work of the actress.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA was presented in "His Birth Right," the initial First National release in which he appears at the Colonial theatre, November 11-12.

"MADAM SPHINX," a Triangle film, was screened November 11 at the Royal theatre. Alma Rubens played in the leading role.

"THE LAST REBEL," a Triangle film, was shown November 11 at the Royal theatre. Belle Bennett was in the lead.

LOUISE GLAUM proved popular with audiences at the Colonial theatre November 13-14 when she played in "A Law Unto Herself," a Paralta film. Smiling Bill Parsons played in "Billy Settles Down" in the same bill.

"QUICK TRIGGERS," with Neal Hart starring, was shown November 10 at the Royal theatre. It is a Triangle production.

REX BEACH was seen for the first time in pictures when he appeared in the Goldwyn production, "Laughing Billy Hyde," at the Colonial theatre November 15-16.

"ITALY'S FLAMING FRONT," an official picture of fighting in Italy, was shown at the Grand theatre November 11-12-13.

Film Flashes from Flint

DURING the recent closing in Flint, Mich., on account of the influenza epidemic, Manager Charles Garfield of the Orpheum theatre had his playhouse thoroughly renovated and given a new stage setting. He has also had installed two new Motiograph De Luxe projectors and the front of the house is illuminated by one of the finest electric signs in Michigan, with transparent letters for stars and titles.

JUST how well Charles Chaplin is thought of as a drawing card is indicated by the fact that the Palace which ordinarily plays five acts of vaudeville and two reels of pictures will divert from its policy December 15, 16 and 17 and feature the comedian's "Shoulder Arms."

"HE COMES UP SMILING" was shown at the Garden theatre November 12, 13 and 14. The Fairbanks picture was a scream and everyone who saw it appeared to enjoy it. "Better than average, but not up to the usual Fairbanks business," was the verdict of Manager C. Edgar Momand. The falling off in business which was noticeable all during the week of November 11 Mr. Momand attributed to the scare created by the influenza epidemic.

"THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN," opened at the Garden theatre Sunday, November 17, indications on the opening day pointing to a very satisfactory business. Manager Momand declared that a wonderful business was expected in view of the fact that when "Tarzan of the Apes" was shown it eclipsed the attendance records of all popular priced pictures ever shown at the Garden.

THREE features announced for an early showing at the Garden theatre are "The Hun Within" and "The Great Love," the two big Griffith pictures, and "Vive La France," with Dorothy Dalton, which will be the Thanksgiving week feature.

A NOVELTY was introduced by Manager Lester Matt, of the Strand theatre, November 18, when he gave a "Style Show" in connection with his regular picture program. Gowns, furs and millinery from local stores were worn by professional models. The picture showing at the Strand for the four days beginning Monday, November 17, was "The Prussian Cur," and in addition there was a special musical program by Messrs. Qualkers and Noeker, the "Majestic Duo," a regular Strand feature, and by the Strand orchestra under direction of Prof. A. J. Abbenante.

Exhibitors of Dubuque Find Business Satisfactory

MOTION picture exhibitors of Dubuque, Iowa, are said to be well satisfied with the attendance at their theatres, now that the quarantine has been lifted. The Princess especially has fine crowds. They started out with a rush on November 3, the opening day, and have been doing excellent business ever since. It is true that they are showing an extra fine assortment of pictures, but even considering this, they have unusually good crowds.

The Grand has had average to big houses ever since its opening day. The same is true of the Family and the Liberty. The Dreamland is doing a splendid Sunday business, with average crowds the balance of the week, with the exception of Tuesday, which seems to be the official week day for attending the pictures. No matter what picture is shown on Tuesday, Manager Boyle is always sure to have big houses.

From the present outlook the motion picture industry in Dubuque this winter is going to be extremely successful. Every one of the theatres have planned good programs, and from November on the business is sure to boom.

Optimism Prevails in Elgin Theatres

WITH the big war bogey banished in the reign of peace, Elgin moving picture managers wear the wide smile of hope once again. That it will be broadened when the persistent and elusive "flu" germ is driven back from whence it came, is opinion to be gathered from reports of theatre men in this mid-November.

Elgin "flu" situation was quite exceptional to that of any other part of the country, so far as can be learned here. There was practically no epidemic, although some six hundred cases, the majority of them light cases or hard colds, were reported in the month of closing to the city health department. No single employe of the four theatres of the town was on the sick list at any time.

Theatres were opened on Monday, November 4, when state edict lifted the ban in Kane county along with nineteen other northern counties of the state. Patronage began to return slowly.

Madison News Condensed

ALL records for attendance in the Madison, Wis., theatres were knocked skyward on Peace Day. At no time during the day were the theatres capable of holding the immense crowds that applied for admission. The Strand with a sitting capacity of 1,500 was packed at the first evening show with fully 1,000 crowded into the spacious lobby of the new theatre.

SEVEN film exchange men from Metro, Vitagraph, Pathe, Select, Universal, Fox and Jewel were in Madison during last Sunday. All of the men report that the "flu" epidemic in the state is practically over.

ONLY Monticello and New Glarus are still under the ban and in all likelihood these will be opened during the coming week. There has not been any depression in business as far as can be ascertained by the film men. In fact they report that a number of new theatres are opening in the smaller towns. Manager Rodham of Darlington, Wis., has recently opened his New Strand, showing Metro, Vitagraph and Pathe. There is also a new photoplay house in Sun Prairie.

NEWS of a number of radical changes being made in producing companies has come to the attention of local managers, including Sherry to General, Mutual to Affiliated, Triangle and Hodkinson to Pathe. The majority of these have not been confirmed, however.

MR. STIMSON, for several months Mutual salesman for this central district, has been promoted to district manager of the American. He has 12 exchanges under his supervision from Dallas, Tex., to Chicago and Milwaukee. Local men feel that Mr. Stimson's promotion was well deserved.

MANAGER A. P. Desormeaux of the New Strand had an interesting war exhibition during the time he showed "America's Answer," the second of the pictures issued by the Committee on Public Information. Among the relics exhibited were rifles, shells, gas masks, helmets and many implements of warfare. There was a German gun of recent date which was constructed with soft wood for the stock. A Turkish bolo knife, evidently manufactured in America in 1907, was among the exhibits. A German gas mask constructed without an ounce of rubber in it was displayed. A G. A. R. veteran guarded the exhibit that caused a number of excellent comments. The picture was a big drawing card.

THE Fuller Opera House program for the week of November 17 includes Douglas Fairbanks in "Bound in Morocco," "Just for Tonight," and "To Him That Hath," starring Montagu Love.

THE GRAND was privileged in being able to secure a prerelease date on "The Yellow Dog" which was shown for one Sunday. Large crowds saw this picture by Dodge and the children especially were pleased. Manager McWilliams has instituted an "Iron Test" contest to stimulate interest in the serial by that name. One small child turned in over 150 words that may be derived from the letters of the title. A 90 day pass good for two was the reward.

DURING the coming week the New Strand will play John Barrymore in "On the Quiet," Ethel Clayton in "The Girl Who Came Back," and "The Bluebird."

THE GRAND has booked Frank Keenan in "The Bells" for Thanksgiving, "Crashing Through to Berlin" and Harold Lockwood in "Pals First."

Mayor-Elect of Detroit Creates Ruffle in Film Circles

AFTER one of the hottest political fights Detroit has ever witnessed, James Couzens was elected Mayor and a new regime will come into being on January 1. Motion picture theatre proprietors were brought into the battle when one of the candidates carried a page advertisement in a local film trade paper. At the same time rumors were circulated that Couzens was opposed to the theatres and would institute "Blue Sunday" laws if elected.

Since his election the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, affiliated with the Board of Commerce, has sent him a letter congratulating him on his election and assuring him of full co-operation in the distribution and exhibiting of clean pictures. The board also has sent a letter to Dr. James W. Inches, city health officer, thanking him for his efforts in securing the reopening of the theatres at the earliest possible moment.

Green Bay Attendance Comes Back Gradually

ATTENDANCE at Green Bay, Wis., motion picture houses has gradually increased since the reopening of houses November 4, when the influenza ban was lifted by the health department. During the first week the attendance was short of normal figures because, it is presumed, many people preferred not to take a chance of contracting influenza by getting into a crowd. The alarm has worn off however in the last few days, and the audiences have been up to the size of those which patronized the amusement places before the influenza broke out here.

Classy programs are being presented by the motion picture houses, and the proprietors and managers anticipate a steadily increasing patronage as colder weather sets in. Warm, delightful evenings have probably been a factor in keeping the theatre attendance down in the last two weeks.

Horsley Laboratories Move to New Building

THE William Horsley Film Laboratories in Los Angeles are now housed in their new home, a wholly fire-proof building erected on the studio site owned by Mr. Horsley at 6060 Sunset Boulevard. This improvement is perhaps the most notable construction work of any firm of the West Coast Film industry of the year.

The new plant is a combination of all the labor saving devices William Horsley has perfected himself during ten or twelve years' connection with the film industry, and the successful machinery and devices perfected by other manufacturers. The building is 96 x 50 feet, and a portion of it is two stories. Equipment includes five Bell & Howell Perforating machines, six William Horsley printers and three Duplex printers, two Powers 6 B projecting machines, two Horsley polishing machines, Westinghouse motor generator sets, motors and other lighting equipment together with other minor devices.

The laboratory building contains two projection rooms, one where a picture 3 x 4 feet is shown for the film editor, this size being desirable as it does not cause the eye to travel, and therefore is far more convenient. The other projection room is more of a theatre, containing as it does, sixteen comfortable wicker chairs in four rows, each row elevated above the one in front of it.

The laboratory has several other conveniences for independent producing companies. There is a dark room where cameramen may refill their magazines, cutting rooms for directors to personally supervise the editing of their films, and a photograph studio where still pictures may be made. This has dark rooms, skylights and other lighting effects as well as desirable backgrounds and suitable furniture.

The entire plant has been made as nearly dust proof as possible, and is supplied with an adequate ventilating system which cleans all the air passing into the building. There are two developing rooms so that negative and positive stock passes through the plant by separate routes. The drying room has eight drums each of two thousand feet capacity. Motors and printing machines are housed outside the printing room, making possible the repair of one without discontinuing work of the other. The same convenience has been applied to the perforating machine motors. The laboratory has mammoth vaults for the storage of film which is fitted with a time lock door formerly used by a Los Angeles bank.

The William Horsley new laboratory is perhaps the most convenient of any in the west, and the equipment is such that the best and most prompt service may be given Mr. Horsley's patrons.

All Star in Los Angeles Resumes Business

LOUIS HYMAN, manager of the All Star Los Angeles exchange, has re-opened the office following a close of four weeks. Mr. Hyman spent the time the exchange was closed at San Francisco with Sol Lesser and others of the All Star organization.

Upon Mr. Hyman's return he announced several important bookings. "The Struggle Everlasting" is to be shown at the Alhambra theatre, and this will probably be followed by the subject titled "Under Four Flags." He also stated arrangements had been made for the showing of D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" at the Mason Opera House, Los Angeles, for an indefinite engagement at prices ranging from twenty-five cents to one dollar. This film was shown for sixteen consecutive weeks at the 3,000 seat Clune Auditorium early this year. The Mason is the home of the K. & E. attractions, and this is the second time in the history of the house that Manager Will Wyatt has booked a picture. The Mason has a seating capacity of sixteen hundred.

Sam W. B. Cohn Leaves Spokane for Army

SAM W. B. COHN, manager of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, has resigned his position and has left for Little Rock, Ark., to enter the central training camp at Camp Pike for infantry officers. Mr. Cohn made his application in person at Pullman three months ago and passed the medical examination at Fort Wright (Spokane) at that time. Subsequently his application was held up because of eye trouble. He was put in class 4A by the third district board and was notified to appear for induction into the Camp Pike officers' training camp. He took the medical examination again and was ordered to report at Camp Pike for duty November 11.

Mr. Cohn came from Nome, Alaska, seven years ago to take over the management of the Spokane theatre. No successor has been named by the Liberty Amusement Company. While the influenza quarantine is on, G. N. Crawford, manager of the Hutton interests in Spokane, will assume the duties of manager. Mr. Cohn had the Liberty on a substantial paying basis when the quarantine closed it. He had contracted for pictures for several months ahead, which will be available as soon as the theatre can be opened. The Liberty has just closed the most successful year in its history, with receipts 25 per cent higher than formerly and expenses 20 per cent less. Mr. Cohn is a member of the Spokane Amateur Athletic Club, the Elks and the advisory board of the Motion Picture News, Inc., New York.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

MEMBERS of Los Angeles "film row" have been supplied with ducks and fish sufficient to keep the family larders stocked for several days. At least this is the claim made by Ben Fish, Goldwyn's genial manager, who, with his brother, Bernard Fish, returned Friday, November 8, from a trip to Big Bear Lake. Gunning and fishing were at their best, according to the returned sportsmen, but there was one big surprise sprung on the party. Upon the return trip on a mountain trail known as Mill Creek road the party ran into six inches of snow, which delayed them several hours, as the snow made bad going for the machine.

STEPS have been taken to at least partly relieve the hardship sustained by the motion picture exhibitors of Los Angeles. Glenn Harper, secretary of the Theatre Owners' Association, is circulating a petition among the property owners controlling motion picture theatre property asking them to rebate the rental during the "flu" ban. The project has met with a prompt response on the part of about 50 per cent of the property owners, who have agreed to rebate the rent during the period of the close-down. About 25 per cent of the owners will rebate 50 per cent of the rent for the stated period. The remaining 25 per cent have declined to take any action up to the present, but there is still hope that they will make some concession. As soon as the list has been completed the names of the property owners who have come to the assistance of the hard-hit exhibitors will be published.

A. R. PATTEN, manager for the Mutual Exchange, Los Angeles, has furnished a number of reels of film for the benefit of the enlisted men at North Island and the Arcadia Balloon School. All of the latter performances have been open air events and as the men cannot leave the camps, the open air shows furnish them with amusement during the long fall evenings.

GUY GUNDERSON, manager for George Kleine, began moving from the former offices in the Knickerbocker building, Los Angeles, on Monday, November 11, to his new quarters with the General Film Company, 738 South Olive street. The Kleine office opened for business in its new home on Monday, November 18.

"BEHIND THE LINES," a new George Kleine production, will be given its preliminary presentation in Los Angeles as soon as the "flu" ban has been lifted. It is understood that a tentative booking has been arranged for the picture, which is an Italian war story.

E. O'NEILL, of the William Fox forces, spent Saturday and Sunday in San Bernardino in the interest of the exploitation of "Salome."

E. D. Tate, manager for Pathe, is expecting daily the arrival of "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys. Arrangements have been made to give the picture its initial showing in Los Angeles on December 1, but the booking details have not as yet been definitely settled.

GERALDINE FARRAR in "The Turn of the Wheel" has been booked for re-opening week at Quinn's Rialto by Ben Fish, manager for Goldwyn.

R. W. McKINNEY of the World Film sales forces has bought a new automobile and has arranged to take all the people of the "World" for a ride.

LOS ANGELES exhibitors will receive invitations for a private viewing of the newest Vitagraph production, "The Comman Cause," as soon as the influenza ban is lifted. W. H. Hepburn, manager of the Los Angeles exchange, expects the film to arrive from New York almost daily. The picture tells a modern story and is a J. Stuart Blackton production. Herbert Rawlinson, Silva Breamer and other well known players are included in the cast.

JOSEPH MERRICK, West Coast representative for the Mutual Film Corporation, has been spending his enforced vacation in Los Angeles, but will probably leave in a few days for Arizona and New Mexico.

WALTER RAND, West Coast representative for the General Film Company, who has been in Denver, Col., is expected in Los Angeles during the week of November 11, to complete plans for the fall work and prepare for the demand to be made on the exchanges in his territory after the lifting of the ban.

MANAGER DAVE BERSHON of the Universal Film Exchange is preparing for the preliminary showing of two big features as soon as the ban is lifted. They are "Borrowed Clothes," a Lois Weber production picturized from the novel "Orange Blossoms," and the "Yellow Dog," a story by Henry Irving Dodge, produced by Colin Campbell. Both are Jewel productions.

LONG BEACH, Cal., theatres opened for business Monday, November 11. Other seacoast theatres will probably open later in the week.

AFTER a slight attack of the Spanish influenza, A. R. Patten, manager of the Los Angeles Mutual Exchange, returned to his desk on Friday, November 8.

CARL RAY'S Garden theatre is the name selected for the former Miller's theatre, Main street near Ninth, Los Angeles. The Californian, the big Miller theatre, will be ready for opening shortly after the "flu" ban is lifted.

B. E. LOPER, manager for Select Pictures, expects the prints for the first of the Mitchell Lewis productions any day. There will be six pictures made by this star. The first will be "Code of the Yukon." Preliminary showings of the two other pictures will be arranged by Mr. Loper as soon as the theatres open. One is "The Midnight Patrol," a Thomas H. Ince's all-star production which has been secured by Select for release and the other is "The One Woman," starring Clara Williams, Herschel Mayell and Lawrence Butt. The story was written by Thomas Dixon.

"WHY AMERICA WILL WIN" with an all-star Fox cast, has been booked by the Kinema theatre. The date is undecided. The picture is really a story of the life of General Pershing.

THE Los Angeles Hippodrome has booked from T. E. Hancock, manager for the World Film, the big production, "The Road to France," for re-opening week. Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley co-star in this film.

"PALS FIRST," the next picture of the late Harold Lockwood to be released by Metro, will be the attraction at Clune's Broadway the second week of the re-opening. The booking has just been completed by A. B. Lamb, manager of the Metro Los Angeles exchange.

EDWIN CAREW, the Metro director who formerly handled the Lockwood productions, has arrived in Los Angeles. He will probably direct Viola Dana in her next picture. Henry Otto, who alternated in the direction of the Lockwood pictures with Mr. Carew, is expected to arrive in Los Angeles in a few days.

In and Out of Seattle

WHILE the Seattle theatres were closed practically six weeks on account of the "flu," the film men not only kept quiet during this period, as they thought they were helping to get rid of this disease, but they continued to help in war work of every nature. When the city authorities asked all places to close all day Saturday and to be open only between the hours of 10 a. m. and 3 p. m., the managers of Film Row complied with this order without complaint.

JACK RANTZ thought the weather was going to be a little cold up here this winter so he went to visit a while in Los Angeles, Cal. While there the "flu" visited him. After he became strong enough to return north, he did so in a hurry.

ALL the picture theatres in the state were not closed during the "flu." In fact a new one started up at Carbonado. The coal miner's union, in this famous coal mining town leased a hall, bought a Powers 6B from A. L. Johnson, Seattle, and have arranged to put on their own pictures.

FRED MERCY, of Yakima, one of the most prominent picture men in the eastern section of the state, paid a visit to his friends on "Film Row" just before the "flu" germ was captured.

MARK GOLDMAN, Northwest representative of the Billy West features, returned to Seattle from San Francisco where he went on business.

AT least one American soldier, who is "over there," has "taken unto himself a French wife." This soldier happens to be Al Rosenberg. Before Al left for France, he was connected with the De Luxe Film Co., of which his brother, Mike, is manager. Al went over with one of the special units that left Camp Lewis.

JACK LANNON, of the Greater Features Company, Seattle, and the Re-issue King of the Northwest, is certainly demonstrating the fact that he can do good business with the right kind of re-issues. He is showing that any comedy or features of a few years ago that were ahead of their time, take well with all concerned at the present time.

JACK LANNON, of the Greater Feature Co., started in business three years ago and he is certainly holding his own as his office force is a picked one that has been growing during these three years. Although he had a right during the "flu" ban in Seattle to discharge part, if not all of his help as the majority did, he did not do so because he needed them at this time as much as ever in his growing business.

H. G. BRUEN, formerly manager of the Iris, Mills City, Montana, has purchased the Majestic, Seattle, from Messrs. Castner and Johnson.

West Coast Colony Celebrates Peace Reports

THE coming of peace was heartily welcomed on Monday by every one of the West Coast film colony, and all studios that were not closed because of the four weeks' discontinuance of production program were locked up for this day.

The players of the Thomas H. Ince studios were the first to give a public parade. One hundred and fifty extra people, including a band and two ball teams, had been engaged for the day, and the entire studio force fell into line. Mr. Ince and directors occupied the first car, and following him came autos bearing Charles Ray and Dorothy Dalton and their respective casts. Art Director G. Harold Percival and his staff contributed many attractive features to the parade. A goat to be used in a ball game scene was labeled "we got the Kaiser's goat." The crown prince was taken along in a baby cab. A papier mache head of the Kaiser was carried on the end of a spear, while another head appeared between the jaws of a large dragon. Studio girls led the parade carrying flags of the Allies. All trucks and automobiles were gaily decorated with appropriate signs and paintings.

The celebration was two-fold to many of the film colony, for on Peace Day many motion picture men learned they would not be forced to entrain for training camps. Among those who were to leave during the week to answer the draft calls were Lou Cody, prominent leading man who has just completed an engagement with C. B. de Mille; Jack Glavey, former manager of the comedy department of the Fox studio; Harry Gribbon and John Grey late of Sennett studios; Jack Laver, former publisher of the Los Angeles magazine Picture Player; James Parrott of Rolin Company; Jay Pearce, assistant director at Vitagraph, and R. G. Camby, former publisher and editor of Photoplay Art, Los Angeles monthly magazine.

Denver Theatres Reopen on Celebration Day

DENVER theatres opened their doors on Monday morning, November 11, for the first time in six weeks and in the midst of the biggest and wildest street demonstration in the history of the city. For a time it seemed that the splendid programs arranged by the different houses would be screened to empty seats on account of the rival shows outside. Later on the fans found their way inside and the Curtis street houses enjoyed a good business, several being packed. The night shows only drew about a fifty per cent business. And a fifty per cent business both day and night was probably the average for the balance of the week.

The two-word bulletin, "Armistice signed," was received in Denver at 12:46 Monday morning, when the streets were practically deserted. The glad tidings were conveyed to a sleeping city by firing a bomb, shrieking siren whistles and the ringing of bells, and within twenty minutes fifty thousand people in automobiles were parading the down-town streets, while several thousand more marched on the sidewalks behind bands of music with Old Glory at their head.

Coast Exhibitors Improve Houses During Shutdown

THE ban on public gatherings made effective by the Board of Health and Los Angeles City Council, gave theatremen of the city an opportunity to make improvements at their respective houses, impossible otherwise, and when the theatres do reopen, the general public will be greatly surprised at the many changes that have been made for the convenience and pleasure of the patrons.

Shortly following the reopening of the other houses will come the grand opening of the New California theatre on Main street near Eighth, which promises to be one of the prettiest, most comfortable and attractive large houses in the west. The epidemic has not in any way affected the continuation of work on this house which has been in progress for almost a year.

The date for opening of the New California theatre has been set for the first Monday in December, and inasmuch as all materials and equipment for the house have been received in Los Angeles, there is little possibility that the opening will be delayed. This house will have many inovations, particularly in the seating arrangement and the stage effects. The most elaborate style of orchestral pipe organ made by the Robert-Morton factory of the American Photoplayer Company has been installed and this will be augmented by an orchestra of thirty pieces.

The installation of the new $50,000 Wurlitzer Hope-Jones cathedral pipe organ in Grauman's theatre is one of the major improvements announced by Sid Grauman. This organ which has been delayed six months on account of giving war necessities precedence, has been placed in position by a corps of experts sent from the factory and will be ready to give a musical treat to the patrons of the theatre as soon as the influenza ban has been lifted. The huge organ has been ordered for over a year and special permission had to be obtained from the government by the manufactures for its completion. Three freight cars were required to bring the many parts to Los Angeles. The instrument is very intricate in design and its many pipes range in size from thirty-two feet in height to a fraction of a foot. Jesse Crawford will preside at the console, which has been placed at the back centre of the circularly designed orchestra pit. There will be ample room afforded in the pit for a full symphony orchestra. Mr. Grauman is giving personal supervision to the complete renovation of the theatre, work on which is now nearing completion.

A surprise awaits the patrons of Tally's Broadway on reopening night. There has been a general rearrangement of the interior of the auditorium which will give it the appearance of a new house. All of the chairs have been changed and the entire theatre now has the comfortable upholstered chairs duplicates of those in the loge boxes. The stage settings have been renewed and entirely changed. The house has been newly decorated on the exterior and interior. This work has been complted under the supervision of T. L. Tally.

The entire color scheme of Clune's Broadway has been changed. The general decorative effect is now brown in various light tones which give a very pleasing atmosphere to the house. New carpets have been laid, new curtains put in place while the operating room has been rearranged and two new machines installed.

A thorough renovation is being made at the Kinema by Manager Emil Kehrlein. The color work of the auditorium and lobby is being retouched while the lighting arrangement is being changed to give some very charming effects.

Quinn's Rialto is receiving a general overhauling and cleaning-up. The woodwork and decorations are receiving retouches where needed and the hangings are being renewed.

About $3,500 is being expended by M. Gore in improvements to his chain of theatres including the Liberty, Grand, Lyceum, Regent, Optic and Casino. The theatres are being painted and generally renovated.

L. L. Baird of the College theatre is having the house redecorated while the Dreamland is being improved throughout by Pearce Ruppert and nearly all of the other theatre managers of Los Angeles have taken advantage of the close down to improve the appearance of their houses or make necessary repairs.

In and Around Denver

WHILE all fear of the influenza was banished for forty-eight hours at the beginning of the week, the fact remains that the epidemic and the fear of it still remains. While Denver theatres are open, probably another week or ten days must elapse before the exhibitors win back all of their former patronage.

THE situation outside of Denver is not very encouraging. About twenty towns tributary to Denver were opened November 1 to 11. The list follows: Wheatland, Wyo.; Sharon Springs, Kan.; Ogallala, Neb., Kimball, Chadron and Lakeside, Neb.; Oshkosh, Kans.; Rapid City, S. D.; Palisades and Chappelle, Neb.; Georgetown, Col.; Deming, N. M.; Julesburg, Vernon, Limon, Boulder and Montrose, Col.; Alamogordo and Clovis, N. M.; Goodland, Kans.; Dalton, Neb., and Riverton, Wyo.

THEATRES in 50 per cent of these towns were obliged to close again on account of the epidemic. An average of about 400 new cases are reported daily for the whole state, a decrease of about 100 a day.

THE trade has not escaped the ravages of the epidemic. Clyde Messenger, booker for Mutual, is very ill with the disease. Both Harold and Nathan Desky, owners of the Emerson theatre at Brush Colo., were both stricken and died a few days ago.

SEVERAL exhibitors from outside towns are visiting in Denver until such time as it is advisable to reopen for business. Among them are Glenn Goff of the Iris, at Monte Vista, and Ed. Calhoun, Star theatre, Scott's Bluff, Neb.

ROY E. CHURCHILL, salesman for Goldwyn, and his bride have shook the dust of Denver from their feet and located in Dallas, Tex., where Mr. Churchill has accepted a similar position at the Goldwyn exchange. Their departure is noted with much regret.

G. W. WHITNEY has accepted a road position with Metro, and Max Kravatz, until recently a Metro salesman, has gone over to the World road force.

MAURICE WOLF, manager for World at Salt Lake, brought his big smile with him to Denver in time for the big celebration and remained with us several days. Incidentally he invested in a handsome diamond ring which is now being worn by one of the prettiest girls in Denver. Max says its all fixed and the next time he is here he won't go back to the Mormon town alone.

H. BRADLEY FISH, manager for Goldwyn, is in Salt Lake and Butte on business.

JOHN MORPHET, traveling auditor for General, is visiting the local exchange.

THE GENERAL EXCHANGE has been remodeling to accommodate the George Kleine Service. Manager Schaeffer has already closed the Kleine headquarters on Eighteenth street and is moving in with General.

F. W. NORMAN has left on a trip for Goldwyn to scare the "floo" out of Nebraska, Wyoming and Montana.

E. P. BRIGGS, Denver representative of the American Film Company, has established Thursday of each week for private exhibitions of American products at the Pathe exchange for out-of-town and local trade. He has eight subjects on hand now released every alternate week.

TOM WICKHAM of Pathe, has left to visit exhibitors in Northern Colorado, and H. D. Woods, also of Pathe, is out on a trip covering Southern Colorado and New Mexico.

JAMES P. TAYLOR, representative of the Government Committee on Public Information, Division of films, is visiting local exchanges relative to the distribution of government pictures. He was formerly with the American theatre in Salt Lake and is well known in Denver territory.

'Frisco Reopening Follows Celebration

THE exchanges and theatres of San Francisco, according to late reports, laid all their plans to reopen November 23 at the latest.

For some time a committee of business men had been planning to reopend the theatres with a bang and general carnival celebration as soon as the Board of Health decided that it was safe to reopen. This committee was made up of Irving Ackerman of Ackerman & Harris, Hippodrome, chairman; Eugene Roth, California; Jack Partington, Imperial; Howard J. Sheehan, Rialto; Louis Greenfield of New Fillmore and New Mission; Selby Oppenheimer, concert impresario; Fred Healy, in charge of musical organizations, Sam Harris, representing vaudeville theatres; M. J. Cohen representing Film exchanges; and John Tate of Tate's restaurant and William Morrosin of Techau Tavern, representing the cafes. This committee believed that the public should be invited to come down town and that all sorts of amusements should be provided for them free of charge so that all should know that the "flu" has taken a left from the German's book and surrendered. The plan was well worked up and it was intended to "go to the mat" with the Board and try to have a date for reopening set and the cooperation of the city in the carnival idea.

This plan was wrecked by the armistice and the general celebration which followed, from 12:45 Monday morning until well past that hour on Tuesday morning. This 24-hour celebration has taken the wind out of the sails of those who proposed a carnival to celebrate the end of th "flu" scare.

Reopening With Butte Theatres

ATTENDANCE at Butte theatres since the "flu" ban was lifted has not been any above normal. This is due to a lurking fear on the part of many theatre-goers that it is best to wait a few days before again seeing "the movies" regardless of the hunger there may be for such entertainment.

MANAGER RALPH RUFFNER at the Rialto, did business well up to normal, which is heavy, from the first day to this date. On his opening bill he had the final episode of "The Hooded Terror" and of course, many of the patrons wanted to see the finish of this serial which has proved such an attraction here.

MANAGER RALEIGH of the American, Frank Bailey's classy house, did big business the opening night, while Saturday was better than the usual second-night run of a feature, although not quite up to the usual Saturday, which is generally an opening day at this house. Since then crowds have been good.

MANAGERS DAVIS and Taylor of the Ansonia and Orpheum, started their regime in charge of these two houses by presenting bright, attractive fronts, good bills and were called on to entertain average crowds. Indications are that the new managers will soon have the houses on a substantial paying basis.

THE Peoples' Hip, with Earl Wisner in charge, is ready for action and "raring to go," but Ackerman and Harris will not permit the house to open, even though two shows are now laying over here, until other houses in the circuit are open so that the acts can keep moving. There would be no gain in opening in Butte only, for the acts, at this time, and as for the house itself, opening at a later date, will result in larger crowds, as there will then be less fear on the part of the public that the influenza epidemic has not spent its force.

THE Liberty is doing business almost normal. The Empress, where a stock company is holding forth, is also doing almost normal business, offering good bills. The suburban and smaller Butte theatres are all getting a liberal share of business, but there is no semblance of the boom that is expected when the public mind is entirely allayed on the malady.

THE opening came about suddenly and unexpectedly. None of the Board of Health members planned to permit the houses to resume on Friday, when the regular forenoon meeting was held. However, it was thought that the opening date would then be fixed at some three or four days in the future, giving all the theatres sufficient opportunity to advertise and arrange their wares. The night previous Butte wanted to celebrate the false United Press report of the end of the war. So permits were given by the officials for the saloons to sell "booze" an any quantities. That was the opening wedge. The next day the churches had to be given permits to hold services and so naturally the theatres and schools wondered why they should be discriminated against. A motion was made to have the opening on the coming Tuesday. A little talk and the fact from showmen that they were ready to start on a day's notice, their houses being clean and sanitary, resulted in the hasty order that the ban be lifted on everything on that day.

SO Butte was again wide open. The showmen went scurrying. The American was the first to open, at 3:30 p. m. The Rialto came second at 6:30 p. m. It required a lot of work to get together the disorganized employe forces, fix up lobby displays and get things going.

HARRY CAREY in Jack Ford's production, "Three Mounted Men," was the opening feature at the American. Wallace Reid in "The Scourge," held the calcium light at the Rialto. "The Code," an Arbuckle comedy, and two vaudeville acts were the Ansonia's attractions, and at the Orpheum Elaine Hammerstein was seen in "The Correspondent."

In San Francisco Film Circles

THE Duhem Motion Picture Mfg. Co. took a number of pictures of the San Francisco peace celebration and these will doubtless be seen in part in some of the weekly feature pictures. Beside the general celebration the Duhem took pictures of the Boy Scouts on a special order from that organization. Most of these pictures were secured from the marquise of the California, through the courtesy of Manager Eugene Roth.

ISAAC OPPENHEIMER, of Oppenheimer, Levy and Karsky, owners of the Royal and Polk street theatres, San Francisco, died on Friday, November 8, from heart trouble. He had been ailing for a number of months but his friends did not think his illness immediately serious until a short time ago. The funeral services were held the following day and were attended by the following representatives of Film Exchanges: M. J. Cohen, the George Kleine System; H. W. Schmidt, General; William Citron, General; L. Reichert, Metro; Chas. Rosenthal, M. & R.; E. O. Child, Pathe; Harry Lee Knappen, Select; R. B. Quive, Vitagraph, and Louis R. Greenfield, representing the exhibitors of San Francisco.

"DYNAMITE" SMITH of the Marquee theatre, Palo Alto, is "headquartering" at the Metro exchange waiting for business to open up again. Mr. Smith says he is ready to open on a day's notice, but he does not expect the authorities of Palo Alto to act until San Francisco resumes.

MISS DIXIE V. BOULWARE, for four years cashier of the Metro exchange, and her sister Nelle have resigned their positions to become yeomanettes in the U. S. navy.

PAUL MOONEY, Western division manager of the Fox exchange, is in San Francisco in charge of the office after the resignation of G. M. Mann. Mr. Mooney says that he hopes to appoint a manager for this district before he leaves, but that as yet he has not decided upon the man.

THE state is expected to open up for pictures in a short time. Exeter and Parlin, Nev., are already running and San Jose, Coaling and Tracy opened the 16th inst.

D. B. LEDERMAN, special representative of the Universal Film Mfg. Company, is spending a few days in the state for the purpose of installing the new operating system which he organized. This system greatly simplifies the financial, booking and all other operations of the local exchanges. All operations of the exchanges are standardized in such a way that the manager of one exchange could step into another and take full charge without the delay which the diverse systems of former days made necessary. Mr. Lederman has been all over the United States installing his system except in this city and Los Angeles. He goes from here to Los Angeles.

THE UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGE has already sent out three salesmen on the expectation that a number of country houses are preparing to open up on the 16th or 17th.

M. E. CORY, assistant manager of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., has been busily preparing a map of the territory covered by his exchange on which he has indicated every town that has a motion picture house, with the names of the houses and other data. By the study of this map some interesting problems in routing will be solved and a better knowledge of the section of the country served may be obtained.

W. O. EDMUNDS, Hodkinson representative, has given up his office with the General and moved to the Pathe, where he will be established by November 25. His work in the future will be done through the Pathe organization.

PETE HANLAN of the Strand theatre, Vallejo, has just been promoted to senior lieutenant in the navy. He has a son who will graduate at the Navy Academy, Annapolis, next year. Lieutenant Hanlan joined the navy a long time ago and for many years has been stationed at Mare Island where he had an opportunity to run up to Vallejo to care for his theatre practically every night.

CONDITIONS in Fresno are so nearly normal again that it is expected that all the motion picture houses will re-open there during the coming week.

J. H. MERRILL of the American Photo Player Co., who recently spent two weeks in the home office, has returned to the Rocky Mountain territory and reports a sale of a fotoplayer to the Strand theatre at Trinidad.

HE HITS THE NAIL ON THE HEAD!

CARUSO is a find! The greatest motion picture discovery in a long, long time. Look what the papers said:

"The Metropolitan tenor makes a hit as a screen actor."—New York American.

"Great authority and charm."—New York Tribune.

"Delighted large audiences."—New York World.

"Wins another stardom. Debut on screen at Rivoli proves him master of expression."—New York Sun.

"Messrs. Lasky and Zukor have a real find."—New York Herald.

"No doubt of the success of Caruso's first picture. An eager, expectant stream of persons lined up at the Rivoli Theatre box office at an early hour yesterday and showed no signs of dwindling at a late hour."—New York Morning Telegraph.

"Caruso delighted those who went to the Rivoli."—New York Times.

"With skill and grace that were nothing short of amazing, the great tenor yesterday negotiated the distance from the operatic stage to the motion picture screen. Audience cheered his film work with enthusiasm."—New York Evening Mail.

"Should the famous tenor lose his voice and fortune, he need never worry over the future as he could command a great salary as a moving picture star, so successful is his first film."—New York Evening Sun.

Dog Gone You, Fatty!

YOU have undone me! Here I am, the town's leading business man—supposed to be dignified at all times!

My wife and children dragged me to a picture show last night and I preserved my dignity and stroked my whiskers and pretended moving pictures were not worthy of my notice—I did until your picture came.

Then I disgraced myself.

I didn't want the people to know I ever even smiled or that my grouch was a bluff.

But you made me roar until the whole town—they were all there—found me out.

After the show several men smiled at me and said, "Hello!" And today I was invited to join the Country Club!

They have found out I am human! Now my whole life is ruined—and by you. Dog gone you!

(Signed) A. GROUCH.

P. S.—The worst of it is that the theatre manager says he won't show another of your pictures for six weeks! I don't see how I can wait.—A. G.

"THE COMMON CAUSE"

BLACKTON SUPER PRODUCTION

The Pinnacle of Screen Art

IT is fitting that in the full maturity of his productive genius, J. Stuart Blackton should give to the screen this enduring monument of the greatest hour in the history of the world.

His "Battle Cry of Peace" brought to America the warning that the distant war clouds threatened the happiness of the nation.

That prophecy was fulfilled.

His "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation" roused the country anew to the need for preparedness, and called on the men and women ot America to stand ready to meet the foe.

America joined with all mankind in the great struggle, and the foe has fallen.

And now, with the sure touch of the master, he depicts the great moving spirit of today and the days that are to come--all nations leagued in a brotherhood for the lasting peace of the world—"The Common Cause."

This is the height of screen art; the vision that catches the ever-changing phases of life and records them for the enduring good of all men.

Just as surely as "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "Womanhood" swept over the Nation on a wave of flaming enthusiasm, so will "The Common Cause" sweep the country on the new-born tides of rejoicing, for it goes into the very soul of the world that has found itself again.

"The Common Cause"

THE names that brighten the cast of J. Stuart Blackton's newest film production, "The Common Cause," are names that stand for the highest in dramatic interpretation.

HERBERT RAWLINSON enjoys wide popularity on both stage and screen. The virility and manliness that are his, the two-fisted fighting qualities that are the outstanding characteristics of the man, are invariably the qualities of the characters he creates; yet it is always the character, never the actor, that we see.

SYLVIA BREAMER has already won exceptional praise in "Missing," a Blackton production. She has carried the charm of her beauty and artistry from the footlights to the screen, and her following is being increased by her appearance in each succeeding production.

LAWRENCE GROSSMITH the famous comedian of the English and American stage, makes his screen debut in "The Common Cause," bringing to it that whimsical touch which, by contrast, strengthens its power and purpose.

CHARLES and VIOLET BLACKTON are the clever child stars who scored in "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Country Life Series" and numerous other screen successes.

PHILIP VAN LOAN as the "Poilu," LOUIS DEAN as "Captain Bach," HUNTLEY GORDON as "Edward Wadsworth," MLLE. MARCEL as "Celeste"—their work in "The Common Cause" brands them as artists of extraordinary talent.

EARLE WILLIAMS in "THE MAN WHO WOULDN'T TELL"

SECOND RELEASE OF THE EARLE WILLIAMS STAR SERIES

Written by Bess Meredyth

Directed by James Young

A SILENT hero in this day of silent heroism---that is the enviable role portrayed by Earle Williams in this romantic drama of secret service.

There seemed no reason why Hawtrey Burke should not have been in khaki when his country called. And yet he chose the polo field instead of the battle field, the cozy country clubhouse instead of the damp dugout.

But was there a reason why he risked even the greatest prize of all---the girl he loved, and who loved him but could not respect him? Was he taking greater chances fighting the enemy at home than the enemy abroad?

TENSION throughout---action---love interest ---mystery---suspense---these essential elements, all well blended, make "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell" one of the most powerful features in which this premier box-office star has ever appeared.

REX BEACH'S

Powerful Drama of Human Emotions

Too Fat To Fight

with

Frank McIntyre

Directed by Hobart Henley

Produced under the direction of

Here is the first great motion picture of the human brotherhood.

The strongest story ever written by America's greatest author.

Published in the January Cosmopolitan —on all news-stands December 5th—with a circulation of 1,500,000 copies reaching 6,000,000 individual readers.

With a more direct publicity and advertising campaign than any screen drama ever had before.

His 300 pounds barred him from the army and navy of his country and earned for him the ridiculous name of "Dimples."

The very sight of him provided jest for men and endless amusement for women.

But there came a day when this monstrously large man found the path to glory, found the thing that touched the hearts of men and women; watched the spirit that turned society's wasters and drifters into heroes and awakened the soul of a nation.

America has just finished a colossal United War Work Campaign and raised $170,000,000. There are other campaigns to come throughout the days of reconstruction.

Do you realize the interest everywhere among your patrons in the tremendous Y. M. C. A.? Do you know how many there are who feel the thrill of the Salvation army?

Do you see the possibilities of getting the worth while people of your city and town enthusiastically behind a great Rex Beach drama that tells the story of the men and women who have been the Soldiers of Service in these seven great organizations:

The Y. M. C. A.
The Jewish Welfare Board
The National Catholic War Council
The Salvation Army
The War Camp Community Service
The Y. W. C. A.
The American Library Association

20,000,000 Americans are members of these self-sacrificing bands of mercy; men and women of all faiths and creeds working together in a common cause.

Each of these organizations and its membership will help you make this Rex Beach production the most successful and profitable one that has ever played in your theatre.

Released everywhere December 15, but playing pre-release in a score of cities to capacity business.

"The only single reel comedies worth running in our house," says the Gem Theatre of Peoria, Ill., of the

HAROLD LLOYD COMEDIES

"In our opinion these are the only single reel slapsticks on the market worth running in our house. They surely cannot be beaten for quality, as each one seems to be better than the preceding one. If Lloyd has any rival at all it may be Chaplin, but we doubt if Charlie surpasses him."

Follow the Allies Into Germany!

With the American, French, Italian and British troops as they advance into German territory are official cameramen, directed by their various Governments. As the great Council meets at Versailles there also will be similar official cameramen.

As town after town is freed of the four year enemy the official cameramen will enter with the conquering armies of Liberty.

What wonderful motion picture material, historic, fascinating, thrilling!

Your audiences will see it all in

The Committee on Public Information, George Creel, Chairman, announces through the Division of Films, Chas. S. Hart, Director, that the containing the official war pictures of the British, French, Italian and American Governments, will not be discontinued, but will be released weekly by Pathe for some time to come.

This announcement has been necessitated by the many requests for information from exhibitors who have found the Official War Review an excellent attraction, and have feared that the Armistice meant the early discontinuance of the film.

The Division of Films is glad to announce that the supply of excellent material has greatly increased during the past two or three months; that this material will continue to be received for some time, and that the negatives now coming in are of subjects far more interesting, even, than any hitherto received.

We are justly proud of the splendid record made by the Official War Review!

When President Wilson

signed the Selective Service Draft bill, he started two million young Americans overseas to victory. Now they are coming back. The story of how America's armies of Victory were made is strikingly told by in a series of eight episodes, to be released one each week—the first Pictorial Review of the making of the American soldier. It is 100 per cent. Patriotic; 100 per cent. American.

In "Made in America" Ashley Miller, the well known director, makes his debut as a producer. By special permission of the Secretary of War, Mr. Miller spent several busy weeks at one of the largest training camps in the country and as a result "Made in America" presents the only authoritative picturization of the training of the American soldier.

It will be absorbingly interesting to the soldiers. It will touch the hearts of the women folk because its dramatic story is typical of the sacrifices and devotion of the thousands of American families and because of the original and realistic presentation in sequence and its entirety, of the experiences of millions of young Americans.

Victory has only whetted the appetite of the American people for "Made in America." It tells how the war was won in America.

After the War—What?

The war is over. Reconstruction is the order of the hour—business, political, physical recor struction. And abreast of the spirit of the times is the FOX IDEA. To interpret the commo thought of a happy and triumphant people—to aid the exhibitor to the greatest profits by th way of least resistance—William Fox now offers two Big Timely Pictures that epitomize Amer can thought and ideals and point the way of triumphant American progress.

The Reconstruction Problem

The greatest picture—the picture that draws the biggest crowds and piles up the biggest box office receipts—is one that appeals to the greatest number of passions in the human heart. Based on the Fox Idea, there has just been completed a production built on the three greatest passions known to our race—the love of a mother for her son, the love of a man for a woman, the love of a patriot for his country. It is the most powerful drama of mother love ever thrown on the screen.

EVERY MOTHER'S SON

is a tremendous epic of the American woman's part in the World War—the heroism, the suffering, the supreme sacrifice of the millions of mothers who gave their sons to their country. It is a beautiful romance of an American soldier and a peasant maid of Alsace. It is a mighty film spectacle of patriotism, depicting not only the Great Draft and the battlefields of France, but also the final Peace Conference at Versailles and the glories of the new world that is to be born of reconstruction. EVERY MOTHER'S SON is a picture for every man, woman and child in America. It was directed by R. A. WALSH and temporarily titled "18 TO 45." Book this picture—now.

The Morality Problem

The Fox Idea has developed what is beyond all doubt the most unusual, most fascinating, most amazing photoplay ever produced—a timely, striking morality picture that is pitiless in the searching light it throws on matrimony. It will make the selfish, thoughtless, complacent husband squirm. It will cause wives to look at life in a new light. It is a challenge to the world, ripping away the veil of hypocrisy and deceit that has enshrouded marriage and helped to make it a mockery.

WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY

is the story of a beautiful girl who was able to see that those men who fawned upon her and sought her hand in marriage only desired her as a sacrifice on the altar of Mammon. She saw poverty, bitterness, struggle—but at length also perceived that which brought happiness to her heart and hope to lift her spirit. WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY was directed by RICHARD STANTON. It will be the sensation of the season, with a box office appeal bigger than the capacity of the largest theatres.

Peace for the Exhibitor

Profits are what interest you. One picture that you know will be a box office power is safer than all the untested productions combined. Booking a picture that is backed by a record of successes in the big first-run houses means peace of mind for you. It is your assurance—the best assurance obtainable—that your money, time, energy and advertising will not be wasted. And this is the sort of pictures William Fox offers you.

Profit Makers

The one new thing in motion pictures this season has been the development of the Fox Idea of timeliness—the production of pictures possessing news value. The Fox Idea has been the biggest success of the season. These pictures today are making more money for exhibitors than any other series of productions obtainable. They are timely and are being kept timely.

THE PRUSSIAN CUR
THE LAND OF THE FREE
QUEEN OF THE SEA

This is especially instanced by THE LAND OF THE FREE, based on the life of General Pershing and released as WHY AMERICA WILL WIN. Sweeping revisions have been made which place the film as far ahead of the times as it was the day of release. These pictures are proved money-makers. The Fox Idea is to keep them so. Book them now—today—while public interest is at fever heat—while people are clamoring for news of Pershing.

Proved Values

No exhibitor could compile a list of the biggest pictures of the last year without paying tribute to the Fox Idea. No one who is familiar with the amusement business could name the record box office pictures without including the products of the Fox Idea. And no productions have more convincingly demonstrated the soundness of that Idea than

CLEOPATRA
LES MISERABLES
THE BIG SIX

These pictures have been shown around the world. They have visited many communities again and again. And they are producing big profits today just as surely as they did in the memorable first week after their release. They are pictures to bank on—pictures that will clean up for any exhibitor anywhere—pictures that will be cleaning up for wide-awake exhibitors a decade hence. Why experiment? Book certainties! Get these pictures now!

HAVE YOU HEARD?

by Priscilla

WITH ALL DUE RESPECT to the eloquence of the four-minute men, the "Kingdom of Grief" at the Auditorium this week will sell more Liberty bonds in Chicago than 400 four-minute men talking for four hours at a stretch from now until the end of the world!

If you haven't seen "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," you don't know anything about the Germans, even if you are one! If you have seen it you know far too much about them for your own peace of mind, and you will open your heart and your pocketbook and get behind the man behind the gun for all you are worth.

The woman's committee of the Council of National Defense, Illinois division, brought this picture to Chicago to make you believe a whole lot that you didn't believe. Don't think that you are going to see a lot of blood and thunder, or be shocked and scandalized or mortified to death.

"The Kingdom of Grief" shows you in a quiet, impressive manner just what the Germans did to Belgium, and as you see the actual pictures of the invasion of Brussels and Antwerp, the scenes change before the eyes of your imagination and you behold the Germans as they might have come marching into America.

The first part of the film, which is vastly more than a lot of animated scenery, shows the early days of Belgium, the peaceful, happy, picturesque Belgium, ruled by the beloved Albert, his subjects happy and contented.

The second part shows what they have been through since the summer of 1914, and is the part with the punch. There are not the usual processions of beraggled peasants with bundles and baggage and babies, such as one usually finds in war films, and hard for us to understand because our "land class" are all prosperous farmers and would be fleeing in Fords, but in these reels you meet the well-to-do city dwellers who fled in their good clothes, but, alas! were a sorry lot before they reached the Holland frontier.

The first showing of the film was made last night at the Auditorium before a gathering of the most fashionable folk in Chicago, who were all keen to see this film that the Germans have tried to suppress, but which will always be preserved in the Royal Museum of Brussels as testimony of what the little country has suffered.

Last evening the benefit had its lighter moments, of course. The young women of the Illinois Motor Corps, in their stunning new drab gray uniforms, with the gun-metal buttons, held you up for a program or secured your signature to a Liberty bond, and a dozen or more little flower girls sold corsage bouquets in any color you might choose.

Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen, chairman of the woman's committee, made the opening address, and was followed by Clarence Darrow. The soloists were Warren Proctor and Vittorio Arimondi.

SOCIETY NIBBLES HARDTACK AT BELGIAN SHOW

Movie of Devastated Land Given at Auditorium Theater.

Society was treated to its first sample of real army rations last night at the gala performance of the moving picture, "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," at the Auditorium theater. A camp kitchen was installed in the foyer and during the intermission soldiers from the Fortieth infantry served coffee and hard tack to the men and women in evening attire who crowded around the kitchen, eager to be initiated into the mysteries of camp food.

A military atmosphere pervaded the theater. The blue uniforms of the marines and jackies, the khaki of the soldiers and the gray of the high school cadets and of the Illinois motor corps members added to it.

Gun Thunders Welcome

Outside on the street a six pounder gun, mounted on a motor truck, thundered a welcome to the audience, and in the lobby, in the trim uniforms of the motor corps, Mrs. Mark Walton, Miss Edith Rosenfield, Miss Felicite Reynolds, Miss Elizabeth Grey, Miss Priscilla McIlvaine, Miss Margaret Hambleton, Miss Harmon Bailey, and Miss Harriet McLaughlin sold programs.

Mrs. H. A. McKee and Mrs. Joseph Carry were in charge of the Liberty loan booth and before the performance began obtained $35,000 in subscriptions.

Shows Belgium's History.

The picture, which is being produced under the auspices of the woman's committee, Council of National Defense, to help the $100,000 fund which the committee is raising, portrays the history of Belgium from 1839 up to the present. One part of the film was taken at the time of the coronation of King Albert in 1909 and the last part shows the devastation of Belgium and ends with the arrival of the American troops. The costumes of the first part were loaned from the national archives of Belgium or copied from plates in their possession, and the men and women of the Brussels court posed as the historic characters. The pictures were all taken at the exact locations where the events occurred.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

By

American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers

To the Proprietors of Motion Picture Theatres, Hotels, Restaurants, Cabarets, Dance Halls, etc.

On October 23rd, 1918, a decision was rendered by District Judge Bledsoe in the United States District Co for the Southern District of California, holding that under the Copyright Law the unlicensed public performance copyrighted music subjects the infringer to a minimum damage of Two Hundred and Fifty Dollars.

The following is an extract from the opinion of the Court:

> "Bledsoe, District Judge: Plaintiff sued for an infringement of its copyright arising out of the performance of a musical selection. . . . Defendant was the owner and operator of a motion picture house in Los Angeles and the selection was performed by his pianist in his house on at least one occasion in the month of March of this year. . . .
> "As before stated the infringement complained of concerns the performance of a 'musical composition.' . . . I am of the opinion that this is one of the 'other cases' referred to in clause 'b' of Section 25, supra, and that the minimum damages to be awarded for the infringement shown should be $250.00.
> "The provision for an allowance of 'ten dollars' must be held to apply where a large number of infringements have been shown; this figure is to be used by the Court as a basis of its computation of the entire damages by assessing each infringement at ten dollars; but in the event the total number of infringements, computed on the ten-dollar basis, do not amount to two hundred and fifty dollars, nevertheless, pursuant to the mandatory terms of the statute contained in the provision last above referred to relating to 'other cases,' the Court may not award damages in a sum less than two hundred and fifty dollars. So also, no matter how many separate infringements may be proved, the Court may not mulct the defendant in damages in excess of the maximum sum mentioned, to-wit: five thousand dollars. . . .
> "Plaintiff's counsel will therefore prepare a decree awarding damages in the sum of $250.00, the minimum amount named in the statute, and for attorney's fees in the sum of $100.00."

Heretofore the Society has been extremely indulgent in enforcing the provisions of the Statute allowing the co lection of damages. It now serves notice that hereafter all infringers of musical compositions belonging to its mem bers will be prosecuted to the full extent of the Law.

Anyone desiring information regarding the cost of a license may secure the same by communicating with t Society at its home office or to any of its representatives below.

This Is a Real One

THIS is a real feature. It should be heavily advertised with big space in the newspapers. Your town should be billed completely and a good snappy advance campaign put over. You can't go too strong on "Eye for Eye," for it will not disappoint patrons, so you need have no fear of any comeback and therefore can go the limit.

As the picture is good for double the run that usual features get, it will pay you to loosen up, put quite a bit of extra money into a real advertising campaign and do all in your power to put the feature over in the way it deserves. Suppose you do put extra money into it. The chances are a thousand to one that you'll get it back with a dividend that will make you feel happy for months.

This War and the Next

FROM many sources the motion picture has received words of praise for the part it has played in aiding the winning of the war. Military leaders and civil authorities have united to declare its value as a morale builder and propaganda agent at home and abroad.

But it has remained for the Department of Labor to make the most startling statement of all—to elude generalities and put forth the blunt, concrete fact:

"The motion picture shortened the war by at least two months!"

Two months! And a bare fortnight of action just before the dawn of Peace caused the American casualties to jump a hundred thousand.

Two months! Translate that into thousands of aching hearts, thousands of the grim mounds that mark the graves of heroes.

And to the motion picture a glorious share in the deeds which saved the world these pangs.

There is a thought to hug close, to borrow comfort from, to spur inspiration with.

We Can All Resolve

IF we were an exhibitor with slide-making facilities we'd get busy on that thought without a moment's delay.

We'd let our patrons in on it.

We'd prepare a slide—maybe two or three—carrying a message something like this:

"The U. S. Department of Labor declares: 'The motion picture shortened the war by at least two months!'

"This message is for all of us—and especially you, the faithful followers of the screen whose support makes possible the giant industry which placed its all at Uncle Sam's call."

If we were a producer, distributor or exhibitor——

We'd read twice the main paragraph of the Department of Labor's communication.

And we'd think of the next war—the internal battles of reconstruction days, the class strife to come.

Then—"Resolved, that we will never aid the production, distribution, or exhibition of a picture that directly or indirectly gives strength to the venom of the bolshevik or cripples the arm of Uncle Sam in his trying task of reconstruction."

But being a mere trade paper person we can only offer an emphatic promise to turn all our energies to the condemnation of anything which makes for aid to the forces of chaos.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
Information and Education Service
6 West 48th Street
New York, N. Y.

November 25, 1918.

Motion Picture News
729 Seventh Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

The Motion Picture undoubtedly shortened the war by at least two months. This is the opinion of officers in the army who are in a position to know. The Motion Picture can do more to stabilize labor and help bring about normal conditions than any other agency. An injudicious use of Motion Pictures, on the other hand, can do our country incalculable harm.

Constructive education will do infinitely more good than destructive propaganda. To portray the villain of a photoplay as a member of the I. W. W. or the Bolsheviki is positively harmful; while, portraying the hero as a strong, virile American, a believer of American institutions and ideals, will do much good.

Motion Picture producers and scenario writers will undoubtedly be using labor themes in their productions for some time to come. The Motion Picture Section of the Department of Labor is anxious and willing to advise with any members of the industry who, being American citizens, are unwilling to produce anything for the screen that violates the policies of the Government as represented by the Department of Labor.

This Department is both appreciative of what you have done during the war and conscious of what you are willing to do, that all may enjoy the fruits of victory.

We do not want to exercise any censorship over the screen at this time; we do not think it necessary. We do want to help you help your Government.

Cordially yours,
DAVID K. NILES,
Chief, Motion Picture Section.

Just a Gentle Inquiry

ALL of which doesn't prevent a feeling of displeasure as we read the sentence of Mr. Niles letter which says:

"We do not want to censor the motion picture."

We are inclined to ask how, when, where and why Mr. Niles ever got the idea that he could censor the motion picture if he wanted to?

But we are also inclined to believe that the sentence was a slip of the tongue. We will lay more stress on the one that follows: "We do not believe it is necessary."

That sounds more American.

That connects more logically with the opening sentence of the letter.

Nevertheless, the hint at censorship is disquieting—irritating in these days of reconstruction when a hundred and one Washington bureaus are looking around hungrily in search of means of permanence.

And licking their lips at sight of the motion picture.

The "Vet" and the War Picture

APROPOS of an article in last week's issue we spoke of the millions of soldiers soon returning to civil life and their possible effect on the pictures of the future.

Apropos of nothing in particular we decried the tendency to shy at war pictures despite the fact that theatrical history shows the most successful Civil War plays coming "after the war."

Just now we can't help coupling the two points.

Hasn't each of us a memory of some gray-haired Civil War "vet" repeating daily to all who would listen the tale of his own part in the great conflict, his own recollection of its momentous events?

Hasn't each one of us the imagination to see—the returned "Yank" with modestly concealed pride taking "his girl" to the was picture so that he may "tell her all about it?"

And it will be lots more fun now, won't it? For now her "Yank" is at her side—no longer does the war picture give her heart a wrench, or send a tear to her eye.

He's back!

He'll Want "Jes Folks"

ONLY this thought must we all bear in mind:

The returning "vet" will have naught but jeers for the trash and bunk of the war picture crop.

He'll save his admiration for the tales of real Americans and real American heroism.

"He'll want to see "jes folks"—like himself.

He'll laugh and cry with you—and so will she—if you give them the red-blooded romance and soul-searing trials of regular doughboys, real John Smiths.

Will This Happen?

THERE'S another angle to this return of the two—or three—million that presents food for interesting thought.

Some millions of Americans from the farm plow and the city desk have for the first time traveled.

A bit of England, considerable of France and some of Italy have they seen; shoulder to shoulder with the Tommy, the poilu and the bersaglieri have they fought.

Has their vision been broadened to a point that will open the doors of American markets even a little wider to the foreign-made production?

Foreign producers have complained continually that the American market is shut to their offerings, neglectful of the fact that American productions succeed abroad because of merit and not because of any chivalrous desire to compliment Uncle Sam.

Granting that merit of production, and greater broadness of theme to the coming foreign pictures—will the new vision of the returning Yanks aid the wramth of their welcome?

ANOTHER BAN IS LIFTED

Machine Manufacturers Freed from Restriction

WILL C. SMITH, chairman of the War Service Committee, Motion Picture Machine Manufacturers, of the N. A. M. P. I., announced on Wed., November 27, that the conservation restrictions applied by the War Industries Board has been rescinded, and that manufacturers are free to return to the pre-war basis.

Dealing in Personalities

"He Gave Us Cabiria"

WE like to talk to Harry Maciste Raver. First, because Harry Raver always talks interestingly. And, second, because Harry Raver never says the obvious.

Even the rusty think-tank belonging to Yours Truly seems to profit by the stimulus of Harry Raver conversation.

But, most of all, we like to talk to Harry Raver—and so we take delight in introducing him to you in the cut alongside—because he is one of the few we meet on Times Square who don't take themselves too seriously.

Harry often tells us, as he did last week sitting on the arm of our chair in Mrs. Astor's cafeteria:

"I think I've been in practically every end of this game from the studio to box-office, and I think I had traveled considerable of the show highway before pictures were invented, but——

"I'm frank to admit that with each additional day I spend in this game the less I think I know about it."

"He Put 'Photoplay' Over"

WHICH reminds us that a week or two ago we bumped into James Quirk, of Photoplay Magazine, on our justly famed Broadway. The Quirk habitat is Chicago, so the meeting was excuse enough for fifteen minutes conversation.

Being both in the publishing line and unable to sell each other anything we had come down to frank talk. And after the quarter hour of candid discussion we joined hands on the statement that the only way to succeed in this fillum game is to admit without hesitation that you know more about it than anyone else on earth.

Which sounds fine, and which seemed to put us in the same class with James Quirk.

The only difference is that James Quirk has succeeded, and James Quirk does know more——

Fill it out yourself.

"He Can't Be Kept Down"

YOU can't keep a good man down. Terry Ramsaye started his film life in Chicago. Then he came to New York when Mutual moved here.

A year passed, and then he slipped—back into Chicago. Then he "came back" and Broadway once more saw Terry Ramsaye when Mutual took up quarters in 1600 Broadway.

Another shake up in Mutual and Terry seemed in danger of slipping again. But this time he fooled them and walked out of 1600, up one block, and hung his hat on a Rivoli doorknob.

New York will have its way.

P. S.—We anticipate the roars from those Chicagoans, Waterson Rothacker, James Quirk, Chares Pyle, Bill Hight, et al——

But let 'em roar!

A Few Odds and Ends

SEEN AT one and the same moment in the Astor lobby last Wednesday: J. D. Williams, Bill Rudolph, Edward MacManus, Jesse Lasky, Joe Farnham, Freddie Schader, Bill Hunter, Fred Beecroft, Earl Gulick.

THE LAST MENTIONED member of the bill posters' union having just returned from Lakewood after a three weeks' battle with the Spanish influenza.

HARRY RERCHENBACH is reported sighted in the Times Square zone.

What They Say About the Quinn Letter

[Editor's Note—Quinn's comment has created such unusual interest throughout the industry that an editor's note thus far advanced in the series is a bit superfluous. However, we can not refrain from mentioning casually that Mr. Quinn's letter, as several have noticed, has brought an avalanche of "ayes" from the exhibitors and a few doubtful "noes" from other quarters. In view of which some may contend that Mr. Quinn has made little or no progress in his sincere attempt to cite a few ailments of the industry and to prescribe relief therefrom.

Below we publish a few additional letters from representative exhibitors and producers. Probably one of the clearest analyses which has yet come to hand is that from Harry Raver. Despite the fact that he heads it "How Much Does Quinn Really Know?" Mr. Raver speaks very highly of the exhibitor's "remarkable vision."

Frank Vesley, of Salinas, Cal., is also to the bat with an interesting letter —and there are others.]

HOW MUCH DOES QUINN REALLY KNOW?

By Harry Raver

I ACCUSE J. A. Quinn of possessing remarkable vision and a fine analytical mind. Our own President Wilson owes the unprecedented position he holds throughout the world today to these same qualities, and not because of his practical experience in government management.

Mr. Quinn should not, therefore, credit his knowledge of conditions entirely to his practical learning, for I know of at least a dozen men in the industry who have served their apprenticeship in every department of motion picture endeavor; in fact, have been in the "game" since its beginning, and yet are unable to determine intelligently and forcefully just what class of production is in most demand today, or what the industry needs to straighten out its kinks, because they lack vision and the ability to analyze. Therefore, I do not agree that J. Analytical Quinn knows what he is talking about because he has "gone through the mill," but in spite of this fact, for he deals largely in generalities and bases his strongest argument on good judgment and common sense, as every idealist does.

J. D. Williams, who is an idealist of the first water, emphasizes Quinn's philosophy by a further diagnosis of his own, but both seem to overlook certain causes of poor production and exorbitant rentals about which the public is interested, unconsciously, and the trade more or less indifferently.

In referring to the public, I should like to see the day arrive when every Producer could educate himself to forget all about the Distributer, Exchange man and Exhibitor and keep only his great World Audience in mind when making his picture, for the returns are fixed by the Public. Turning out pictures to suit the temperamentality of certain individual exchange men or exhibitors has not proven a successful policy in the past.

I DO not attempt to minimize or discredit these necessary "go-betweens," many of whom possess sufficient showman's instinct to sense what the public wants, but in the final analysis the largest percentage of the population is the final bull's-eye, and the producer who aims true will receive the greatest reward.

In my opinion, the most apparent cause of poor quality is deficient organization. Too much system in the business end and neglect of production departments have done more to stunt Motion Picture growth than the so-called evils of "The star system." For example, one large producing and distributing organization engages a famous theatrical star to appear in a picture at a salary of $10,000 per week, with a guarantee of four weeks' employment. Instead of systematizing the work of production so as to complete those scenes in which the star appeared within the guaranteed four weeks, the work was strung along in haphazard fashion, with the result that the famous lady in question drew eight weeks' salary, or $40,000 more than she could possibly earn under an intelligent system of production. Her picture went to the exhibitor on a rental schedule padded to the amount of $40,000 for the star alone, perhaps more to cover additional errors.

Another company, doing an exterior on Staten Island with an expensive cast of principals and a great many supernumeraries, horses, etc., at a salary expense during the possible working hours of sunlight of $8 per minute, was held up for nearly two hours while a man searched the neighborhood for an important prop. The loss of time necessitated returning to the same location the following day. The unnecessary additional expense created by this lack of system amounted to nearly $3,000. The exhibitor paid a fictitious rental to cover this item of waste.

THE "Star Evil" has been pretty thoroughly analyzed by exponents of both sides to the controversy, but I notice a tendency to condemn the expensive star only on the part of those who have none. I will venture the opinion that any two stars in America could be satisfactorily financed and their productions completed by utilizing only the studio waste of the industry to cover the cost.

The average producer is at the mercy of his employees. He lacks the authority, born of experience and training, which he must possess in order to command. Few of them began their apprenticeship in the studio, the laboratory or at the author's desk, and fewer still have enjoyed that intimate touch with the great public which develops the "showman's instinct." But most of our producers know how to organize corporations, create and maintain selling and distributing departments and generally conduct the "business" of the industry successfully. The industry is young and is being controlled largely by "young blood," most of the "pioneers" having, for reasons of their own, taken up other lines of endeavor. Conditions are improving every day simply for the reason that the longer a producer engages in the work the less he realizes his own importance, and becomes reconciled to the fact that thought devoted to production is vastly more important than the "politics" of the industry. Mr. Williams claims that a fault which he describes "will be corrected by the exhibitor, if at all." I will go him one better in predicting that such a fault, and all others complained of, will be corrected by the supreme dictator of all, the Public, when the time comes, and the day is approaching fast.

THE great Audience we depend upon for support is gradually awakening to the fact that the majority of our productions would not command patronage, from the standpoint of entertainment, unless they were bolstered up by an orchestra, in many cases twice the size of those used in a legitimate theatre, special musical setting, singing acts and other elaborations now found in our representative picture theatres. I firmly believe in the future of the industry, for the day is coming when the producer will achieve his fame as a Producer and not as a "Magnate." When that time comes much of the competitive distribution waste will disappear because the industry will have become serious.

At any rate, Quinn is an Idealist, and so is Williams.

Editor, Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I READ your editorial, "We Dare You To," and Mr. Quinn's article, and I must say that Mr. Quinn's summary of the situation is entirely my way of thinking. Only one picture out of many has any real appeal, and it often looks like the manager of the studio and one of his directors get into a conversation something like this:

"Say, Bill, we have got to get out a five-reeler by the 10th." "I know it, Pete, but we ain't got a scenario that'll do at all." "Well, Bill, there's only ten days left. What you say about a good hot war picture; call it the 'Prussian Prune, or Bustin' Up Berlin,' or somethin' with a punch like that?" "All right, Pete; they never seem to get enough of it. We can patch up those old trenches and give the helmets a coat of fresh gilt paint and unroll

No State Ban for Pennsylvania

Dr. B. Franklin Royer, State Health Commissioner, Will Let Influenza Ban Be Decided by Local Health Boards

NOTWITHSTANDING there are now serious flarebacks of the influenza in various parts of Pennsylvania, Dr. B. Franklin Royer, State Health Commissioner, has announced that he does not propose to issue any orders re-establishing the ban which closed the theatres and other places of amusement on October 4 and for about one month thereafter.

Dr. Royer has just issued an official statement in which he points out that serious new outbreaks of the disease and an increased number of deaths have been reported from the cities of Erie, Johnstown, New Castle, Uniontown, Wilkes-Barre and Allentown, located in widely separated sections of the state.

He has announced, however, that he will leave it entirely up to the local health boards in these and other communities in which the epidemic may occur, to use their own judgment as to whether it becomes necessary to reimpose the closing order.

It is announced that the boards of health of Johnstown, Wilkes-Barre and Uniontown already have "taken steps to reimpose the closing order and it is believed other municipalities will follow their example if the epidemic continues to show an increase."

Dr. Royer said that several local health boards have consulted him in the last few days and that he had advised them that they have full authority to enforce closing orders if they deem it wise for the conservation of the public health, but that the state will not take a hand in the communities affected "unless the epidemic should show a more decided tendency toward spreading."

The total number of deaths from the influenza in Pennsylvania since October 1 has been 42,635, Dr. Royer reports.

Notwithstanding the hundreds of thousands of dollars that were lost to the motion picture interests throughout the state of Pennsylvania by the action of the State Health Department in closing the theatres for a period of more than a month during the statewide influenza epidemic, the vast majority of exhibitors have shown a genuine willingness to co-operate with State Health Commissioner B. Franklin Royer in suppressing the plague. The fact is strongly exemplified by the hearty compliance of the theatres with a request made by the Commissioner since the theatres were reopened about November 9, to display slides on their screens warning the public, in the name of the State Health Department, against relaxing precautions against the spread of the disease until all danger of its further development is certainly eliminated.

Hundreds of slides of this character have been prepared by the State Health Department and are being distributed among the motion picture theatres, which, almost as a unit, are giving the department the free use of their screens as a means of spreading the anti-influenza propaganda.

LOS ANGELES CLOSED

But Influenza Clouds Drift Steadily Away

THE middle of last week saw practically only Los Angeles and one or two additional towns laboring under the influenza ban, which has lifted throughout the country to such an extent that reports are very few in connection with reopenings or reclosings.

It is said Los Angeles expects to reopen December 2, after being disappointed November 25. Pasadena theatres have also been closed again, and it will probably be December before they reopen.

Other sections of the country are "doing well," according to reports, and things are once more assuming normal proportions. Oklahoma towns have reopened and capacity business has ruled, it is said. They were closed therefore five weeks.

In the opinion of motion picture men, there were not more than ten towns at the most throughout the United States closed last week. All the rest are "on their feet again."

The readiness with which the exhibitors are complying with this request shows that if there are any sore spots remaining among the men of the picture industry as the result of Dr. Royer's radical action in closing the theatres early in October, the theatre managers are liberal-minded enough to suppress any feeling they may have in the matter and to make their screens available for the use of the very agency that closed the theatres, in order to educate the public as to the still lurking dangers of the terrible influenza scourge.

Famous Players-Lasky Contributes Studio

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has contributed the use of its Fort Lee studio, sets, etc., and the services of two directors and several players for the making of a Red Cross propaganda picture that is now being made under the title, "The Greatest Gift."

The scenario was written by Hamish MacLaurin, formerly of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres and now a publicity director for the Red Cross, and the picture will consist of a series of episodes beginning with an incident of the history of old Egypt, at 4,000 B.C., taken from "The Book of the Dead."

Among those appearing in the scenes are Frank Mills, Herbert Standing, Jr., Peggy Shanor, Marie Learock, Mrs. Philip Boileau, Yolande Duquette, Shirley Ward, Barbara Castleton, Eugene O'Brien and Gwen Sears, of the Famous Players-Lasky publicity department. John Robertson and Dan Pennell are directing and Lewis J. Physioc is at the camera.

Kleine Aids Victory Loan

George Kleine, the veteran motion picture man, who has long done business in Canada as well as throughout the United States, showed his interest in the bond drive recently closed in Canada by making a substantial subscription to the Second Victory Loan.

The method taken by Mr. Kleine in furthering the patriotic movement in the Dominion was unique. He apportioned the profits from his film rentals through the General Film-Kleine exchange in Montreal, accruing during the period of the drive, to the subscription.

The result was that his subscription to the bonds amounted to $3,000. The subscription was made by T. S. Cooper, of General Film Company (Canada), Limited, at Mr. Kleine's direction.

Storm Tears Through Coast Studios

According to a wire from Los Angeles, a forty-two-mile wind on November 24 wrought damages at the studios aggregating $20,000 and caused delays expensive to all companies. The roof was torn from the property shop at Vitagraph, and a big circus tent was destroyed with its paraphernalia. Seven or eight big sets at Lasky's were blown over. The Christie plant lost a scene dock and two sets. The roof of Griffith's studio was taken off.

Sets were blown down at all studios, it is reported.

Famous Players-Lasky Has New Renovating Plan

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that it has completed a new system of repair and renovation of films which it is expected will take care of the problems, particularly of the small town exhibitor.

For some months a plan which was conceived by Charles C. Burr, assistant general manager, Department of Distribution, has been formulated and is now in operation whereby exhibitors, even in the smallest towns, may receive prints in first class condition.

The direct supervision of the new system will fall to Mr. Burr, with Hector Streckans in charge of the technical workings of the plan. In connection with this new work, Mr. Burr said:

"Our new system of repair and renovation of film is unlike anything heretofore attempted in the motion picture industry. Since the beginning of the business, the small town exhibitor has been handicapped with films that were in poor condition.

"His patrons in many instances were of high class suburban sections and discriminating in the selection of their entertainment. Our new plan of renovating and repairing film is one of large proportions and involves plants, two of which are already working in New York City, with extensive organizations.

"However, the return will more than warrant the trouble and expense for small town exhibitors will now be able to tackle their prospects with an immediate asset which they never before could use in their advertising. Such a thing as a poor print, when our system is in full swing, will be entirely unknown as far as Paramount and Artcraft pictures are concerned.

"While this new plan will be of great benefit to the smaller exhibitor, it should also prove most gratifying to the manager of the larger community. The circulation of pictures in poor condition has not been confined only to the smallest, but has been evident even in second- and third-run houses, where the showing has been preceded by heavy first-run bookings, especially where careless operators have been involved."

June Elvidge Marries Canadian Lieutenant

The marrying epidemic among the stars has shown no sign of abatement. After Charley Chaplin and Mildred Harris were united, the film world learned of the marriage of Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson, who has been Mr. Walthall's leading woman for some time.

And now June Elvidge takes unto herself a husband. On November 19 Judge Harlow joined Lieutenant Frank C. Badgley of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces and Miss Elvidge. Two months before Lieutenant Badgley won the Military Cross for gallantry at the battle of Courcelette. He was invalided to this country and took charge of the photographic section of the British Bureau of Information.

The lieutenant and his bride left for Ottawa to spend their honeymoon at his home there.

JACK PICKFORD HEADS OWN COMPANY

First National to Distribute His Future Productions

JACK PICKFORD is back from the Navy!

At least, that is the gist of a statement this week from First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which organization makes known that Mary's brother has agreed to distribute three of his future productions, made by his own company, through First National.

It is announced that Pickford and his mother have gone to Los Angeles to join Mary and to incidentally begin work upon his first of the three features.

According to a statement, the same general terms which are a part of First National's agreement with Miss Pickford, governing the distributing, are the features of the contract with her brother.

It is understood that no time limit has been set in which Pickford is to complete his pictures, and that he will be solely responsible for their quality. The story for the first release is said to have been selected, but First National's Publicity department declines to make known its nature until a new title has been chosen for it. The scenario will likely give him a role similar to the ones in which he last appeared.

A First National statement said: "Exhibitors who book Jack Pickford's productions will not be asked to rent any other releases as a premium or indemnity. They will be booked exactly as though they were the only subjects we have to offer."

Bid for Peace Conference Film

Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph Suggests to President Wilson That American Film Concerns Bid for Rights to Film Big Meeting

PRESIDENT WILSON has been asked to consider selling in open market by bidding among the American motion picture concerns, the American rights to making moving pictures of the coming Peace Conference, by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company.

Mr. Smith also suggested that part of the profits of the sale be devoted to the erection of a wing to the Metropolitan Art Museum in Central Park to house a motion picture mausoleum and public projection hall where the best cinema history of the war and the Peace Conference may be stored and exhibited from time to time during the years to come.

His letter to the President follows:

"I have the honor to suggest for your Excellency's consideration the great necessity of preserving accurate and comprehensive motion pictures, recording every phase of the world war, and especially the stupendous scenes of the meeting and final signing of the Peace Treaty, and the establishment of the League of Nations.

"With this granted as a premise, may I also suggest that the American rights to take these pictures, exhibit them for a profitable gain, and the ultimate placing of them with the proper authorities, especially the photographing of all things connected with the coming meeting of the world's peace commission, be sold in the open market to the highest bidder, each bid to be entered by an American firm only, and accompanied by a certified check for the amount of the bid.

"I believe this is the only fair way to dispose of this great privilege.

"As another suggestion I submit that the proceeds of this sale, whether a bulk cash sum or a cash bonus with royalties or other share in the profits, be devoted to the building and support of a mausoleum for the preservation of these films; and that this building be made an annex to the Metropolitan Museum in Central Park, New York City. The largest city in the United States should possess these records, so that the greatest number of our citizens, and our children, may from time to time study them in a public screen room, and refresh their memories of the great deeds of the moral and physical American Giant of this day.

"Trusting these suggestions may meet with your Excellency's approval, and that you will refer them to the proper authorities for execution."

Hulsey of Dallas to Build in Houston

E. H. Hulsey of Dallas, Texas, announced that he had arranged with Jesse H. Jones for the erection of a theatre structure on Main street at Houston, Texas, work to begin as soon as conditions become normal after the war.

The amusement space will extend 75 feet on Main street and extend back 150 feet, providing a seating capacity of about two thousand persons. Mr. Hulsey is not ready to announce other details, but stated that he had paid Mr. Jones $20,000 to bind the deal.

The equipment will be the most modern and the interior arrangement will be such that any kind of attraction from the legitimate to motion pictures can be staged.

Mildred Harris Cancels

It was reported from the West Coast by wire this week that Mildred Harris (Mrs. Charles Chaplin) has canceled her contract with Universal on the grounds that the agreement was made when she was under age, and that she is now married and Lois Weber is not to continue as her director. Miss Weber is to direct Anita Stewart, whose features will be distributed by First National.

Miss Harris celebrated her eighteenth birthday November 29.

Nearly $40,000 for War Work

William Fox Reports Sum of $38,782.73 Raised By Industrial Division of Allied Theatrical, Motion Picture Committee

WITH several companies still to be heard from when the drive closed Wednesday night, November 20, the total reported to Chairman William Fox by the Industrial Division of the Allied Theatrical, Motion Pictures, Music and Entertainments Committee in the United War Work Campaign was $38,782.73.

When all of the companies which this division solicited have reported in full it is expected that this total will exceed $40,000. Frederick H. Elliott, chairman of this division, feels very much gratified to think that such successful results were obtained from the rank and file of the entertainment field, when the enormous obstacles under which this campaign was conducted are taken into consideration.

The first two days of the drive were of little or no value in so far as obtaining subscriptions was concerned, owing to the fact that the news of the actual signing of the armistice came on the day on which the campaign started. The peace celebration that followed was of such magnitude that people did not recover from it sufficiently to interest themselves in giving until two or three days after, and the advantage of a flying start was lost.

For this reason much of the circularization work of the committee had to be duplicated, as numerous concerns called up to say that in the confusion of the celebration and the days immediately following that the first appeals which the committee had sent out had been mislaid. This had the effect of making the returns from the various companies and their employes extremely slow.

Another feature of the campaign that made the collections extremely difficult was the fact that many companies did not feel that they could solicit their employes to contribute a percentage of their weekly salaries when they knew that every one of them had made individual contributions through some other agency.

With seven charitable organizations combined in one drive there was hardly an individual that did not come in more or less direct contact with one of them in their home and social life. The result was that contributions that ordinarily would have been made through this committee were made through churches, schools, clubs, theatres and restaurants.

With all of these adverse conditions to contend against, the committee feels extremely gratified that the total reached the substantial proportions reported, and especially gratified that over eighty per cent of it was made up of the subscriptions of the motion picture companies.

"The Great Victory" for Abroad

The Screen Classics Feature Dealing with War and Peace Will Be Shown in Europe in December

"THE GREAT VICTORY, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," the new Screen Classics, Inc., production, dealing with war and peace, will be released simultaneously in Europe and America, having received full Government endorsement, it is said.

Count di Cippico, who is representative of the Italian High Commission in America, will sail for Europe in a few days, taking with him a duplicate negative and positive prints of the film.

"The Great Victory" will then be exhibited in all leading European centers, foreign exhibitors having already spoken for the first-run rights in their respective localities, according to report.

President Richard A. Rowland and Director General Maxwell Karger are especially enthused over the fact that this screen anticipation of actual history and description of autocracy's defeat will be seen on Christmas Day in Metz, former stronghold of the brutal rulership.

Moscow will be another city where "The Great Victory" will be exhibited. Throughout Russia the party handling this production will be piloted by Mapes Baird of San Francisco, who thoroughly knows Russia and its present changing conditions.

Paris, London, Brussels, Rome, Florence and Venice are among the cities where the exhibitions of this screen spectacle have already been scheduled.

"The Great Victory" is expected not only to make plain in a language all can understand the aims and achievements of the United States, but also to make for a better understanding of the allied nations by each other, to unify public sentiment, and aid in the establishment of permanent law and order.

Metro states that arrangements are being made for a private showing of "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser?" at the peace conference itself, in honor of President Wilson and the delegates to the conference. Many of these personages are said to be represented by players in the moving tableaux of important scenes in the production.

Clemenceau, Lloyd George, King Albert of Belgium, and other important factors in the conference may have the opportunity of seeing their own likenesses upon the screen.

Los Angeles Finally Is Allowed to Reopen

(Note—This report was received by ma previous to the telegram headed "Los A geles Closed" on page 3350)

After having been closed exactly thirty seven days the picture theatres of Los An geles were permitted to reopen Monday November 25, but not until after the cit health department had made a number c postponements of the date and caused n end of confusion and inconvenience to th motion picture exhibitors.

Motion picture theatres were closed b the orders of the Los Angeles Health De partment on Friday, October 11. Thi closing was followed by the suspension o operations on the part of all of the motio picture producing companies of Hollywoo and nearby points. A ban was placed o all public gatherings, yet following th close-down order the Spanish influenz made rapid strides.

In an effort to check the spread of th disease the motion picture men, both ex hibitors and film exchange managers, made an appeal to have the city close all places of business for one week, in order to stamp out the infection thoroughly, and which would have permitted a reopening at a much earlier date.

The proposition was discussed by the city council and health authorities, but no action was taken. The motion picture and theatrical industry of the city shouldered the loss almost alone and without complaint. It is estimated that the film and theatrical industry of Los Angeles lost about $6,000,000 gross on account of the epidemic.

With the reopening of the picture houses there was a big rush of patrons, but while a portion of the loss will be overcome by the increased business it will be very limited. The loss could not be overcome entirely under the most favorable conditions, but with the Christmas holidays a few weeks distant, with its unfavorable influence on amusement enterprises, exhibitors have been forced to the conclusion that they will be compelled to sustain the loss, with no chance of reimbursement.

About 50 per cent of the real estate owners have agreed to rebate the rentals on the theatre property during the ban period, while 25 per cent have agreed to rebate part of the rentals. This move on the part of the property owners has greatly lessened the burden of some exhibitors.

Fred Wade, Cameraman, Is Killed in France

News of the death in France of Fred Wade, a former cameraman, was received at Hollywood recently. Mr. Wade, according to the news received by his friends, was killed on the battlefield the early part of November.

He was well known in the Hollywood motion picture colony and for a long time was at the Vitagraph studio, later going to Horsley's studio. He was among the first to enlist in the Los Angeles contingent, and had been in France seven or eight months before he met his death.

Kunsky Hits National Advertising Idea

(Editor's Note:—This week's issue of Motion Picture News should carry additional interest to the exhibitor and producer through some of the opinions which John H. Kunsky, Detroit exhibitor, has set down for publication exclusively in this paper.

In this story Mr. Kunsky has summed up his twelve years of experience in the industry, and tells of the conclusions he has reached in regard to the way in which producers spend money to syndicate serials and to stick up big stands of paper.

Although Mr. Kunsky looks at the proposition mainly from a Michigan viewpoint, he declares his belief that the rest of the country is not unlike the Wolverine State.)

ONE of the greatest points of error by manufacturers and distributors which works difficulties of many descriptions for exhibitors is their ideas of national advertising for serials and special feature productions.

In my opinion, formed after twelve years of activity in the motion picture business, chiefly as an exhibitor, there is a useless and unprofitable expenditure of money, time and energy in the syndication of serial stories, or fiction versions of the scenarios for big feature releases. The manufacturers appear to think that this form of advertising and publicity will increase their revenue in rentals from exhibitors and help the exhibitor to increase his receipts on the production.

This belief is wrong, for the territory of Michigan to a certainty, and undoubtedly for any other territory in the country. The same error of judgment applies to the proposition of national billboard advertising by producers or distributors.

I have studied this phase of a number of national sales campaigns very carefully, and have compared the results in my own theatres with those of other exhibitors playing the same attractions, which were heralded to the public by billboards, syndicated newspaper stories, and syndicated advertising copy. The result for all of us has been the same.

When this form of exhibitor hoodwinking first appeared, it did impress hundreds of them, and for a time many exhibitors thought a serial or special feature could not be worth anything to them unless it was backed by a national advertising campaign conducted and financed by the producers or distributors. Today their attitude toward national advertising is just the reverse of what it was two years ago. They are no longer visibly impressed with a statement that a certain picture played four weeks, two months or longer on Broadway. They have come to the conclusion that their best and surest indication of screen values is the results experienced by the first run theatres in their respective territories on every new feature released.

In the last two years there has appeared in Detroit many billboard campaigns and half-page newspaper ads boosting various film productions of more or less merit. In practically every instance where national copy of this character has been used in Detroit, it has been prepared by the advertising managers of the producing companies to give the producer's name the most prominent position in the ad, with the name of the production or star secondary in importance. The producers seem to think more of themselves in their prepared ads for exhibitor use than they do of the production they are advertising, or want the exhibitor to spend his money to advertise. Does the public attend the theatre to see the producer or the picture?

A MANUFACTURER who persistently advertises himself in newspapers, trade journals or on the billboards, gains little prestige with the exhibitor, and makes his product of secondary importance. In fact, the thinking exhibitor is more apt to take just the reverse of the attitude hoped for by the self-advertised producer or distributor. He is apt to reason something like this: "Ego is a sign of mental weakness. If a producer displays personal ego and vanity in his advertising and publicity, he is warning us that there will be a weak spot somewhere in his product. Reasonable modesty is always a companion to genuine ability."

These Detroit campaigns I have referred to were only partly successful. They would have resulted in much greater returns to the exhibitors had the producers been imbued with the thought that a New York desk is not prolific with information about conflicting conditions in the different territories.

In the first place, the majority of the copy prepared in New York for these campaigns was atrocious. With scarcely a single exception, every one of the campaigns savored strongly of patent medicine advertising principles. I have never failed to note that syndicated advertising, sent to newspapers from the offices of producers, is prepared apparently by advertising agencies or writers who perform the same sort of service for manufacturers or sales agents of patent medicines. There is a blood and thunder exaggeration about all of them that is nauseating. Nor is this all that is wrong with the accepted theories of national advertising by producing organizations.

They do not take into consideration the very obvious fact that every successful theatre and every successful newspaper has an individuality of its own, and that it is the maintenance of this individuality which makes for continued success.

People in Detroit, the same as people in Kansas City, Buffalo, Cleveland, Denver, or any other city, are accustomed to reading certain newspapers or patronizing certain theatres because the style and individuality of the publication or house most appeals to them. If producers and distributors would take cognizance of this fact, and apportion their appropriations for national advertising on each production among their first run accounts, and let the individual exhibitors do the local newspaper advertising, they would show remarkable common sense, and follow a precedent which is almost as old as advertising, but apparently unheard of in the motion picture industry.

Detroit has had many of these syndicated advertising and publicity campaigns. They fooled the public and exhibitors for a time. Now they discourage both these elements. The national advertising offered to them in the newspapers has had such an unmistakable patent medicine flavor that the result has been the same as though it actually were advertising for that form of kill-or-cure. Its very appearance is against it, and reminds one of the country town papers whose pages are filled with syndicate advertising. The exhibitors and the public know this, and no matter how much money may be spent in thus advertising a production, little or no attention is paid to it. The exhibitor realizes that this is the work of the producer and to him that means very little tmore than the advertising in the trade papers, which, I am of the opinion, has little effect excepting as an announcement preceding the salesmen who handle the territory.

IN Michigan at least, eighty per cent. of the exhibitors depend upon the results of first runs for their opinions of the box-office value of releases. If they operate in cities or towns outside of Detroit they make it a point to take the Detroit daily papers to see which films are receiving the most publicity. The manufacturers and exchange men are aware of this fact, judging by the extremes to which they go to stretch out to as long a time as possible the first runs in the various houses, so as to impress the small town exhibitors with the idea that the productions of the moment are doing a wonderful business.

Now syndicate advertising will not lengthen the run of any production. But what will increase the number of play days for this initial run is the same amount of money spent in advertising that is directed solely at the theatre where the picture is being shown. This advertising must be prepared in the city where the theatre is located, so that it can carry the individual style of the particular newspaper in which it appears, instead of being set up like a medical ad, with the name of the producer spread all over the sheet. No matter what the manufacturer may think of a production, and irrespective of the claims he makes the ad, the public cares for nothing but the production. They do not want the personal opinion of a producer.

In this connection advertising matter could be altered so that the producers could provide exhibitors with coupons or some form of credit memorandum of local newspapers entitling him to a certain number of lines or inches of space in the publications of his choice for national advertising which would be getting somewhere near a practical basis. The exhibitor alone or with the cooperation of the local exchange manager, could prepare the copy, with all of the peculiarly local conditions taken into consideration in the framing of it. The very size of the advertising, in an arrangement of this kind, would convince other exhibitors that the first run account must have great faith in the merits of the production or he would not spend such a great amount of money in advertising it.

I have found it true that the film subjects which are most widely advertised in the newspapers by exhibitors usually do the most business, not only in the first run houses, but in the smaller theatres throughout the territory. Also, the amount of advertising placed by the first run accounts influences, to a great extent, the rental value of the subject to the smaller theatre owners. This advantage is lost entirely in the syndicated advertising used by the manufacturers under their present system.

If the manufacturers would arrange in some way such as a credit memorandum to give the first run exhibitors the direct benefit of their expenditures by permitting them to add the producer's appropriation for each city to the exhibitor's own appropriation for the picture, the first run account would be able to do a great deal more practical advertising, which would insure him more business, which would enable him to pay more rental for the booking, and the manufacturer, in turn, would receive a proportionately higher rental from every other exhibitor who plays the release in that particular territory.

I BELIEVE that the advertising for a motion picture subject must be entirely different from the advertising for a breakfast food or any other staple article, and that a trade mark means very little to the public. If the manufacturer can increase his revenue by advertising the star, which the exhibitor does anyhow, rather than advertise his trade mark, the trade mark will automatically advertise itself. The manufacturer who persistently advertises himself, rather than his goods, and generalizes instead of specializing on each particular production he has to offer to the public, gains little through his investments in advertising.

If the method which I have mentioned here were tried by one or two of the manufacturers I feel certain that it would be adopted by all producers within a very short time. It may not result in giving them ninety-six point prominence for their names in connection with a production, but it will give any manufacturer a greater return than he is getting by his present method of advertising expenditures.

Localization is the one practical form of cooperation between exhibitors and producers in advertising a production. Mint juleps are a popular drink in the South, but people north of the Mason and Dixon line seldom order them. The east likes the subways and lobster palaces, while the west wants plenty of outdoors and allows them. Every section of the country has its own peculiar and individual likes and dislikes. And this extends down into subdivisions of theatre localities. The exhibitor knows the whims and fancies of his locality, and he is best qualified to analyze them intelligently in advertising the productions booked for his theatre.

Producers are as wrong in their judgment of values in still pictures as they are in their judgment of practical production advertising for exhibitors. Our business consists of making motion pictures and selling them to the public. The closest relationship between a production and its advertising is in still pictures. Many beautiful photographs are sent to exchanges by producers for exhibitor use in local newspapers. Few practical stills for exhibitors use in local newspapers are ever available to him on any production.

Instead, we constantly have the curious and exasperating situation of stills showing two or three people in a pretty library set, staring at one another, with which to advertise a production entitled "The Open Range," or "The Midnight Hour."

Rarely have I booked a production worth lobby display space and newspaper advertising that did not have, somewhere in its action, scenes and situations which would make wonderfully effective stills for advertising and publicity work—stills in which the subject matter is a direct bid to curiosity and interest. But, for some reason, not in the least mysterious or difficult to find, the stills for that picture would require strenuous use of the imagination to figure their relationship to the feature.

This is a department of production which is almost as important to the wideawake exhibitors as the film itself. Exhibitors who know the value of advertising, and who understand how to advertise, are invariably hard put to write copy and make layouts that will harmonize with the title and the illustrations provided them.

It has always seemed to me that it would be a good investment for producers to equip each company with a man who knows how to make stills, and who is qualified by experience and study to select the scenes and situations best suited to use in newspaper advertising and publicity, and give him complete authority for this complement to every production. The accepted method of leaving the still picture problem up to the director is costing producers, distributors and exhibitors thousands of dollars annually. Some day, perhaps, they will wake up to this fact.

OF the many beautiful photographs sent out, it is surprising that the few which are useful that the men who take them have no conception of what type of picture will make the best newspaper cut. I believe that special three-quarter length or head and shoulder stills of stars in the costumes of the productions in which they appear should be made for each picture at release, and then retouched for newspaper use, and prints made from the negatives thus retouched sent out to the exchanges for distribution to exhibitors.

Earlier in this article I referred to the personal publicity advocates within the industry. That sort of thing is good exhibitor reading when the statements affect exhibitor interests, or encroach on their domain, but there is too much of the sort of copy which has no apparent excuse for publication excepting to flatter the vanity of the author by letting him see his name in print. Few exhibitors are impressed today with the propaganda publicity in the trade journals in behalf of the ability, ideas and personal opinions of producers or executives of producing companies. They find a better definition of individual values and abilities in what they see on the screen, and in the treatment they receive at the exchanges.

The Reader Has His Say

Humble Reviewer Tells Exhibitors a Few Things as Viewed Impartially

124 So. Lincoln St.,
Hinsdale, Ill.,
November 20, 1918.

MR. EXHIBITOR:

Here are a few unprejudiced impressions:

I am not an exhibitor, nor am I in any way connected with the production side of the industry. Therefore, I think I may safely claim impartiality in whatever I say. I'm not standing up for either side; but in this article I intend to give you exhibitors a few slams. Hard ones.

First, I admit that many poor films are foisted upon exhibitors by the exchanges and their salesmen, and that a great majority of these have no real drawing power.

But, in return you must grant that there are enough good pictures released to more than fill every day satisfactorily. With a little common sense in selection of pictures, and with proper presentation you should have no trouble at all pleasing your patrons. Build your success upon satisfaction rather than on a fluctuating box-office. If your house is well-liked, and your films up to a standard which will be recognized as connected with YOUR theatre, you will never have to worry about the drawing power of any star you may be showing. They will travel your way almost regardless of what you may have. Once started, it's up to you to keep them coming by remaining wide-awake.

Frankly, this howling against the producers shows you up for mighty poor business men. Your job isn't to distribute the producers' stuff among the people, but to SELL it to them, as he has sold it to you. You can sell them a poor product with a big star; but you cannot give satisfaction that way. You must make your THEATRE a drawing card, as the producer has made the name of his company a guarantee of quality. You have the choice of more than one concern's output—there's your advantage over the individual producer—and there is no reason on earth why, even if you can't personally see all your pictures, you should not succeed instead of merely making ends meet. By exploiting each film with an eye to its type, the people in your regular audience who will like it, and its advertising possibilities, you can fill your house regardless of whether you have booked a famous star or a "punchy" title. Reviewers are always at your service; and so are the trade journals. Add to this your opportunity to emulate the methods of such men as Rothapfel and Grauman on a smaller scale, and you have the ingredients of a successful theatre. If you fail to take advantage of everything which may help, don't blame the producer for giving you a lot of poor press material. Swallow your medicine decently, and own up that you are a flivver as a business man. Winning out in any business is a matter of plugging away all the time and keeping on the alert for something better. Relax and you are lost.

The fellow who expects others to do all the work for him while he rakes in the coin for his daily bread and gasoline is on the road to oblivion. There is only one way to succeed, and that is to USE THE BRAINS GOD GAVE YOU.

I'm trying to do that myself now, although I'm only a small-town reviewer.

WILBUR L. NEEDHAM.

Of All Towns in United States, This Was Hardest Hit by Influenza Plague

Silverton, Colo.,

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, INC.,
New York.

Gentlemen:

After looking over a recent issue of the NEWS, which, of course, is one of the most valuable motion picture books published, and it has helped me considerably in many ways.

I've especially noted the topic, "Bright Spots Appear on 'Flu' Map."

I'm very glad to see that the exhibitors are able to open and enjoy the regular excitement in the film life.

Gentlemen, I cannot help but give you an outline of this little town of Silverton, which is undoubtedly the worst "Flu" town in Colorado.

We have a small population of about 500 in the town and from 200 to 300 in the Hills.

All kinds of amusements and public gathering places were closed upon the first evidence of "Flu." I used my screen to advertise heavily, for two weeks before anything hit the city, regarding the preventing of this dreadful "Flu."

But the people did not heed the caution and the results are that there are over 300 cases of "Flu" in town and 85 or more in the Hills. Up to 3 P. M. Oct. 26, there was a total of 45 deaths, and more were expected at any time. This occurred in the last three days.

Five doctors and as many nurses as can be obtained were kept on the go continually. The hospital was full, and the City Hall has been turned into a hospital.

People were dying like sheep, the homes are full of sick and dead, and there is no one to look after them or take care of them. The Morgue is overflowing and bodies lie at their homes awaiting their turn to be taken to the Morgue. Out-of-town undertakers have been called, besides the numerous aliens, who are so willing to help, to aid in preparing the bodies.

Two cars were kept busy going to and from the cemetery with the dead. Grave diggers are badly in need and all who possibly can are doing this.

Two and three go from each family and people are cautioned to stay home, and not visit the sick or loiter in any manner. Only one person out of a family was allowed uptown at one time, and when going must wear a mask. The clerks in the stores and drivers of teams and autos are compelled to wear masks.

These are the conditions in this little town, and the top has not been reached, as more cases are reported every morning.

But, gentlemen, I am glad to be able to close my theatre in order to help stamp out this plague.

Yours truly,

(Signed) WILLIAM MAGUIRE,
Manager Gem Theatre,
Silverton, Colo.

Harry D. Naugle, late of Vitagraph, who died of influenza recently

Harry D. Naugle of Omaha Dies of Influenza

Harry D. Naugle, Western Division Manager of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, and one of the most promising young men in the film industry, died a victim of influenza at Omaha, Nebraska, on Saturday, November 23.

His death, coming with such suddenness, was a profound shock to his associates, and all who knew him, and the feelings of the Vitagraph organization members, were expressed in the following telegram which Walter W. Irwin, general manager, dispatched to Mr. Naugle's mother:

"I am totally unable to convey my personal sorrow and the sorrow of each member of the Home Office, as well as of the entire organization, because of the death of your son. Mr. Naugle had become not only my valued business associate, but my warm and greatly respected friend, in whom I placed the utmost confidence and reliance because of my respect for his business ability, soundness of judgment and exceeding high personal character. All who were privileged to know him held him in the highest regard and esteem as a man earnest, sincere, kind but strong. The loss of our friend and associate has produced feelings in us which make our sympathy for you and your family in your great sorrow inexpressible. One of his most beautiful characteristics was his unbounded love and devotion for you and the other members of his family. Each one joins me in wishing that it were in our power to relieve your distress."

National Association Back to Normal Routine

Now that the war is over the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is preparing to resume its regular work, which has been held more or less in abeyance during the war, and with this end in view the secretary has sent the following notice to the executive heads of the companies constituting the association:

"You are requested to file with us as soon as possible the names of the representatives of your company who are to serve upon the insurance committee, transportation committee and legal and legislative committee."

Replies to this notice enclosing the nominations are said to be coming in rapidly, but there are a few of the companies who have not yet sent in their replies.

Exhibitors Lose a Music Round

American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers Wins in California — No Agreement with Vaudeville Houses

CLOSE on the heels of the announcement that the National Association Exhibitors' branch has pledged itself, through President Peter J. Schaefer, to lead exhibitors to victory over the "dead bodies" of members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, comes the news that the latter organization has won the first round in the copyright struggle by winning judgment over a California exhibitor.

It is also announced by the American Society that it has not entered into an agreement with the V. M. P. A. whereby no tax is charged in the vaudeville theatres. The denial is considered by many to be a "black eye" for the exhibitors who have hoped to win out over the Society.

The first case brought to trial through the activities of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers against proprietors of establishments giving unlicensed performances of the works of their members, resulted in a decision being rendered by District Judge Bledsoe of the United States District Court for the Southern District of California. The action was brought against the proprietor of a motion picture theatre in Los Angeles, California, and was based upon Section 1 sub-division (e) of the Copyright Law which provides as follows:

"That any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this Act, shall have the exclusive right:

"(e) To perform the copyrighted work publicly for profit if it be a musical composition and for the purpose of public performance for profit."

The following is an extract from the opinion of the Court:

[illegible] an infringement of its copyright arising out of [illegible] selection was performed by his pianist in his house on at least one occasion in the month of March of this year. . . .

"As before stated the infringement complained [illegible] position.' . . . I am of the opinion that this 'b' of Section 25, supra, and that the minimum damages to be awarded for the infringement [illegible]

"The provisions for an allowance of 'ten dollars' must be held to apply where a large number [illegible] to be used by the Court as a basis of its computation of the entire damages by assessing each infringement at ten dollars; but in the event the total number of infringements, computed on the ten-dollar basis, do not amount to two hundred and fifty dollars, nevertheless, pursuant to the mandatory terms of the statute contained in the provision last above referred to relating to 'other cases,' the Court may not award damages in a sum less than two hundred and fifty dollars. So also, no matter how many separate infringements may be proved, the Court may not mulct the defendant in damages in excess of the maximum sum mentioned, to-wit: five thousand dollars.

"Plaintiff's counsel will therefore prepare a decree awarding damages in the sum of $250., the minimum amount named in the statute, and for attorney's fees in the sum of $100."

This decision is considered important by the Society as it fixes the minimum damage for infringements of the works of their members, at $250.

The Society has announced that hereafter it will prosecute to the full extent of the law the proprietors of establishments who continue to violate the provisions of the Copyright Law by using the musical compositions of their members without securing a license.

Notwithstanding this decision the Society is ready and willing to treat fairly with all applicants for licenses. It proposes to continue the rates heretofore used as a basis for issuing licenses, and intends to launch a campaign throughout the United States against all infringers.

Pathe Produces for Government

To Make First Government Propaganda Picture in Peace Times with Pearl White as Star

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., claims the honor of being the first company, and Pathe's star, Pearl White, the first film celebrity to make a government propaganda picture since Peace was declared.

Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe, announced that at the request of the U. S. Fuel Administration Miss Pearl White and her entire company has started work at the Pathe studio in Jersey City on this picture, which is designed to increase the production of coal per capita in the mining districts.

It will be the first of a number to be issued by the Fuel Administration in an earnest endeavor to bring coal production up to the absolute maximum. Mr. P. M. Alexander, of the Production Department of the Fuel Administration, stated briefly the purposes of the production campaign of the government of which the Pearl White feature will be the opening gun.

"The demand for coal," declared Mr. Alexander, "has increased rather than decreased with the coming of Peace. We must supply our Allies with coal more than ever and our shipping requirements will be greater than last winter.

Mr. Alexander asked to be permitted to publicly express the thanks of the Fuel Administration to Pathe Exchange, Inc., The Astra Company, Miss Pearl White, Director George B. Seitz, Scenario Writer Bertram Millhauser, and all others who have tendered their services to the government for this picture.

"Pathe is to be complimented upon its splendid patriotism which is just as loyal and energetic in peace times as when the shadow of war lay heavy upon us," said Mr. Alexander in conclusion.

Miss White will interrupt the making of her serial, "The Lightning Raider," to do the Fuel Administration feature and will work steadily upon the Government picture to the exclusion of all other effort until it is completed. George Seitz, Director for Miss White, will direct the Government picture, and the scenario is by Bertram Milhauser.

Universal Is in Market for Big Stories

The Universal issued an announcement early this week that it was in the market for big plays, old and new, from the spoken stage, or big novels or stories, old or new. The material is sought for adaptation to forthcoming productions by this company.

In furtherance of the search, a special request was issued to the heads of all departments to personally scour their memory and make efforts to discover film subjects in past or current literature.

"The greater and more famous the story is," said Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, "the better we will like it. Price will not be an obstacle. We are ready to pay a big figure for the material that meets our requirements."

It was stated that the Universal has adopted the policy of producing several big pictures whose names are from the store of literary treasure. The name of the story or play, or that of its author, will be employed as the principal asset of the film in each case, and that of the star will be secondary.

"The film industry has reached the stage now where its most responsible leaders are educated to the full value of the story as the chief ingredient of a production's success," said Mr. Laemmle.

T. F. McTyer of Atlanta Passes Away

Southern District Manager, T. F. McTyer, died in Atlanta on November 19 after a severe illness of two weeks, removing from the organization of General Film Company one of its most energetic and capable sales executives.

Word reached the New York headquarters of the company when his illness became acute that Mr. McTyer wished to retire, following a siege of poor health which had troubled him during the summer and fall. With the hope that he would improve no successor was appointed, but Mr. McTyer succumbed after a rapid decline.

Before joining General Film Company last spring Mr. McTyer was connected with the Paramount organization at Atlanta. He was one of the South's best known film men and was noted for his successful methods. At the time of his death he was supervising the Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas offices of General.

Fox Exchange Managers Are Transferred

Charles Muehlman, formerly manager of the Denver exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, has been transferred to the management of the San Francisco exchange, where he is now in charge, and supplants George Mann, who has become connected with the management of the Rialto theatre, San Francisco.

Leonard A. Quill, formerly salesman of the William Fox exchange in Pittsburgh, has been promoted to manager of the Denver exchange and assumed his new duties November 26.

"MADE IN AMERICA"

December 22 is First Release of These Single Reelers

PRODUCED by Ashley Miller with the co-operation of the Government through the Department of Films, the "Made In America" single reels will start to appear on December 22 and continue for eight straight weeks.

These reels are said to be different from other photoplays based upon the war and it is stated that their dramatic action does not depend upon the horrors of the battlefields nor the exploitation of the vast German spy system or Wilhelmstrasse intrigue.

The story is declared to be of American valor and American sacrifice and its principal characters are said to be typical Americans whose counterparts are to be found in a million American homes.

It deals in a unique way with camp life from the day the draftee is "shot" with six million germs, up to the time he is rewarded with the medal of honor for bravery under action and exceptional heroism. It is felt by the producers that the returned soldier who sees it will smile and grip the back of his chair and wish that he was back in camp again.

The "Made In America" series of eight single reels along this line are heralded as apart and distinct from other single reel films.

About New Pictures

"Proposing Bill," which is "Smiling Bill" Parson's latest Capitol Comedy released by Goldwyn, is said to emphatically prove that Parsons is one of the few truly great comedians of the screen.

"The Girl Dodger," Charles Ray's new Paramount picture produced by Thomas H. Ince, is a college story.

A unique Christmas tree celebration is seen in Bert Lytell's forthcoming Metro picture, "Hitting the High Spots," written by himself and directed by Charles Swickard.

Completely recovered from the recent operation on his left leg which he underwent for the removal of a bullet which had been there fifteen years, Tom Mix has begun photographing a new William Fox-Victory Picture at Hollywood.

"Hear 'Em Rave!"—Rolin comedy, featuring hilarious Harold Lloyd, released by Pathe December 1, is said to be a typical laugh-maker for the agile comedian.

Ten cowboys assisted Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat," the entire production of which was made in Wyoming. This is the diva's second Goldwyn Picture, released December 1.

Ethel Clayton's newest Paramount offering, "Women's Weapons," was written by Beulah Marie Dix and directed by Robert Vignola and released November 24.

King Baggot's skill as a sharpshooter is said to be demonstrated in the coming Screen Classics, Inc., super-feature, "The Man Who Stayed at Home."

Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto, has just signed a contract to show all the William Fox Standard Pictures, which are released on a basis of twenty-six a year.

Harold Lloyd, the Rolin star, is said to be a modest, quiet and unassuming young man, off the screen.

Newspaper Strike Hurts Rochester Theatres

When the printers' strike at Rochester, N. Y., was so successful as to stop publication of the newspapers for three straight days, the first-run theatres particularly suffered very heavily in consequence.

Coming after the influenza epidemic had placed such a heavy loss upon them, it appeared to be a double calamity.

The worst sufferers among the picture houses were the downtown theatres which had a change of bill on Thursday and which had no chance to announce their new show or to profit by a newspaper review. The Regent and Piccadilly theatres, controlled by the Regorson Corporation, hit upon a good idea to turn the situation to their own use by throwing news bulletins on the screen at intervals.

Arthur P. Kelly, publicity man of the Regorson Corporation, succeeded in arranging to have Associated Press dispatches sent over from an afternoon newspaper, which of course was unable to use them, and have bulletins prepared from them. By this means the theatres succeeded not only in dispensing news among their patrons which otherwise would have been unknown, but did valuable service in dispelling the host of wild, unfounded rumors that spread throughout the city in the absence of authentic news.

Among such rumors was one that Japan had declared war on the United States and another that the epidemic of Spanish influenza was raging again as violently as ever.

War Review to Continue Until News Subsides

At a conference held in the office of Marcus A. Beeman, acting director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, between the various interests concerned in the production and distribution of the Official War Review, it was definitely decided that the Review would be continued as long as the pictorial news coming from Europe made it possible to keep up the present high standard of the weekly issues.

Among those present at the conference were representatives of the Division of Films, Pathe and the Bureau of Official British Films in the United States.

"Wings of Victory," Next U. S. A. Two-Reeler

"When Your Soldier's Hit," the first of the U. S. A. series of two-reelers announced by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, will be released December 23. "The Bath of Bullets," which was scheduled for the second picture of the series, has been set back, and the first release will be followed in January by "Wings of Victory," which tells the story of how, after seemingly insurmountable difficulties, the production of war 'planes in the United States reached notable proportions. Every phase of the making of the Government airplanes is shown.

What They Say About the J. A. Quinn Letter

the flags and I'll cook up somethin' that'll get by. "Good-bye, Bill, you are the stuff, don't know how I could get along without you."

They go to it, cut out a lot of scenes from the news weeklies, cook up something and put out a lot of red-hot advertising matter, call it a special, get three times what Nazimova in "Revelation" cost the theatre and think they have put something by.

My town is a small one, less than 5,000 people, and there are two theatres here. Of course, we do not feel the scarcity of good films as they must in the larger places as we have more to choose from. But it is bad and needs changing.

(Signed) E. N. COLLINS,
Liberty Theatre, Electra, Texas.

Editor Motion Picture News:

UNDOUBTEDLY almost every subscriber of the M. P. News has read Mr. Quinn's letter in the issue of November 16, commenting on Mr. Kleine's suggestions.

In your editorial you dare us—one and all—to start something by writing a brief letter to you regarding Mr. Quinn's views. I, for one, hope that you will receive at least 5,000 replies. Here's mine:

There is no doubt in my mind that all exhibitors agree with Mr. Quinn's statements. (I am speaking from an exhibitor's standpoint only.) We have too many bad and mediocre pictures. We must stop the production of such pictures. It was said that we ought to do this and we ought to do that and no one says HOW to do it. If there are enough exhibitors in this country with the "let's do it NOW" spirit, there will be no more rotten pictures on anybody's screen, not one-tenth of the wasted money will be spent and we all, as Mr. Quinn says, would have a whole lot less headaches. You have started this and it remains to be seen if we, exhibitors, will do the rest.

What benefit would every exhibitor derive if bad pictures would be eliminated? If the many press departments would be human like the rest of us, and write ads that would be a help to us; if they would stop sending us tons of literature which we don't look at? Let it be repeated that we are paying for all of it and we would save that money which would be used to better advantage. Can anyone figure it out, or will the producers themselves supply the figures? It costs a lot of money to supply 15,000 theatres and thousands of newspapers with waste basket material. How much longer will we pay the bill?

So far no one has offered any practical suggestions and to start things I suggest the following:

Let us make the M. P. News headquarters. Some one like Mr. Quinn who is willing to help accomplish this end should organize a committee and conceive a way of getting the exhibitors together after being assured that we are all together willing. Let us show that we are willing by writing to headquarters TODAY.

What practical suggestions can you make to stop—1. Bad Pictures; 2. Needless advertising. (Anything else?)

My suggestions:

1—BAD PICTURES.

Let us all decide not to use another bad picture and very few if any mediocre offerings. If we all pledge ourselves to do it it can be done. If every exhibitor will insist to add another clause to a contract which will give the exhibitor the privilege of canceling a picture, which in his estimation is not a good picture, a privilege which we have wth some distributing organizatons, the "punk" pictures will be very scarce. Some exhibitors may not be able to do this on account of competition but there does not seem to be any reason why competing exhibitors could not get together on this point. If bad pictures are not shown anywhere they are a total loss to the producer and the results are plain. Is this suggestion practical? Does any other exhibitor know of a better way? LET HIM SPEAK NOW.

2—WASTE BASKET MATERIAL.

We all get it in large quantities. Most of the stuff is not worth glancing over. I suggest to carefully save it for a month, classify it, and return it to the senders with a letter stating just what we think of it and how useless it is. If several thousand exhibitors would do this during the next month there will be a radical change. Remember that it pays us to do it as WE pay for all this stuff in the long run. Your newspapers, go and see the editor, tell him to save all the dope he gets, ask him what he thinks of it and what he would like to have, mail it all back yourselves and tell them what he said. I am going to do it. What do you think of the idea?

There are many other things to be changed which should be included in our program, but it is best to see what response your "starter" will bring.

Are we ready? We'll see within a week.

West Coast Directors Approve His Plan

THE West Coast directing fraternity has come forward in support of J. A. Quinn and his ideas for curing some of the ailments of the industry. Forty directors in a bunch have wired MOTION PICTURE NEWS to that effect, as follows:

"Special meeting November 25 with about 40 directors present unanimously endorsed J. A. Quinn's plans for putting the industry on a more sane and equitable basis. Utmost confidence is felt by all that with Mr. Quinn's spirit of fairness and co-operation and thorough knowledge his tour of the country will reap great results." (Signed) G. P. Hamilton, acting secretary.

Lois Weber wired MOTION PICTURE NEWS as follows: "Three cheers for J. A. Quinn and MOTION PICTURE NEWS. We have started what we have long been waiting for, and with Mr. Quinn's energy and forcefulness and truthfulness of his contention I look for big results from his trip through the country with the ultimate object of better pictures and putting the industry on a more equitable basis."

Harry Poppe Exploiting Houdini Serial

Harry H. Poppe has been appointed director of advertising and publicity for Octagon Films, Inc., which is handling B. A. Rolfe's super serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, the handcuff king.

He succeeds John W. Grey, who will hereafter devote all his time to writing serials in collaboration with Arthur B. Reeve. Poppe has had wide experience in advertising and publicity capacities with both motion picture and theatrical companies.

His last connection was with the Yorke-Metro company, which produced features starring the late Harold Lockwood.

There were Burrows, Moulton, Smith and more,
But why recall things which were done of yore?

But now to the Society of M. P. Engineers,
Their life's been a success, here's to future years.

Big Meeting December 10 of National Association

A special meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been called for Tuesday, December 10, for the purpose of considering the question of amending the by-laws so that the newly created exhibitors' branch may have a fifty per cent representation on the Board of Directors and all committees of the Association.

The meeting will be held at the Association rooms in the Times Building at eleven o'clock in the morning. This meeting has been called pursuant to the action taken at the last quarterly meeting of the board of directors as by-laws can only be amended by the members of the organization.

Leads New York Theatres in War Work Fund

A. L. Shakman, president and managing director of the Eighty-first Street theatre in New York, has every reason to feel very proud of the fact that his theatre is reported to have eclipsed all others in the metropolis in the recent War Work Drive.

Although the Eighty-first Street did not start its campaign until Monday after the drive had been already under way for two days, the managers, employes and patrons contributed the grand total of $16,070 for the fund.

Getting the Woman Appeal

Cuts of Attractive Stars Are the Best Things to Make All Your Possible Patrons Read Your Displays

AFTER all advertising is human nature. People like to look at things attractive and a beautiful face or figure will catch the eye quicker than anything else. And for that reason the use of striking pictures, especially of women stars, is one of the most essential things in good advertising.

There is a wide difference of opinion as to the use of the picture of a single star or a scene picture in advertising each production. Our opinion is that where there is a single dominating star in the production that it is always better to use a picture of the star alone in the role in which she appears in the particular film or a scene in which she dominates.

Naturally, to do this a theatre will have to make its own cuts because attractive half tones of this character are too seldom supplied by the producers. This costs money, but there isn't the slightest doubt in the world that where you have the facilities at hand it pays good dividends in the long run. You can always be very sure that the more attractive you make your display the more people you are going to get into your theatre.

This article is confined to consideration of women stars, because, in the first place, they are generally in the majority and because in the second place you usually can get better results with a real action picture in case of the male actors. Although there is undoubtedly something of the matinee idol worshipping class left among motion picture audiences we do not believe that the actual appearance of the actor (in the illustration) carries so much weight as does the suggestion of the sort of a role that he is to play.

With a woman star the appearance does count a great deal. Show a picture of an ugly woman—excepting of course cuts of girls that the public knows to be pretty in slavey, or similar roles—and you wont have much trouble taking care of your patronage. Use the attractive picture of a woman and you will certainly get the attention of all the men for the mere purpose of admiring beauty if nothing more. And we believe that you will get the attention of the women for the same reason. But a very successful woman designer of motion picture advertising gave us a different reason why it paid to use cuts of women stars. She said:

"Did you ever walk down the street with a woman and note the way that she looks at the costumes of other women, or did you ever stop to think how she will comment on the appearance of others? Women are always anxious to see how others look. A man may be attracted for a moment by a pretty face or form, but the woman will stop to study what the woman had on. That is the reason why I jump at every opportunity I have to use a striking cut of a woman in a stunning gown. In the days when Louise Glaum was appearing in Triangle productions in vampire roles I found that I could pack the women into the theatre by using pictures of her, the more daring the better."

We give that opinion for what it is worth, but it does sound reasonable. During the writer's experience as a motion picture editor and through the scores of requests that came for pictures of the players from fans, it was found that three times as many girls asked for photographs of women stars as there did for the men. It is a natural curiosity for women to be interested in members of their own sex and there is no place better to gratify it than in the newspaper advertising space.

This comment is not based purely on the individual advertisement for one of the chief things that you have to consider is the surroundings that your display will have. With the exception of a few cities where advertising has reached a mighty high quality you will find that the majority of the newspaper displays do not carry illustrations and if they do use any at all they are willing to content themselves with more or less meaningless scene pictures just as the cuts come from the producers. It is obvious that a display that gets the attention first and holds it is worth many times as much as that which fails to do this. And right here the expense of cuts is more than justified.

And aside from getting the attention "class" has a lot to do with motion picture advertising. Everyone in your city may be perfectly familiar with the physical appearance of every theatre in town and may be intimately acquainted with the quality of your offerings, but still where everything is anywhere near equal the appearance of the newspaper advertising will get the business.

On the opposite page we have reproduced a number of displays illustrated by cuts, all of them women with one exception, and then a display without a cut in order that you may get the contrast of the non-cut advertisement with the more attractive one. These displays have been arranged so that in their original form the whole group occupied an entire newspaper page. Now we haven't ever yet seen a full page of advertising that contained so many attractive displays as there are here, but we have done this purposely in order to show now only how you can get an appeal far greater than the mere type affair by the use of cuts, but how a group of theatres all using cuts can each one get over its individual appeal.

Glance at this page and see if your eye doesn't travel from one to the other and that then you go back and read all of the type matter—with the exception of that of the Isis theatre, Indianapolis.

Two of these displays, that of the Majestic, Detroit, which occupies eight inches, three columns and that of the Metropolitan, Cleveland, O., have a physical appeal. If we could reproduce all of the advertisements that appeared in that issue of the Detroit papers you would have evidence of how this display stands out above all of the others. In the first place the Majestic has broken away from the Detroit habit of using a black block with the name of the theatre in white as name plates and is doing something in the way of designing advertising. Here the figure of the woman is made to stand out and it certainly gets more than a passing glance. The men will stop to look at it, and as our woman ad writer says, "the women will want to see what she has on."

Evelyn Thaw's picture attracts attention for the same reason, but the objection that we have to this display is that there is absolutely no selling argument with the picture. In our humble opinion the use of handsome pictures in advertising is to get the attention of the reader, and then to cause him to read the reasons why you are appealing for his patronage. When you merely get the patronage and then let the reader go on you have failed to make the most out of your space. And by selling argument we do not mean that you have to tell "all about" a production. The Majestic hasn't done that either, but it has told you the character of the production and has used the name of Lois Weber prominently, as well as naming some of the members of the cast. And we believe that a catch line would have improved this display, though the Majestic is largely selling the theatre itself.

Two of the theatres, the Alhambra, Indianapolis, and the America, Denver, have used splendid half tones of the stars that would apply in the case of any productions in which they appear. We printed an article last week telling you the way that Charles G. Branham, of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, utilized the cuts that he had one employed in the newspaper news layouts for his advertising later. And we told you that he then filed these half tones and used them with later productions.

Don't use the same cut over and over again within a short time, but don't ever throw one of them away unless the player has died. Even if you have to devote a considerable space in your theatre to filing these pictures it will pay you mighty well in the long run.

Getting the Woman Appeal Into Your Advertising Is an Easy Thing

Very often the position in which you place the cut in a succeeding advertisement has a great deal to do with providing variety. For instance suppose you switch the styles of the Alhambra and the American displays and you see that you would have two entirely distinctive cuts to use.

And this reminds us: Don't use the illustrations in the same spot constantly. The very arrangement of your display has a lot to do with it. Advertisers expert with the employment of borders can get wonderfully different effects from time to time and they leave the impression that you are doing things "different." We believe that while theatres often do well to adopt a style in advertising that this style ought to be constantly changed, to a degree, in everything except the name plate of the theatre.

Now the Isis, Houston, Texas; the Strand, Bridgeport, Conn., and the Colonial, Indianapolis, have all used cuts that have been provided by the producers. In the case of the Dolly Sisters the entire advertisement except the name of the theatre, the date and the matter at the bottom is a plate supplied by Metro. Here we vary a little from the halftone and this makes a good attention attracting ad because the first thing that suggests itself to every reader is: "How much do they look alike?" and the drawing gives an even better chance to play upon that point than would photos.

Isis theatre uses only four inches across three columns, but it has the best display in any of the Houston papers and it cost little because one of the stock cuts supplied by Select formed the main portion of it. Put it beside the Isis of Indianapolis and ask yourself which one you would read first.

Colonial theatre, Indianapolis, has used a cut supplied by Goldwyn. Now this is a picture with a male star and we have purposely reproduced it because there is a woman in the picture, too. There's an essential reason for her being there. The clever selling line is "He dared to love the daughter of the richest man in town." And after you have read that your first desire is to know what that richest girl in town looks like and when you have the opportunity to see her picture the interest in the production is carried much further.

Clinton Square, Albany, N. Y., has lost much of the pulling power of the Norma Talmadge cut by the way that it is made and by the position in which it is placed. With mighty few exceptions these half tones should be stripped, that is, the background should be taken out unless it is some essential part of the picture. The black background here only serves to keep the picture from becoming prominent. If it had been outlined there would have been much better results.

But there is another lesson from this display. Don't use a half tone and then "hedge it in" with type. When you do that you make the illustration secondary when it should be the attention-drawing element. The cut really has no chance here. It should have been used at the top of the display and it should have been kept further away from the type.

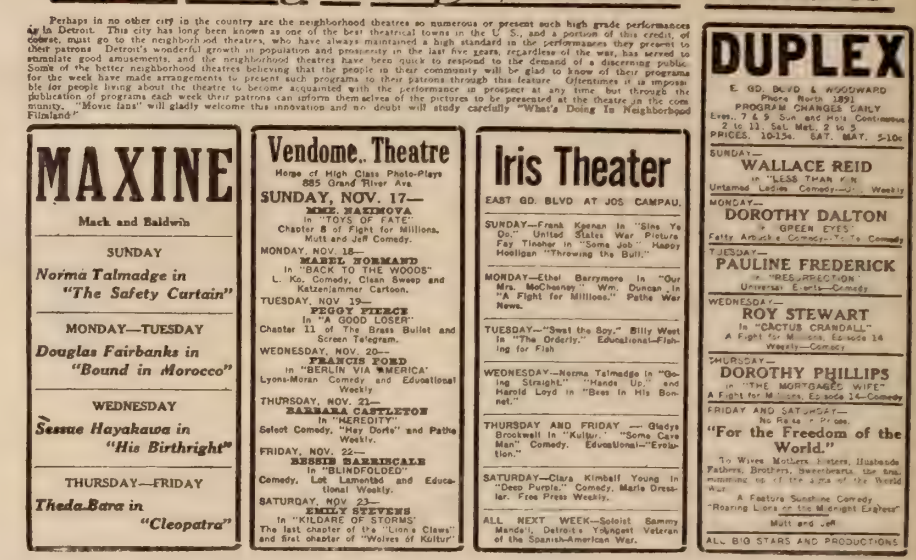
Plenty of white space is absolutely essential to get results with cuts. Just because it requires ample space to bring out one of these half tones, don't then make the error of thinking that because you have a lot of space you have room for a bunch of reading matter. You immediately refute the reason for employing more room.

Our opinion is that there are mighty few cases where a motion picture advertisement without cut will attract as much attention as one with them. Above everything else use the pictures of attractive women whenever you get a chance. Another glance at the displays reproduced is answered without any further argument.

It will pay you to have these cuts made, and after you get them save them for future use. If you cannot have them made use the stock cuts furnished by the exchanges as best you can and then keep on urging them to give you better product. But remember that "economy" in advertising is just as much bad policy as cheapness in making the production itself.

Keep the personal element strong in your woman stars, and cuts provide the way to do this.

"What's Doing in Neighborhood Filmland"



Perhaps in no other city in the country are the neighborhood theatres so numerous or present such high grade performances as in Detroit. This city has long been known as one of the best theatrical towns in the U. S., and a portion of this credit, of course, must go to the neighborhood theatres, who have always maintained a high standard in the performances they present to their patrons. Detroit's wonderful growth in population and prosperity in the last five years, regardless of the war, has served to stimulate good amusements, and the neighborhood theatres have been quick to respond to the demand of a discerning public. Some of the better neighborhood theatres believing that the people in their community will be glad to know of their programs for the week have made arrangements to present such programs to their patrons through this feature. Oftentimes it is impossible for people living about the theatre to become acquainted with the performance in prospect at any time but through the publication of programs each week their patrons can inform themselves of the pictures to be presented at the theatre in the community. "Movie fans" will gladly welcome this innovation and no doubt will study carefully "What's Doing In Neighborhood Filmland?"

How War Routed Foes of the Pictures

By Edward L. Hyman

Director, Film Division, War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities

THE film men are not looking for any floral wreaths for anything they may have done to help the Allies wind up the watch on the Rhine.

I know that!

Whenever I approached the real head of a real motion picture distributing organization and said:

"The War Department Commission on Camp Activities wants to show your stuff to the fellows in the camps," the chief did not hem and haw, but generally replied:

"You can have all of our stuff, and it won't be the old junk, either."

As film director for the Commission I know that the film companies even sacrificed big-money bookings that a camp might have a certain big production at a certain time.

The film men deserve monumental credit, but I'm not going to gush over it, for real patriots aren't looking for "credit" with a bushel basket.

Where Companies Gained

Yet, when a film organization consented to furnish pictures for the Liberty theatres at a very low price, they were gaining an advantage that couldn't be counted in dollars.

And in continuing to supply film to the Liberty theatres during the long days before actual demobilization and depopulation of camps they are still going to add to the drawing-power of their stars.

Exhibition of films in Liberty theatres has served manifold purposes. It has kept soldiers out of the "blue" valley of discontent, it has builded morale—but above those things, and getting down to a selfish motive, it has advertised the movies and stars and producing companies to men who in civilian life cared nothing for the cinema and did not know W. S. Hart from Douglas Fairbanks.

The soldier had to have recreation within the camp. Eventually he had to seek out the movies, whether or not he was a fan. Let us say desperation drove him to pick out a seat before the screen in a Liberty theatre. He found that movies weren't so bad after all. Perhaps before he entered the army he never had had time for films. Anyway, he had the movies introduced to him in a new light.

Movies' Foes Routed

Therefore, in lawyer language, Mr. Anti-Movie Fan became converted to the shadow form of amusement. He found it a pleasant evening's diversion. Movies hadn't meant anything in his life before.

And now that the really hard days of training in camp are past, the hours from now until he steps aboard a train bound for home, are going to pass the more slowly, and he is going to turn to the movies in the Liberty theatre more and more.

He will have more time to study the stars, the productions, the beneficial effects of an evening with a high-class screen play. The names and faces of the stars are going to impress themselves more indelibly upon his brain, and when he returns to civilian life he is bound to have a warmer spot for the movies than he had before.

Fondness for music is increased by the orchestras at the Liberty theatres. Here are the boys playing at Camp Devens, Mass., Liberty theatre

The best stars have been provided him in the Liberty theatre and he is going to seek them out when he gets back to his regular job, and he is due to steer his family or his sweetheart to the house where they hold forth.

The Liberty theatre has thus helped the motion picture by bringing the good ones to men who either did not become initiated to the amusement before they entered the army, or who were content to see the cheap stuff. The distributing organizations who co-operated won't lose anything by the trouble they go to in furnishing the Liberty theatres with film. They are going to have more fans than ever after the war and bookings are going to be longer and more profitable.

Not only have movies been helped by the war but the movies have aided toward a quick and successful culmination.

Raised the Morale

Film was used in camp Liberty theatres to combat sexual blemishes bound to appear in every camp. Morale officers used the Liberty screen to reveal the ill-effects of sexual dissipation. The men had to attend these exhibitions of scientific film. And you can bet your boots that many of these showings aided in strengthening this much-used element of the military, called MORALE.

The Liberty theatre screen was also utilized to reveal the manual of arms and many a doughboy learned the correct positions necessary to making a good soldier from the Liberty screen. Physical exercises were also exploited to them by the same means. Of course these showings were held in the morning or at such time as they would not interfere with the regular amusement performances.

The Liberty theatre also brought the movies to a class never before reached. For the first time these men learned the possibility of the movies as an educator.

With Conscientious Objectors

Many a conscientious objector changed his tune after he had viewed photoplays shown in a Liberty theatre which had been designed to expel the fallacious ideas harbored by this misled class. After one showing of a certain film at the Camp Pike, Atlanta, Liberty theatre, to several hundred conscientous objectors, twenty-five of them admitted their mistake and became patriots and good soldiers.

These are only a few of the ways in which films aided in welding a vast and potent army. I could quote a dozen examples of how film showings infused patriotism into men in which it had been ebbing. But backgrounding all these possibilities was the effect it had of keeping the men within camp and away from those things outside which are not good for the soldier away from home.

Cooperation Given

The real men in the film industry cooperated with the Liberty theatre—First—because they wanted to help, and Second—because they foresaw the value of showing pictures at a loss to men who in after years would be the dominant factor in the citizenry of the nation. Their generosity will be a boomerang of blessing not only to the soldier but to themselves.

The men in the camps now need films more than ever. They are restless, eager to get home, but demobilization takes time. That is why the film industry must for a time at least continue its splendid, all-American co-operation.

Your Idea and Ours

YOU who have been following these columns carefully during the past year or more will probably remember that quite a few displays of the Academy of Music, Selma, Ala., appeared here, and that it was generally good advertising, considering the facilities that were offered by the newspapers of that city. This manager has now gone to Birmingham, where he is manager of the Strand.

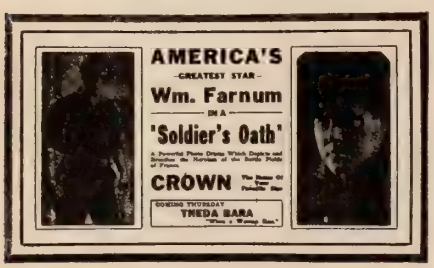
This is a splendidly written display, the selling arguments are good, the balance is right—but the composition is not good. It is a nice looking advertisement, but there is nothing about it to catch the eye. As a matter of fact, the most prominent thing about the whole thing is the trade marks. Unfortunately they are so arranged as to make them stand out stronger than the names of the production. The producer never meant that the trade mark be the whole one thing. He recommends the use of them as a guarantee of the production and as a linking up with the national campaign. And we do not understand that so long as the theatre uses the trade marks of the manufacturer he does not use his own—a distinctive name plate for his theatre. The Strand uses seven and one-half inches across three columns.

Do the patrons of your theatre come out "for air," or with atmosphere?

CERTAINLY the only reason for using two cuts in an advertisement is that each one of them has a meaning—that each is used for its pulling power. Now there isn't the slightest excuse in the world for having employed two cuts in this five-inch, four-column display of the Crown theatre,



Houston, Tex., except that the designer wanted to get that "beautifully balanced" effect that we have condemned so often. The cuts are largely the same except that one is a full length figure and Farnum has his hat off in it.

The result of this display has been that the theatre has not taken advantage of the space that it bought. The selling argument of the picture is subordinated to a couple of pictures and a space consuming border. With the same amount of space used, except ten inches, double-column, one of the pictures could have been used in the upper left hand corner with the Ben Day border running into it, and then the theatre could have put over a smashing effect.

Get your steam up and be sure that the valve of advertising is open.

FROM an artistic standpoint this quarter page display of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, O., is one of the best that we have ever seen. Mrs. Grossman, who designs this advertising, is in a class by herself, and we seldom differ with her displays, but here we have to, because the appeal is made too distinctly to the followers of Miss Marsh.

Now the illustration, bringing in the star

STANDARD
PROSPECT & EAST 9
MAE MARSH
in
HIDDEN FIRES
Mae Marsh's circle of admirers will delight in her latest GOLDWYN offering in which for the first time in her career the brilliant artist portrays a dual role in her two roles, gives the suggestion of the double role, but that is the whole thing that the ad mentions. It appeals directly to "Miss Marsh's circle of admirers." Now no matter how popular a star may be, we do not believe that the best results are obtained in appealing only to those who want to see her anyway. There ought to be something in the display that will make all of the people, whether they are particular admirers of the Goldwyn star or not, want to come. Yes, it's all right to get the Mae Marsh following, but at the same time make the appeal to the whole world.

Trouble with the kaiser was that he was living long after the age of despots; how far is your theatre existing behind the time?

LAST week we had something to say about the way that M. Kashin was exploiting Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chaplin at the Broadway theatre. That referred particularly to the lobby display, but he followed the same idea in all of his newspaper advertising.

In this one, which occupied twelve inches across three columns, it will be noted that he grouped pictures of the comedian and Mildred Harris in true matrimonial style. It will also be noted that he did not mention the name of either picture in the main portion of the advertising, but one had to look for the program to find this.

Many of the larger theatres are adopting the idea of publishing their full programs in the newspapers. We think that it is a mighty good idea. Of course the program that is handed a patron when he enters the theatre is not the thing that has brought him there, so why not let him know the whole thing in advance and make the entire program help get business for you?

A slip of the pen makes UNITED UNTIED.

ONE of the things that makes the editing of this department so pleasant is the way in which suggestions that are made here are accepted. It is all the more pleasing for before "Your Idea and Ours" came into existence publications seemed to think they had to praise everything the exhibitor did whether it was good or not. They did not seem to realize that the exhibitor needed real, helpful advice. So we have not hesitated to step on toes and we have always found that our criticisms are accepted in the vein they are offered—for the betterment of the exhibitor.

We recently published here an article on advertising the double bill and trying to advertise them equally. The Strand theatre, Providence, R. I., was one of those included, and so we are mighty glad to publish this display as an example of what we consider just about the perfect way to display a double feature bill. It occupies three columns, ten inches.

What Live Wires are Doing

Some theatre managers "make a show" out of themselves.

ASIDE from entering into a discussion whether strictly war pictures are going to continue to go or not, let us make the observation that they will not go unless the exhibitors themselves are up on their toes and making the effort to put them over. Now no matter how good may be the original exploitation of these pictures already released, you must remember that this matter was prepared by the producers even before the release and that when the advertising was written the end of the war was most uncertain. No matter how good the matter may have originally been there is no reason why it should be run blind.

Now by the use of just one line the Star theatre, Portland, Ore., has unquestionably brought "Crashing Through to Berlin" up to the very minute. There is no faking about it, for the picture really does show "Why the Allies Won." Otherwise, with the exception of lettering in the name of the theatre, the four-column eight-inch display is the unchanged ad.

Advertising makes the box-office grow stronger.

THIS display of the Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, is one of the best evidences of using portraits of the star that we have seen. In nine inches across three columns the designer has created a display that one cannot avoid. The name of the star and the larger picture of her simply jump right out at you. We like the way the smaller pictures are arranged. While the main attention is focused on the larger picture, these smaller ones seem to have the effect of getting added attention from each eye.

The selling argument is well placed under the title of the picture, all within the circle.

We are also mighty glad to see that the UNQUESTIONABLY it does pay a distributor to design good advertising. And this proves it, and if you follow us you will see the reason why. Now, aside from any arguments for or against syndicate control, it is nevertheless true that where syndicate control does prevail advertising suffers as a consequence. And in this respect Philadelphia is one of the poorest advertising cities in the country, though the fault must also be shared by the newspapers, most of whom utterly fail in cooperation.

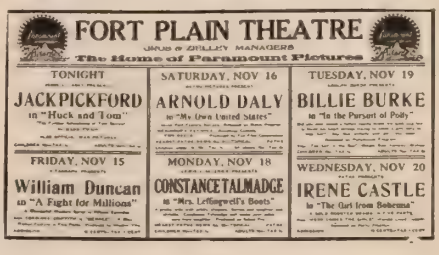
We are writing without pretending to know the facts, but it appears to us that when this advertisement came to the Victoria from the First National it was heralded as such a good one that it was decided to use this unusually large space—for Philadelphia. So 8½ inches across three columns was employed to good advantage. Other Stanley theatres were arranged in small space below this display, which dominated the entire amusement page.

If exhibitors are going to be expected to do bigger advertising, they must be encouraged by the producers and distributors through the preparation of intelligent copy.

Parsimony leaves the ease part out of money.

FORT PLAIN, N. Y., a town of less than 3,000, has only a weekly newspaper to use, and it does use this liberally, carrying six inches across five columns. Ordinarily we would say that the proper way to use the local weekly is to devote the same space to each attraction as the Fort Plain theatre has done here.

While the conditions may not be the same there as in other towns with which we are familiar, we would think that Saturday was the biggest day, when the people came in from the surrounding territory. Certainly this seems evidenced by the fact that the theatre has booked the biggest attraction, "My Own United States," for Saturday. In that case we would have played this picture up stronger than the others. If this is a day when you think that you can pull the people in, why not put the pull a little stronger?



Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

AT the Rivoli this week Mr. Rothapfel is giving us another one of his perfect presentations. We do not often go as far as this in describing one of the bills at the Rialto or Rivoli in this way, but there has everything entered into this one, and we can recommend it to every exhibitor showing the first of the Caruso pictures as the proper way to put it on, provided he is able to get the artist material necessary, for the selections that are sung are not easy in any way and require real artists for their proper interpretation.

And we do want to insist that this presentation does represent the sentence that is used in describing the Rivoli, "the triumph of the motion picture." There has never been anything better done in legitimate theatre or in the opera, and is there any wonder that Caruso himself and his bride sat in a loge next to us applauding each of the numbers with all his might. And to one that watched him there came no suspicion that his applause was inspired by anything except the genuine merit of the entire bill.

Now let us look just a moment at the story of "My Cousin." In this the noted singer plays a double role, appearing as a poor artist and also as Caroli, the great tenor (himself). There is an integral part of the picture where the poor cousin goes to hear Caroli sing at the Metropolitan Opera House, and here the opera being rendered is "I Pagliacci," one of Caruso's favorite roles. So what could be more fit than that the music throughout the presentation should be either from that opera or of a purely Italian quality? See how it has been worked out.

"The Fantasie" from "I Pagliacci" is the overture, and with the mention of this we have to pause a moment to look at the new proscenium hangings at the Rialto, the very best of the work of John Wenger, the noted art director of the two theatres. The Garden of Jewels has disappeared and in its place has come something far more beautiful, a combination of lighting and color that defies both the camera and the written word. When the curtain rose for the first time and revealed the setting, the audience broke into tremendous applause.

These hangings cover the sides and the dome of the proscenium. The arrangement consists of a heavy background on which there are fantastic swirls of color, and over this there are a series of veiling, the first containing a blue, the second a neutral tint to cause "the vibration of color," and finally outer veiling of gold. These give a possibility to an endless variety of lighting and blending, and some of the possibilities are shown at the Rivoli this week. The main curtains give something of the nouveau art suggestion of a forest crowded with green trees. At the sides the setting is so arranged that by altering the lighting windows appear through which one may look out on green fields and stately trees.

For the overture the lighting of the dome is in blue, the proscenium arch in red and the orchestra bathed in blue, while the new settings carry out the gold and green idea of the morning sky in the dome with a pinkish effect on the central curtain.

Immediately after the overture comes the Animated, this week there being a slight change in the arrangements. It consists purely of the Official War Review, which has the general caption of "Far Flung Battle Line of the Allies." To the music of "Robespierre," which is counterpointed with the "Marseillaise," are shown pictures of the French Spahis chasing the Huns, then we are taken through some of the ruined cities, given glimpses of the death trap left by the Boche, and then views of the rescue of the French refugees.

With the title "Along the Eternal Alps" we have first bugles, then a counterpoint on the French horns, and finally "Capricio Italien," with some striking pictures shown. When there come pictures of Pershing's boys sweeping over the St. Mihiel salient the audiences go wild and almost drown out the music of "Triumph Overture." With pictures of the British gunboats on the Tigris bombarding the Turks near the Garden of Eden the music becomes "Queen of Sheba" and continues through views of the British entering the Holy City and pictures of General Allenby, their commander.

With the rendition of the "Bird Song" from "I Pagliacci" by Miss Annie Rossner the lights become blue and the inner curtains part, revealing a moon low in the sky with the blue behind her and the girl standing near a garden seat.

Robert C. Bruce has one of the cleverest of his scenic creations in "A Wee Bit Odd," released by Educational. It is something of a "chaptered" picture, with a thrill and a laugh alternated. The titles show Bruce at his best. First we have pictures of one of the world's greatest waterfalls—Shoshone—and in the heart of a desert. During these pictures "Caucasian Sketches" is used, and then with the second chapter we have pictures of "washing gold out of a cow farm," and here "Natoma" is the music. The third chapter brings us "diving bipeds," real humans, and then birds that perform the same trick, and here "My Dream" is the orchestration. There is an especially clever title here, for after the humans are shown in bathing suits the title tells us: "Now these divers don't wear any bathing suits at all," and when it is revealed to us that they are birds there is a good laugh. The fourth chapter shows us the salmon jumping the rapids, and here we have "Spinning Wheel" employed. And then there is another title summing up why we have seen things "a wee bit odd"—waterfalls in a desert, a gold mine on a cow farm, birds that dive and fish that fly. It gets a big hand.

Then, with the lights all blue except the new setting effects now giving the gold and silver effects, Vincenete Ballester in "I Pagliacci" costume sticks his head from between the curtain and begins to sing the prologue from the opera, coming on the full stage a moment later. With the last bars of this the picture is immediately started.

The theme for the picture is the aria from the opera, and the music is practically all Italian, embracing such selections as "From Italy," a number of selections from the opera "Day in Venice," "Italian Suite" and others. "My Cousin Caruso" is introduced once during the showing. In short, the musical setting is perfect, and so well is it arranged that one is scarcely conscious when the organ stops and the organ takes up the playing and then when the orchestra resumes again.

With the lights all red, the orchestra then plays a selection of Italian folk songs, and just at the end of this the lights are dimmed and the music is blended into the comedy "Whose Little Wife Are You?" a Mack Sennett creation, and one of the funniest things that we have seen in ages. The Keystone cat and dog have a considerable part of the fun-making. Here are the musical selections, which add a great deal to the enjoyment: "Pretty Baby," "More Candy," "Meow," "Porcupine Patrol," "Before the Mast," for the scenes where the kittens are floating around the flooded flat, "Our Jackies" and "Oui, Oui, Marie."

We would describe the show at the Rivoli

"ATMOSPHERE"

Certainly New Orleans Wouldn't Know Itself Here

WHILE criticism of pictures is not intended in these pages, certainly the exhibitor has the right to know whether the features carry out what they pretend to be. Mr. Rothapfel knows New Orleans well, but he would never recognize it from seeing "A Daughter of the Old South" at his Rialto theatre this week.

Everyone knows that New Orleans is as level as a floor, but every exterior shows nice slopes of ground.

Everyone knows that there is not a rock in miles of the city, but the water scenes show beautiful miniature palisades with boulders in plenty.

Everyone knows that a hole dug two feet in the side of New Orleans would show salt water, yet we are shown a rustic well not only once, but a score of times.

New Orleans Cathedral is one of the famous old churches of the country, yet we see it in this picture a terrible looking thing in fresh plaster effect.

Aside from a few other things it might be possible to convince someone that the picture was made in New Orleans. Theoretically, directors are expected to know something about the localities that they picture before they start the cameras to grinding.

And only a few weeks ago we had another New Orleans picture in which the word Creole, the purest mixture of French and Spanish stock, was used for an octoroon character.

this week as a laughing bill, set in an atmosphere of supreme artistry with the most beautiful of music accompanying it. And that is just about the ideal end to achieve.

Rialto has a brilliant overture this week in "First Rhapsodie Roumaine," which is founded on the Roumanian national airs and there has never been anything more wonderfully played by the splendid orchestra under Dr. Riesenfeld's direction. Then comes one of the Post-Pathe travel pictures, "Scenes in Dutch Java." These open with the usual map giving the location of the islands and then we have a number of interesting scenes, the music opening with "Among the Arabs" and then taking up a numbered selection until the title "The City is Built," and here the orchestra changes to "The Nile," following through with "African Dances" until the Javanese hand laundry is shown, and here we get "Intermezzo Pittoresque" played until we are shown that here are only male mourners at the funerals and here "Orientale" is used to the end.

With the center dome in red and blue flooding the orchestra Sascha Fidelman, concert master of the Rialto then plays "Andante" from "Symphony Espagnole," as a violin solo.

There is a sure enough punch Animated at the Rialto this week, opening with a small boy in khaki saluting. Then come Gaumont pictures of dedicating a Y. M. C. A. hut at Galveston, followed by Hearst-Pathe scenes of the shipbuilding at Hog Island. For both of these "King Cotton" is used, the trio being played three times. Then comes Hearst-Pathe pictures under the title of "We must feed the world," showing pictures of the Kansas City stockyards.

Now we have talked about psychology a whole lot in these articles, and we want to take advantage of a little incident right here to prove that we are right. You who read these articles carefully will remember that in the issue of November 9 we commented on similar pictures and recorded the murmurs of women in the audience of "Oh, isn't it a shame," referring to the sight of cattle, in their pens, waiting to be killed. No one wanted the idea of slaughter brought out and we declared at that time that even the idea of killing cattle, to feed human beings, while the battlefields of Europe are red with human blood is repulsive to a lot of people. But these similar pictures, especially of the hogs got laughs this week. Why? Of course, the answer is that the war is over. If you don't believe in psychology in picture presentation you should have seen the effect of these similar pictures on two different weeks' audiences at the Rialto.

"Western Allegro" is used with these pictures and then we have Hearst-Pathe pictures of flowers for the war heroes and there could be nothing more appropriate here than "Language of the Flowers" which is used. From the same source come pictures of the Greek heroes who have been fighting with the allies in Macedonia and the music turns to the stirring "Men of Sparta." The close-ups of the decorated and bullet riddled battle flags get a big hand.

There might otherwise have been a sad touch with President Wilson at the funeral of the Haytian minister, but the audience was too full of enthusiasm over victory for that, even though "March Funbire" was played, for they burst into applause at every sight of the American commander-in-chief. Gaumont gives us pictures of trying out American-built Handley-Page airships, and for this we have "Honor to Our Nation." Then we are taken across to the war countries and we see new dirigibles being tried out in Paris with the same selection continued. Then come the Hearst-Pathe pictures, "With Our Boys Over There," under the caption "On the Peace Paths," with the armies of all nations driving the beaten Huns before them. "Hail America" is used here, and we have not only views of the soldiers of various countries, but French villagers released after four years of suffering, a huge batch of German prisoners and finally pictures of Generals Leggett and Edwards. But the final big punch comes at the end with Hearst-Pathe views of Colonel Whittesley, commander of the "Lost Battalion," at Pittsfield, Mass., and to the tune of "Red, White and Blue" the audience goes wild in its enthusiasm.

"Through the Hindenberg Line," victory stage setting at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

Our old favorite, the Rialto quartet, is back this week and there is a double selection rendered, "Ring Out, Sweet Bells of Peace," and "Juanita," and it is hard to tell which gets the bigger hand.

Then comes the feature, Pauline Frederick in "A Daughter of the South." Music of the Latin countries is largely used here, opening with "Goyesca," then going into "Habanera," "The Valley of Poppies," "Jewel of Madonna" and "Lolita." Some of the other selections used are "Kentucky Dreams," "Vineyard Idyl," DeGussy's "At Evening," "Open Thy Blue Eyes" and Spanish Serenade, "Lolita" is the theme.

"Old Timers' Waltz" is the title of the second orchestral selection and this includes such favorites as "The Bowery," "Sidewalks of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "Daisy Bell," "She May Have Seen Better Days," "The Band Played On," and lastly but not least, as the preacher used to say, "After the Ball." You

We have urged on you from time to time the revival of these old favorites. It pays. The audiences like them and don't you think that the people as a whole do not remember them. Why, sitting near us at the Rialto Sunday were a couple of people who remembered every word of the various numbers. Their applause at the end of the selection might be called frantic. Give the people some of the old things once in a while, the old time popular favorites, the Stephen Foster songs and the like and they will forget many mediocre things in your bill, if you are unfortunate enough to have them there.

"Mongrels," a Fox Sunshine comedy, winds up the bill with a scream. There hasn't ever been a funnier thing made and you will make no mistake with this, especially if you have a dreary feature and want to "send your audience home with a smile." It opens with a skit on the war, a French poodle with a bone, while the orchestra plays "Oh, Frenchy," and then the German dachshund coming to take it away and the poodle going to look for John Bulldog and then the American terrier coming into action with "You're a Grand Old Flag." Then the real story of the comedy starts and it is truly a laugh ever moment. One man told us that he had sat through the whole show a second time just to see this comedy again. And it's worth doing. The other music included "My Belgian Rose," "Frivolity," "Hezekiah," "Ghost Dance," "Wyoming" and "Yankee Doodle Boy" in the order mentioned.

And though the Rialto feature is dreary as compared with the amusing heart interest story at the Rivoli they leave the Rialto, too, smiling.

New Mark Set for St. Louis Theatres By Presentations at Fox Liberty Now

ST. LOUIS is getting a new insight into photoplay presentation at the Liberty theatre, which was recently acquired by William Fox and entirely redecorated and refurnished. The presentations are now on a scale with the leading houses of the country and the theatre is also setting a new mark in advertising so far as the Missouri city is concerned.

For instance, during the past week the symphony orchestra rendered as the overture "The Girl of the Golden West," under the direction of Gene Rodemich. For this a simple but artistic stage setting was used, representing the exterior of a cabin of the type that prevailed in the old days of the West. Around the sides of the walls hung skins, rifles, saddles and various old trappings, while in the center was a battered old lamp dating back to 1848. Through the window on one side could be seen a huge tree. The lights were at first dimmed and toward the end came up signifying the dawn.

Next followed the Liberty theatre animated weekly with a novelty in the way of a trailer, and follows scenes of the British army's return to the residence of King George, led by the pipers playing the music as they did in action. Here the orchestra worked up a bag pipe effect, using "Tipperary," then the scene of the wild celebration in Washington, showing the President reviewing the parades, for which was used "Conquering Heroes," a brilliant march. Then the showing of the New York drive for the War Camp Fund, which was suitably played with "Keep the Home Fires Burning." Here the "Topical Digest" was used. Then followed scenes from on "The Battle Front," with which the music played a very stirring agitato showing scenes of the Yankee shells bursting into Genrman trenches just before peace was declared. The effect used with electric drums were sensational and thrilling. Then followed scenes of doughboys mixing dough for the Salvation Army lassies for their doughnuts—which was very funny—and then followed the finest arrangement of a Mutt and Jeff comedy, "Dough Boys."

Next was presented Miss Eva Nicolson Tremayne, a soprano of note and ability, who rendered a beautiful Western love waltz. The lights were left partly blue and then quickly appeared the William Fox presentation of "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," featuring Tom Mix.

After the last scene of the feature picture faded from view, a concert violinist of note, Albin Steindel, entered from the first entrance and with the lights all dark, and a blue spot light from the front, and red spot from the side of stage, rendered "I Hear You Calling Me." As he reached the climax of the solo a brilliant ray of light as though thrown from heaven burst forth over him.

The performance was closed with "Mongrels," a William Fox Sunshine comedy. The opening scene shows a French poodle dog licking a bone, for which was played "Frenchy, Oh, Oh, Frenchy," and a German dachshund started picking on the French poodle, and the French poodle is seen running for help; he runs up to the English bull dog—for which "Rule Britannia" was used for music, and finally the two dogs are attacked by the German dog, and the French poodle runs to the Yankee dog, the fox terrier, wherein the orchestra played "He's a Yankee Doodle Dandy." A royal battle ensues here between all dogs, and the German dog is seen limping away on three legs to the music of "He Will Be Gone for a Long, Long Time."

It will be noted that the Liberty is following very closely the arrangement of the program used by Mr. Rothapfel at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres and the Liberty is seeking to reach just as high a mark. And the management has convinced St. Louis people that it has done so.

Wonderful Music Aids for Putting Over "Mickey" Pack N. J. Theatre

REGENT THEATRE, Paterson, N. J., broke all box office records in the history of the house with a week's run of Mabel Normand in "Mickey," the feature being sold on a State's rights basis by the Western Import Co. It was largely the result of the exploitation and remarkable line of music aids prepared by H. J. Shepherd of W. H. Productions.

Every means has been used in putting the song "Mickey" before the public, and it is probably one of the best known of recent musical productions by this time. The Columbia Graphophone Company produced both single and double records, the single being devoted to a dance record by the Earle Fuller Jazz band, while the double record bears on one side the song by the Sterling Trio and on the other a medley taken from the score for the picture.

The Okeh and the Vocalion companies have also records of the song while the Aeolian company has made a piano record for all standard pianos. The various companies are advertising these as they do their feature productions, and are preparing special advertising for use in connection with the showing of the picture. All the branch agencies have promised cooperation with the theatre, and this was exemplified during the Paterson run.

In addition to this Daniels and Wilson Co., publishers of the song "Mickey," have arranged with all the five-and-ten-cent store syndicates to give "Mickey" a full window display when the picture is about to be shown in their city. In addition to the sale of the pictures the exhibitors are supplied at a very low price with copies which they may give away before the opening of the engagement, and which they may sell in the lobby during the run of the picture, thus recovering the expense of the free songs.

Exhibitors are advised to begin playing the music before the opening of the engagement and there is also a song slide provided through the use of which the audience can be invited to sing it, either by itself or under the leadership of some prominent musician. As the campaign has been arranged by Mr. Shepherd the exhibitor can have every one in his community playing, whistling, singing, or hearing the song on the phonograph or dancing to it if he takes advantage of all of these opportunities.

Mr. Shepherd has also prepared a 24-page plan book which is one of the handsomest things that has been issued, and which gives the exhibitor a complete selling campaign and reproduces all of the aids that are provided.

All of the large amount of elaborate paper is shown and in addition there are eight double-column and twelve single-column ads, all cleverly written and attractively illustrated with different pictures of Miss Normand as she appears in this production.

At Zero Hour with McCormick

By S. Barret McCormick
Managing Director, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis

This is the third of Mr. McCormick's articles under the general heading of "At the Zero Hour," the time that elapses after all is ready for the attack and the soldier is waiting to go "over the top." The same thing applies to the exhibitor, when he has everything prepared for his opening smash, and he is sitting back thinking it over.

"EVEN though the war is over that is no reason why conservation methods should be discontinued, especially if such schemes are intended for labor saving and one was born naturally lazy, having been marked in the pre-natal state by a huge hookworm," said the advertising man of the Mastodon as he dug through his waste basket and finally succeeded in resurrecting an "Exhibitor's Press Book of Advertising Aids, Publicity Matter, Suggestions for Lobby Display, Advice to the Operator, Conductor and Manager, together with suggestions for numerous Circular Letters," intended for the exploitation of a coming attraction.

"Now here is a producer," he continued, "who says 'there really is no need for an exhibitor to write his own advertisements at all.'"

The advertising man thumbed the pages of the press book. "I have always felt that the producer should maintain a paternal interest in the exhibitor's business, but do it in a constructive and intelligent manner. In fact, the responsibility of the producer should never cease until the film has been put in the can and shipped back to the exchange, but the co-operation and much vaunted service that is now being put out is only a case of the blind leading the blind and the leader suffering from shell shock in addition."

What It Is Worth

It is a strange thing why, with all the practical newspaper men who are supposed to be in the business, that they don't look at their mimeograph sheets from a copy-desk standpoint. Most of the press matter that is littering up newspaper offices, and worth fifty cents a hundred when properly baled, is enough to give even the most philanthropic editor hardening of the arteries.

Most publicity stories are killed in the first paragraph, and if they escape editorial assassination there, the roster of the executive staff of the producing and distributing company that inevitably follows usually dispatches them to a necropolis of forlorn hopes.

Often very bright ideas, on which it is possible to hinge a sales theme behind a real news value, are buried in these stories, but the average editor is unwilling to unwind the swathings of asininity to find it.

Viewpoint of the Editor

The editor realizes just as well as the press agent that publicity stories are run for but one purpose, to help sell a star or a production, but he has to be subtle with his readers and he expects you to be subtle with him. Down in his heart he hates to believe that a good press agent story is really an advertisement masquerading as news, which accounts for the old days when publicity was camouflaged friendship, hemstitched with cocktails and embroidered with introductions to chorus girls.

To-day, publicity is simply a business proposition to both editor and advertiser. With mutual assistance it will cease to feed on insincere friendship and reside on the shifting sands of deceit.

Now, take the display advertising specimens that are furnished and which exhibitors are urged to use exclusively. How often do they contain a single seelling argument? anything to make people leave the fireside, dress and take a car-ride to the theatre?

It is possible that 90 per cent of exhibitors lack creative imagination, likewise 90 per cent of merchants in all classes lack the ability to write convincing selling talk. Every picture will draw more money if we find the appealing point, or let us say the "psychological touch," but why can't producers find this vital selling argument? Is the "soul" of their product so elusive that it escapes the grasp of those who should be

The clothing manufacturer tells his dealer the selling points and his paternal interest stirs the interest, stimulates the imagination of the retailer which eventually reaches the consumer, but in picture advertising the retailer is left to gnaw at the dry bones of human appeal.

As a result, 90 per cent of the exhibitors must use this stuff while the other ten per cent grope in the dark struggling for that "Psychological Touch."

The great trouble with amusement advertising is that we are still trying to put a diager on a young fellow that is yelling for long pants.

Needless to say that Press Book is now buried under numerous others where it was originally exhumed, and the advertising man has come to the conclusion that were he to follow its advise he could soon hang the crepe on the door and let the sheriff do his duty.

Finding the "Soul" of the Picture

Personality is the first thing we seek in a man or a woman. It is the indefinable thing that makes us like or dislike them. It is the being within the being.

Merchandise as well as men possess the quality of personality. Often, as in men it is a hidden quantity that must be searched out. In pictures, as in all sensitive things that depend upon tne finer emotions for appreciation personality is very frequently an elusive spirit. But it is the gold within the quartz that lures, the fire within the ruby that enchants, the drama within its painted shell that thrills us.

We must find the soul of the picture. In every picture there is some one quality that gives it life, makes it universally popular or gives to it a mediocre appeal depending upon the mood of the times.

The theatregoer may be able to distinguish the reason for his like or dislike for a play. Because he does not go to the theatre in the role of critic he is moved by impulse and not analysis; but it is the business of advertising to anticipate his mood and entice him with the written or pictorial promise of that thing which the picture contains and which he craves.

Appeal of the Star

Star advertising is strong or weak in proportion to the player's appeal to the public. The name of the featured actor is the public's sample of what it is to see and enjoy. But it is ready made salesmanship only so far as the number of theatre patrons are acquainted with the reason for the appeal.

Star advertising is the simplest of all amusement publicity only because it travels a beaten track, but its appeal is limited because it alone cannot create new business by the mere emblazoning on a name which to the unacquainted is only so much cold type. Therefore the necessity of merchandising pictures has arisen and the theatre manager has found the importance of searching out and discovering the thing or things that make his entertainment sell.

The Yukon is a land of enchantment, but not its peaks and canyons that make it so, but the men and women, their primitive emotions, the legendary romance that surrounds mortal life that gives to north of 63 its golden aurora.

War is dramatic, but the cannon itself is lifeless, spiritless, without the heroism, the sacrifice that attends its grim curtain calls.

Contemporaneous life is interesting only so far as it strikes a responsive chord within ourselves and plays upon the reed or tympany of our senses.

Analysis, sympathy, dramatic instinct, intuition, that ability to feel emotions, are requisite to successful selling in all its branches whether by printed or spoken word. All are attainable, one has only to feel life to live it, to place himself in the mental position of his auditors to be able to speak to them in the tongue that their hearts understand.

Rothapfel to Make Long Trip Across the Country

Samuel L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, is to take a much needed vacation, beginning next Monday, when he starts across the country for a visit to the Pacific Coast. He will be accompanied in at least part of his tour by Samuel Goldfish, head of the Goldwyn organization. Although Mr. Rothapfel may make a few speeches to exhibitors at various stops, the visit is to be one purely for pleasure, since he has not had a rest since the opening of the Rivoli, and the strain of the direction of the two houses has been great.

Lobby and stage view of the Rialto theatre, Medford, Oregon

Theatre in City of 12,000 Proves How Well It Pays to Make Your House a Real Institution

OUT in Medford, Ore., there is a theatre that is just as much the institution of that community as the Rivoli in New York, the California in San Francisco or the Circle in Indianapolis. Medford has a census population of only 12,490, but if you would ask the first man that you met on the street to tell you what was the biggest thing in Medford, the answer would be "the Rialto theatre."

Several weeks ago you read an announcement that H. L. Percy has been appointed a member of the Advisory Board. He has been in active management of the theatre during the absence of his partner, A. J. Moran, who has been serving Uncle Sam but who has just been released from the army since the Hun threw up their hands. He will look around New York and other Eastern theatres before returning to his home in Medford.

The Rialto seats 700 people, and it sets a new high mark for a theatre in the city of its size by charging ten, twenty and thirty cents admission afternoon and evening. There is a novel plan used with the changes in program, of which there are four a week. The special emphasis is put on the attraction that is run for three days, Saturday, Sunday and Monday, and generally there is a special lobby display.

"We believe in making people talk about our theatre, and we put a lot of faith in the advertising that we get now and then," explained Mr. Moran. "You must remember that we have only a small city and things we do can get the whole town to talking. Recently we showed a Sessue Hayakawa picture and for this occasion we dressed our girl ushers in Geisha costumes and used various Japanese decorations in the lobby and through the entire block. We did not get back as much money as we spent, but we felt that it was well worth while because of the amount of advertising that we got from it. We find that it pays to keep our house before the public."

Which is very true. And that is the reason why a theatre like the Rialto can prove a success in a town of 13,000. This house has a complete lighting system by which the various color effects can be employed and it has also frequently used the scheme of perfuming the house. Careful attention is given to all of the details of the management, especially the projection. Both of the owners are experienced operators and in normal times they alternate in the supervision of the projection room.

Two views of the theatre printed above give an idea of the simple beauty. A large Photoplayer with the pipes on either side of the stage furnish the music. Flowers and palms are banked on either side of the screen. The house is built on an "L" and so one enters the attractive lobby and passes through the foyer to the left into the orchestra seats. On either side of the fireplace there are columns capped by huge bowls and these are generally used for the lighting effects, although they have been employed as incense burners during special showings. With the exception of loges in the balcony on either side of the operating room all of the seats are on the lower floor.

These are just a few fragmentary facts about the Rialto, Medford, Ore. But they show that it does pay to run a model house in a small city.

Messrs. Moran and Percy have promised us that readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS are going to hear a lot about the way things are done at the Rialto. These young men do not set themselves up as teachers, but they have the earnestness of purpose, the clearness of conception and the willingness to work that is so essential to the proper conduct of any motion picture theatre. We hope that what they will tell the readers of this department will be an inspiration to other small city exhibitors.

Famous Players-Lasky Buys "Little Women"

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the William A. Brady production, "Little Women," which played the Strand theatre, New York City, during the week of November 10, and it will be released through the Famous Players-Lasky exchange as a Paramount-Artcraft Special, probably in January.

This announcement was made by Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, shortly after the negotiations were closed by Mr. Greene and Mr. Brady.

"The acquiring of 'Little Women' for distribution as a Paramount Artcraft Special is in line with our predetermined policy of offering to our exhibitors through this series the very finest productions that money and the advanced art of motion pictures afford," said Mr. Greene. "'The Hun Within' and 'Private Peat' have set the pace and to follow them we have already produced the melodrama 'The Silver King,' with William Faversham as the star, and Thomas H. Ince has made for us 'The False Faces,' starring Henry B. Walthall.

"'Sporting Life,' Maurice Tourneur's picturization of the Drury Lane spectacle of that name, was purchased by us immediately after it scored its success at the Rivoli theatre and was released December 1, while John Emerson has just started the filming of the John Emerson-Anita Loos Production, 'When the Boys Come Home,' for the same series.

"When we announced recently that we were going to increase the number of Paramount-Artcraft Specials from nine to twelve, we had in mind the possibility of acquiring Mr. Brady's 'Little Women,' for not only did we know Mr. Brady's reputation for doing big things in a big way, but we discerned the great possibilities which lay in a picturization of Louisa M. Alcott's delightful story if placed in capable hands."

R. A. Walsh Completes "Every Mother's Son"

WILLIAM FOX announces that the special production upon which R. A. Walsh has been working for the last five months is "Every Mother's Son." It is said to be a big powerful story of human hearts and reconstruction and will be released December 8th.

It is understood that it was William Fox's intention to show "Every Mother's Son" as a special road attraction. The influenza epidemic, however, interfered with this plan, so that now Mr. Fox has decided to release the production as one of his series of big, timely pictures, putting the subject on an independent booking basis and making it available to all exhibitors immediately.

The title of "18 to 45," by which the picture heretofore has been known, was only temporary, and was adopted and advertised merely as a protection to the producer, it is stated. This was done because the opening scenes of the picture deal with the great draft, its justice and its effect on every American home.

"Every Mother's Son," however, is not a war play, it is announced, but deals chiefly with the tremendous sacrifice of American mothers and with the great economic and social problems which will arise during the period of reconstruction.

Headed by Charlotte Walker, the star of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," the cast of "Every Mother's Son" is described as being one of unusual strength, and also includes Gareth Hughes.

Exceptional publicity and advertising campaigns have been prepared by the Fox Film Corporation, it is announced, with the result that "Every Mother's Son" is expected to get much publicity.

"A Lady's Name" is New Talmadge Film

ANOTHER announcement emanated from the publicity department of Select Pictures Corporation this week when it was stated that Constance Talmadge's next Select Picture, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, will be "A Lady's Name."

This is declared to be an effervescent concoction of wit, humor and gaiety taken from the stage play of the same name by Cyril Harcourt, who has given the public such creations as "A Pair of Silk Stockings," another stage play in which Constance Talmadge starred in the screen version; "A Pair of Petticoats," and "A Place in the Sun," and many others.

In "A Lady's Name," Miss Talmadge will play a young woman novelist who is looking for local color. She isn't the short-haired, be-spectacled type of writer, but a buoyant, whimsical young lady whose search for literary material leads her to advertise for a husband.

Applicants come thick and fast, and according to reports the comedy angle develops at a rapid rate, but at last one of the suitors is accepted for further examination. Finally, after she has gleaned all of the information necessary for her book, she discovers that she is really in love with the supposed candidate for her hand and the man who has been her fiancé ungraciously withdraws.

Miss Talmadge again has the direction of Walter Edwards for this attraction, while Harrison Ford, who has appeared in several of her recent pictures, is her leading man.

Writing to Katterjohn

The announcement of the formation of Katterjohn Films to produce a number of special productions during the coming year has met with telegrams and letters from men in all branches of the industry, offering congratulations on the decision of Monte M. Katterjohn, according to report.

Clara Joel To Star In Pictures

Broadway Stage Star Secured for Ralph Ince's First Production for Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin

WHAT may be considered one of the biggest coups for some time, comes this week in the statement from S-L Productions, announcing the special engagement of the Broadway legitimate star, Clara Joel, to appear in the inaugural Ralph Ince film attraction, now being produced under the personal direction of Ralph Ince himself.

In accordance with their previously avowed intention of providing E. K. Lincoln, star of the production, with an unequaled support in the matter of prestige and ability, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, the S and L respectively of the new organization, consider that they have captured the most sought-after star of the current Broadway season.

Miss Joel will appear in support of E. K. Lincoln in the first Ralph Ince film attraction, portraying one of the leading feminine roles of the play, a part said to be especially created by the authors of the story to fit her personality and rare ability.

Repeatedly has Miss Joel turned down tempting offers from the leading producers of the film world to star in her own personal company, it is declared, and the signature which she placed this week to the contract offered her by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin is considered a veritable triumph by these gentlemen.

"For the past three seasons Clara Joel has steadily climbed the ladder of theatrical fame, her work each year adding to her large following thousands of admirers from coast to coast," declared Mr. Sawyer, "scoring a distinct personal triumph in a stellar role of 'Common Clay' with John Mason, which enjoyed an unprecedented run at the Republic theatre in New York, she appeared as the star of the now famous Broadway production, 'Kick In.'

"Her claim to stardom was clinched during the current season by reason of her remarkable performance of 'The Vamp' in the success of successes, 'Business Before Pleasure.'

"Her record of three sensational Broadway starring appearances in as many seasons establishes a record unequaled by any performer of similar roles, and was the cause of frantic bidding on the part of theatrical producers and movie makers alike to secure her services on stage and screen."

Speaking recently of her forthcoming screen debut in the first Ralph Ince film attraction starring E. K. Lincoln and a notable cast, Miss Joel commented as follows:

"My reasons for choosing S-L productions as a medium for the first work of my career in the silent drama are three-fold.

"Having given serious consideration to several flattering offers to appear on the screen, eventually turning them all down, I have become convinced that the organization under whose banner I will be seen offer me the opportunity to make a suitable debut in films. I have a deep admiration for the work and artistry of Ralph Ince and feel that my talents will be given a proper outlet under his direction.

"I am also pleased with the idea of appearing in company with E. K. Lincoln, whom I feel to be one of the few real stars of the picture world, and an actor whose legitimacy is unquestioned. Thirdly, I will be identified with a particular role giving me the opportunity to display a versatility in the matter of acting, and the chance to duplicate the type of character which has made my Broadway success possible.

"You know, I believe in coincidence. As you probably recall, 'Business Before Pleasure' is a delightful satire on 'the movies,' so-called. One entire scene is devoted to the workings of a picture studio and the various details which enter into the making of a film production. As I played that scene each night, the thought often came to me, I wonder how it would feel to be doing this in a real studio. And now the unexpected has happened—I am to have the real thing. Coincidence is a funny thing, truly."

Miss Joel is described as a striking beauty of the brunette type, with beautifully expressive eyes and piquant mouth, possessing all the desired qualities which go to make for loveliness on the screen and delight the heart of the director, according to report.

Of her performance in "Business Before Pleasure" during its long run in Chicago, a prominent critic of a Chicago daily aptly wrote: "In witnessing the work of Clara Joel in 'Business Before Pleasure,' it becomes necessary for one to reverse the play's title, in order to properly express himself. It is 'Pleasure Before Business' to see Miss Joel go through her role throughout the entire length of the play."

Director Ince and Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin are particularly elated over the acquisition of Miss Joel to the cast of the production starring E. K. Lincoln and feel that movie goers have a treat in store for them when the picture is presented.

First Billie Rhodes Feature on December 15

THE first Billie Rhodes de luxe feature, "The Girl of My Dreams," will be released on December 15 by the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

According to the long-term contract signed between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, by which Robertson-Cole will furnish all pictures for the Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges, the first dramatic production to be distributed will be "The Girl of My Dreams."

Not only is the Billie Rhodes picture the inaugural dramatic release of the new arrangement, but added interest is given through the fact that the photoplay marks the first appearance of Miss Rhodes as a feature star.

"The Girl of My Dreams" is said to have scored a sensational success at a preview showing by T. L. Tally in Los Angeles, when it was acclaimed in enthusiastic terms by every daily newspaper critic in the city.

Added to this is the honor just given the Rhodes picture by the selection committee of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, comprising Milton Gosdorfer, David Picker, Leo Brecher and John Manheimer, chairman.

This committee carefully reviewed "The Girl of My Dreams" and by a unanimous vote accepted it as "an Affiliated release." They not only determined to attach their stamp of approval to the first Billie Rhodes feature, but will release with the Affiliated trade-mark the entire series of eight productions, in which the little actress will have the stellar role.

William L. Sherry Make Another Flying Trip

William L. Sherry, president of the Wi L. Sherry Service, returned to New Yo after a flying trip to several of the larg eastern cities. The direct object of M Sherry's trip was to get some first-hand i formation on conditions in the outlying te ritories.

That there have been sweeping chang brought about by the epidemic there c be no doubt, and rather than trust to mi cellaneous and unconfirmed reports M Sherry felt that the situation warranted special trip. This for the purpose of a curacy in his knowledge of condition Upon his return he made a statement, a follows:

"My trip was a touch-and-go affair. B that I mean that I did not linger long i any one city, but while I was there I g all the information that was to be had, an I did not leave town until I had it. M trip took me to Philadelphia, Boston, A bany, Syracuse, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cin cinnati and Pittsburgh.

"There were many friendly calls should have made while in those cities, an no doubt many of my friends will be peeve when they learn that I was in town an did not call on them. Won't you pleas mention this in a line or two and say tha it wasn't that kind of a trip?

"The journey I have just finished wa one of my celebrated 'gum-shoe' expedi tions, like I used to make before I starte the Wm. L. Sherry Service and got to busy to travel.

"Now that I have transferred the actua traffic and handling of our films to th branches of the General Film Company, am footloose and hereafter will make man trips a year. Some of them will be 'gum shoe' expeditions and some of them wil be of the 'brass-band' variety, with 'ad vance work' and all that sort of thing sometimes known as an 'official' trip."

"The Common Cause" Trade Showing Dec. 3

Invitations were sent out to exhibitors of New York State and contiguous territory for a private showing of J. Stuart Blackton's super-production, "The Common Cause," held in the Rialto theatre, New York City, at 10 o'clock of the morning of Tuesday, December 3.

All branch exchanges of the Vitagraph distributing organization, through which the production is being released, arranged for similar exhibitions, with the result that there will be trade showings all over the United States and Canada about the same time.

These showings will serve as the official introduction of "The Common Cause" to the exhibitors of the land and will mark the formal opening of bookings on what is described as one of the greatest screen productions Commodore Blackton has yet turned out.

The story, written by J. Hartley Manners, author of "Peg O' My Heart," and Major Ian Hay Beith, is a blend of historical fact and the lighter phases of war, with the happier moments of the soldiers' life in the trenches woven into it.

"The Spreading Evil" Not a War Picture

Although "The Spreading Evil" is said to have received the endorsement of many Government officials, among them being Josephus Daniels, James M. Baker, Secretary of the Senate; Senator Chamberlain, Charles Curtis and Julius Kahn, father of the draft bill, it is not a war picture nor does it treat of any subject having to do with the late conflict of nations, according to report.

"The Spreading Evil" was shown in the spacious drawing room of the Washington mansion of Senator Phelan recently. The length of the great room permitted a seventy-five foot throw and two large Simplex machines were installed, which, with the elaborate musical setting, gave the affair all the realism of a Strand or Rialto theatre.

At the conclusion, it is said, Mr. Keane, the producer, received warm congratulations from all those present. Later on many of these people sent James Keane letters of endorsement, commenting on the dramatic interest of the photoplay as well as the great moral uplift value contained.

"Belgium" Feature Film Is Historic

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," is said to have been obtained by a historic survey, and that many of the scenes were ably depicted from the archives of the Belgium Government by the City of Brussels.

It is said to cover the settlement of Europe which following the fall of Napoleon in 1815, left Belgium united to Holland.

After negotiations covering many years the status of Belgium was fixed by the treaty of 1830, which the powerful nations guaranteed the neutrality of Belgium. This is the treaty which Prussia, to her eternal discredit, tore up and declared to be but a "scrap of paper."

Every important event in the progress and development of Belgium from the Revolution of 1830 to the opening years of the reign of King Albert; the period of invasion, destruction and suffering; and the final triumph over the invading Huns teaches a lesson of "Love of Country."

Edwards Directed Thirty Pictures for Fox

Thirty productions—and all made for the same producer! That is the record established by J. Gordon Edwards, director of Theda Bara, who has just finished cutting his thirtieth picture for William Fox.

The story of J. Gordon Edwards' work as a director of big film productions shows that for four and a half years he was director of the William Fox stock company at the Academy of Music in New York City, during which time he produced about 250 stage plays.

One day Mr. Fox entered the theatre and startled Mr. Edwards by declaring that he planned to produce motion pictures and that Mr. Edwards was to be his first director.

Fox Releases Ten in December

This Month is Busiest of Season with William Fox—Big Schedule of Productions Announced

DECEMBER promises to be one of the busiest months of the season in the William Fox offices, so far as releasing of new pictures is concerned—ten pictures being scheduled.

Divided according to their brands, there will be one William Fox Big Timely Picture: three Standard Pictures, two Victory Pictures, three Excel Pictures, and one of the "Great Nine" past productions, which are being reissued by Mr. Fox.

The Big Timely Picture on the December schedule is R. A. Walsh's "Every Mother's Son," starring Charlotte Walker.

In the Standard Pictures group the first picture to be released is "The She-Devil," written by Neje Hopkins and staged by J. Gordon Edwards, telling the story of a beautiful Spanish coquette, who plays hob with the hearts of a Spanish brigand and a Parisian artist.

"I Want to Forget," second in the series of pictures which Evelyn Nesbit is producing for William Fox, is another Standard release set for December. This picture was directed by James Kirkwood and tells the story of a woman who is regenerated through the fires of war.

Another of William Farnum's de luxe productions is set for December. This is "The Man Hunter," which depicts the pursuit of an American swindler by the man whom he ruined. The picture was staged by Frank Lloyd.

One of the Victory Pictures to be issued next month is "The Strange Woman," starring Gladys Brockwell. This picture, which has been heralded as one of Miss Brockwell's best, is a picturization of the Broadway stage success of the same name, which was written by W. J. Hurlbut. The picture was directed by Edward J. LeSaint.

"I'll Say So!" is George Walsh's release for December. This also is a Victory Picture, and in it George performs some most amazing athletic stunts, it is said.

One of the best-known novels written by the late Justus Miles Forman, the American author who lost his life when the Huns torpedoed the Lusitania, furnishes the story of "Buchanan's Wife," the Excel Picture in which Virginia Pearson will be featured, and the story is of a beautiful woman who was brought under control of an unscrupulous hypnotist. The climax of this production is said to be one of the most powerful ever put on the screen. Charles J. Brabin directed the play.

Peggy Hyland will be seen this month in "Caught in the Act," a farce-comedy adapted from a magazine story, written by Fred Jackson, the short story writer and playwright. Miss Hyland portrays the role of a young society girl. It was directed by Harry Millarde.

The first Excel Picture starring Madlaine Traverse will be released this month. This is "The Danger Zone," the story of which was written by Marshall Bruce Bennington and the scenario by Dennison Clift. The picture was directed by Frank Beal.

December also marks the beginning of releases on the "Great Nine," a series of past productions which William Fox is reissuing in a re-edited form.

The first of these pictures will be "Fighting Blood," the de luxe production in which William Farnum is said to have achieved one of his greatest triumphs.

N. Y. Critics See Nazimova's "Eye for Eye"

RICHARD A. ROWLAND and Maxwell Karger, who present the Nazimova production, "Eye for Eye," engaged the projection and concert room at Wurlitzer Hall November 18, pursuing the principle recently followed by a New York manager of dramatic productions, in giving pre-views of new offerings prior to their formal presentation to the general public.

The New York daily newspapers and the motion picture publications were represented, some by their publishers and managing editors as well as by the reporters regularly assigned to review the picture.

Interest was widespread in regard to "Eye for Eye" for several reasons. Mme. Nazimova, an artist of whom great things are always expected, is now conceded to have surpassed herself in her screen work. Moreover, the unusual dignity and importance of the story itself is considered a challenge to art-lovers.

"Eye for Eye" is a motion picture version by June Mathis and Albert Capellani of the three-act play, "L'Occident," by the Belgian dramatist, Henry Kistemaeckers. Kistemaeckers is heralded one of the giants of the modern drama. He has not heretofore been known in America, although his work is said to be well known abroad, especially among the studios of France.

Sarah Bernhardt produced his four-act drama, "Et Marthe," and a five-act drama of note is "Le Fresson du Passe." He was born in Belgium, the son of a Brussels editor.

At previous showings of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., special productions, it is said that the spectators have burst into spontaneous applause at the close of the picture, testifying to their appreciation of the dramatic fare offered. But the invited audience which attended the pre-view of "Eye for Eye" did more than that, according to report.

"Reviewer after reviewer thanked the members of the management personally for producing a screen romance of such dignity and genuine worth," declared a Metro official, and one managing editor said he would mention the production editorially.

"Comments on 'Eye for Eye' were most enthusiastic from the most difficult critics in the world, these men whose 'job' it is to 'sell' the picture—to book it at the various theatres. These men had seen the feature when it was passed upon the National Board of Review, and had no actual reason for seeing it again, outside of the fact that they enjoyed it.

Fifteen December Productions

Famous Players-Lasky Announce Nine Paramounts, Five Artcrafts and One Paramount—Artcraft Special This Month

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has compiled its list of new feature releases for December. Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution, announced that there would be nine Paramount releases next month, five Artcrafts and one big Paramount-Artcraft Special, aside from the short subjects and the re-issue of the Success Series.

Four of the films to be offered in December were produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, who has contributed many Paramounts and Artcrafts during the past year.

"December is expected to be a busy month in the theatrical and motion picture centers throughout the country and we feel that with the productions to be offered our exhibitors during that time they will be in a position to command the greater percentage of the business," said Mr. Greene in outlining the month's schedule.

"The first of the month witnessed the release of 'Sporting Life,' the picturization by Maurice Tourneur of the Drury Lane melodarma, which has been selected as the third Paramount-Artcraft Special. The same day we released 'Under the Greenwood Tree,' an Artcraft picture with Elsie Ferguson as star, and on this date also was released 'Fuss and Feathers,' a Paramount picture from the Thomas H. Ince studios, starring Enid Bennett.

"Two noteworthy productions will be released under the Artcraft trademark on December 8th. They are the D. W. Griffith production, 'The Greatest Thing in Life,' and Douglas Fairbanks' screen version of 'Arizona.'

"The Paramount release for that date is 'Too Many Millions,' an adaptation by Gardner Hunting of Porter Emerson Browne's story, 'Someone and Somebody,' in which Wallace Reid is cast in the stellar role.

"Fully as imposing is the trio of productions scheduled for December 15th. William S. Hart will be presented in his new Artcraft picture, 'Branding Broadway,' and on the same day we will release Cecil B. DeMille's new version of Edwin Milton Royle's play, 'The Squaw Man.'

Catherine Calvert, to Appear in a Salvation Army Picture for Famous Players-Lasky

"The third picture for December 15 release is the John Emerson-Anita Loos production for Paramount, 'Good-Bye, Bill,' starring Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex.

"Charles Ray, the Thomas Ince star, returns to the Paramount schedule December 22 after an absence of two months, in 'String Beans,' by Julien Josephson. Another Ince-supervised production is released the same day on the Paramount schedule, namely, 'Quicksand,' starring Dorothy Dalton, and also 'The Mystery Girl,' with Ethel Clayton starring.

"Marguerite Clark is starred in 'Little Miss Hoover,' released on the Paramount schedule December 29th. Dorothy Gish appears in her second Paramount Picture, and 'The Hope Chest,' released on the same date. The third release, 'The Way of a Man with a Maid,' is Bryant Washburn's second Paramount starring vehicle.

Ralph Ince Announces E. K. Lincoln Cast

IN announcing the selection of artists who will support E. K. Lincoln in the initial "Ralph Ince Film Attraction" Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin declare that the feminine contingent of the S. L. production on which Director Ralph Ince is now engaged will be headed by two celebrities recruited from the silent drama and the legitimate stage, namely, Grace Darling and Clara Joel.

In the inaugural Ralph Ince Film Attraction Grace Darling will portray one of the leading female roles, and one exactly suited to her peculiar talents and physical beauty, it is said.

Clara Joel, especially chosen by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin to enact a most important part in their first special feature offering, was the bright particular star of "Common Clay," "Kick In" and, more recently, "Business Before Pleasure," all of which have proven Broadway box office successes during the past few seasons.

W. B. Mack, familiar through his appearances in support of Wilton Lackaye, John Drew, Sarah Bernhardt and Julia Marlowe, has been accorded a leading part in the male division of the cast.

Another well known name will be recognized in the person of Irving Brooks, who will be remembered for his appearances with Mme. Majeska, William Faversham and others. Following on the heels of his success in the recently released Blackton feature, "Safe for Democracy," John P. Wade will have a congenial role in the forthcoming E. K. Lincoln picture.

Others selected by Sawyer and Lubin include Leo Delaney, old Vitagraph favorite and a screen player whose work is well known.

"Made in America" for Hodkinson Release

The story of an American mother's two boys who were drafted, trained and taught to fight to safeguard their civilization and all they held dear tied together with a thread of a romantic love story is a brief resume of "Made in America," an eight-reel series that will be released shortly by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through the Pathe Exchange, Inc. This photoplay was produced with the co-operation of the Government, through the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

"Made in America" starts from the bottom of military training, taking those who view it, step by step, from the period of isolation to the day when the Medal of Honor is pinned upon the hero's breast in a base hospital "somewhere in France." It tells how "your boy and my boy" were treated at camp and how they were developed into resourceful warriors within the brief period of one year.

"The Common Cause" to Be Released Shortly

J. Stuart Blackton's "The Common Cause" is completed and the release date will be announced shortly. It is not as a war picture that this production makes its appeal, it is said, but rather as the spirit that moves the world now that peace is restored.

The authors of the play are J. Hartley Manners, author of "Peg O' My Heart" and other stage successes, and Major Ian Hay Beith, author and playwright. Anthony Paul Kelly, who has achieved success in the last few years, both on the screen and on the speaking stage, has written the scenario.

"Safe for Democracy" Is Officially Endorsed

J. Stuart Blackton has just been advised that the Committee on Public Information, through Charles S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films, has decided to officially endorse "Safe for Democracy," the producer's new "work-or-fight" picture written by Anthony P. Kelly.

This action followed a review of the picture which is said to have impressed itself on the Government officials as a medium for conveying to the masses in the most comprehensive and effective way the true spirit of democracy.

Grace Darling Engaged by Ralph Ince

A very well known screen artist has been engaged for a leading role of the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction in the person of Grace Darling. Miss Darling, whose work during the past few years has established her as a favorite with many movie audiences in this country, has been chosen by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin as one of the chief supports for E. K. Lincoln, who will be seen in the star role of the S-L production now in work under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Mack Sennett Brings Out Five Reeler

Ever since "Tilly's Punctured Romance," motion picture exhibitors have been asking Mack Sennett to make another five-reel comedy. He has at last complied with that request, and the result is "The Kaiser's Last Squeal." Many critics who have seen the preview of "The Kaiser's Last Squeal" have pronounced this to be his funniest play.

It is on a theme entirely away from any of the Kaiser plays that were given during the war days.

The comedy is a gay satire on the Hohenzollern propensity for falling in love with dashing young ladies. In this case—as often happened in real life—the Crown Prince and the All-Highest were rivals for the lady's affections.

Intermingled with the comedy, Mr. Sennett has introduced some dramatic thrills that will make the spectator wonder what would happen should the "comedy king" ever take it into his head to make dramatic pictures.

Bothwell Browne, the well-known female impersonator, is featured as Lieut. Bob White, the American aviator, who disguised himself as a girl and vamped the Kaiser to get his war plans.

Winsome little Marie Prevost appears as a Belgian girl who is a prisoner on German soil. Ford Sterling presents a marvelously accurate and funny representation of the Kaiser.

Every actor in the cast is a well-known Sennett comedian.

The method of release wil lbe announced later.

Vitagraph Soon Releases "The Common Cause"

The release date of J. Stuart Blackton's "The Common Cause," which is to be released through Vitagraph, will be announced in the coming week.

Everything in connection with the production itself, together with the advertising and promotion aids, is said to be in readiness. Those who have seen the Blackton production are authority for the statement that the success of "The Common Cause" is assured in even greater measure with the coming of Peace.

It is not as a war picture, it is said, that "The Common Cause" makes its great appeal, but rather as a picture of the spirit that will move the world now that Peace is restored.

Goldwyn Week for Howell

Another "Goldwyn Week"—and this time it will be held in Howell, Mich. Vernon Locey, proprietor of the Temple theatre there, has arranged to play seven Goldwyn first-year releases and seven Capitol Comedies, starring "Smiling Bill" Parsons, beginning December 25, and ending January 1.

Mr. Locey is determined to make his holiday business an event long to be remembered, with seven big Goldwyn successes, starring three of their most popular stars.

Soldiers Are Entertained by Duncan Company

Saturday (November 9th) was William Duncan day at Camp Kearny, San Diego, and the entire troop of the Vitagraph serial star journey to the southern California training grounds of Uncle Sam and entertained the boys with a vaudeville show.

Eight automobiles were required to transport the troop, and from their store of former dramatic material they constructed an entire bill of varied entertainment.

Perry Back to Coast

Paul P. Perry, who was sent to New York from the Famous Players-Lasky studio at Hollywood, Cal., to photograph a coming Billie Burke picture, is on his way back to the coast. The picture in question is "Good Gracious, Annabelle," an adaptation for the screen of the Claire Kummer play.

"Greatest Gift" Goes Free to Exhibitors

The single-reel production called "The Greatest Gift," has been announced for free distribution by the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures.

This film is to be used in the same manner that the Liberty Loan films provided by the motion picture industry were used in the fourth loan drive. It is offered to all theatres in the United States free of charge for showing in behalf of the forthcoming Red Cross campaign which will be known as the "Christmas Roll Call."

Intensive co-operation by motion picture interests has made it possible for this special Red Cross release to be available to the exhibitors and country. "The Greatest Gift" was produced for the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures by courtesy of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which employed the facilities of its Eastern studios to carry out the ideas presented to it by the Red Cross people. Some of its most important players and directors aided in making the production attractive and nothing was spared in the way of scenery and costumes. "The Greatest Gift," in fact, is a spectacular achievement, although its length is within the footage of one reel.

A liberal number of prints of "The Greatest Gift" have been provided by courtesy of the Spoor-Thompson laboratories and these will be immediately available. Exhibition of the picture is expected to begin December 9 and continue through the week of December 16-23.

"Good-Bye, Bill," Next for Shirlev Mason

The second John Emerson-Anita Loos Production for Paramount, "Good-Bye, Bill," starring Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex, is set for release December 15 in the revised schedule of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Exhibitors who played "Come On In," the first of the Emerson-Loos series, will receive this announcement with added interest through the fact that practically the same cast will be seen in the new production.

Evelyn Nesbit on Third Fox Picture

The day following the release of her first William Fox picture, "The Woman Who Gave," Evelyn Nesbit began work at the Victor studio in Forty-third street on "Woman! Woman!" the third production of the series of five she is making for Mr. Fox.

Miss Nesbit's latest picture, which is an adaptation of Norma Lorimer's book, "On Desert Altars," is being made under the direction of Kenean Buel, who also wrote the scenario.

Bessie Love Stars In New Vitagraph Release

BESSIE LOVE makes her bow as a Vitagraph star in the Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Dawn of Understanding," scheduled for release the week of December 2d, and it is stated that she never has appeared to better advantage than in this prairie romance.

"The Dawn of Understanding" was produced on the stage by Frohman some years ago under the name of "Sue" and starred Annie Russell. It was adapted from Bret Harte's "The Judgment of Bolinas Plains."

The picture was filmed in Southern California and out on the Mohave desert. David Smith directed it, and is said to have obtained many striking scenes. The cast includes J. Frank Glendon, G A. Williams, Jack Gilbert, George Kunkle, and Jack Abrams.

The story is described as a quaint romance, colorful of the West in the gold days, of pathos and near tragedy and relieved by touches of comedy so typical of Bret Harte stories. There is action at all times that commands and holds the interest.

The story describes Sue (Miss Love) as a pathetic little picture, the saddest on Bolinas Plains, left there by her father, a prospector, when her mother died as the family was treking West in a prairie schooner and she refused to leave the grave. Her home is the ranch of Ira Beasley, a young fellow untouched by romance who lives a lonely life with his help, an assortment of white men and Chinese woman, with nearest neighbors away below the horizon line.

Ira is all kindness to Sue, and she secretly loves him, but neither looks or speaks the thoughts within. Then comes the one and only romance in Sue's lonely life. A circus comes to the Plains, and Ira takes Sue, and she sees and is infatuated with Jim Wynd, dashing and unprincipled, an acrobat.

Completes Sweet Film and Starts Pickford

SPECIAL arrangements have been made with Harry Garson, who directs the destinies of Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet, to have Marshall Neilan direct Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," Miss Pickford's first production undre her new contract with the First National.

Mr. Neilan has just completed "The Unpardonable Sin," from the story of that name by Major Rupert Hughes, in which Miss Sweet is being starred, and which picture, by the way, serves to bring this actress back to the screen after more than a year's absence.

It is stated that Mr. Neilan will direct Miss Pickford in this one picture only, as he and Mr. Garson are said to have some big irons in the fire for the coming winter, which will result in at least one or two important productions, which will be announced later.

Arrangements have also been made with Mr. Garson whereby Miss Pickford will occupy Garson's part of the Sunset Sutdio, and the use of the entire Garson organization intact, including all employees from office help to stage hands.

Mr. Garson found this arrangement dovetailed very well with his plans of coming East to place "The Unpardonable Sin" in one of the Broadway theatres for a run, which project he wishes to see safely launched before starting his next big production, by which time Mr. Neilan will have completed the Mary Pickford pictures, and he and Garson will then proceed with the plans they have formulated for the coming season which promise to be very elaborate.

Clara Kimball Young, who has just finished what is said to be one of her best pictures, "Cheating Cheaters," is also expected in New York within a few days on a flying business trip, and may remain over the holidays.

Fairbanks May Go Abroad for Locations

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced this week that Douglas Fairbanks, Artcraft star, has started negotiations by which he aims to take his company of players to southern France for the purpose of filming a series of pictures.

Speculation as to the success of the negotiations is rife. In view of the fact that more than 100,000 persons who have tried to secure passports for Europe since the armistice was signed have been turned down flatly, it is contended by some that Fairbanks will be unable to secure the necessary permission to make such a trip.

In the event that the journey is made, the subjects filmed will not deal with the war, Famous Players-Lasky explains, but will be typical Fairbanks stories laid abroad.

To make the story sent out by Famous Players-Lasky complete, the press agent added the following: "A professor of foreign languages will start an immediate class at the Fairbanks studio to equip everyone with a fundamental knowledge of foreign languages. Douglas is exempt from the French and Italian classes. He speaks both of these languages exceedingly well."

Proctor on Pacific Coast for Pathe

Ralph O. Proctor, who has "grown up with Pathe," gaining promotion respectively from salesman to branch manager at Chicago and from branch manager to district manager of the Central Western Division, was recently transferred by Sales Manager Quimby to the Pacific Coast Division.

District Manager Proctor now has supervison of Pathe's Branch exchanges in Denver, Salt Lake, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Spokane and Seattle. His genial manner and good business methods are said to be quickly earning him friends among all classes of exhibitors throughout that vast territory.

Lois Weber to Get $3,500 Weekly from Mayer

The advance information that Lois Weber had been engaged by Louis B. Mayer to direct Anita Stewart was published in Motion Picture News two weeks ago, and the announcement reaches us this week from First National Exhibitors' Circuit that the salary is to be $3,500 a week. This is declared to be the highest price ever paid in this department of production with the possible exception of D. W. Griffith.

Negotiations with Miss Weber were started in a telegram from Mr. Mayer in which he offered her this sum to assume the directorial responsibility for his second First National release. This brought a reply from the women director for detailed information about several matters pertinent to the production of "In Old Kentucky." A series of telegrams resulted, in which questions were asked and answered by both parties. Then came the following and final wire from Miss Weber:

"I am gratified with the prospects in our business association. Have engaged a staff. Am anticipating most pleasant relations. Will exert every effort to pick best productions and will try in every way to justify your confidence."

Strong Cast Promised for Vivian Martin's Latest

The selection of the cast for "You Never Saw Such a Girl," Vivian Martin's newest Paramount picture, was accomplished with rare judgment, it is said, for this production, which was adapted by Marion Fairfax from a novel by George Weston.

Harrison Ford is leading man. He has appeared opposite Miss Martin in numerous films: Maym Kelso has a role as an old maid with romantic tendencies; Willis Marks, Edna Mae Cooper, John Burton, Edythe Chapman, Herbert Standing, Gerard Alexander, Claire Anderson, Jas. Farley and Morris Foster are others in the cast.

Jewel's "Borrowed Clothes" Booked Rapidly

EIGHTEEN New York film playhouses made quick contracts last week for bookings of "Borrowed Clothes," the Jewel production featuring Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

This is the announcement issued by Jewel in connection with a general statement of the enormous demand wrought all over the country for films featuring Mrs. Chaplin, since the announcement a short time ago of her wedding.

When she was just Miss Mildred Harris, the young woman possessed great appeal on her own account, it is said, but her marriage to the greatest film comedian in the world, the man about whom tales of fabulous salary and infinite popularity have been published continuously for several years, made the bride a drawing card of the first magnitude, according to Universal.

In New York particularly, the exhibitors were said to be quick to see the advantage in booking a picture of the bride. Jewel Productions meantime conformed to the demand by officially changing the young star's name for all advertising purposes to that of Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

The Broadway theatres which booked "Borrowed Clothes" were the following: The Broadway theatre, the Academy of Music, the Eighty-first Street theatre, Jap Roof Garden, Nemo theatre, Hamilton, Audubon, Heights, Classic, Palace, Arcade, S. & A., Claremont, Costello, Dykeman, Keystone, Schuyler, and the Photoplay.

Gaby Deslys Heads Strong Pathe Program

THE Pathe program for the week of December 1st is announced as especially strong, being headed by the six-reel special feature, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, with Harry Pilcer. It is a rendition of Marcel L'Herbier's romance, directed by Louis Mercanton and produced by the Eclipse Film Company of France.

It is said to be both romance and big spectacle, and great masses of brilliant costumes are handled to splendid advantage in the scenes taken in Casino de Paris.

"Milady o' the Beanstalk," starring Baby Marie Osborne, is a Pathe program feature which shows the little star at her best, the story being a commingling of fairy tale of youth and of hard realities of maturity. It is said to be equally strong in its appeal to both kiddies and grown-ups.

Harold Lloyd, Rolin comedy star, disports himself in a series of acrobatics in "Hear 'Em Rave." And the spectator, in witnesseing the attitude of some of the characters, realizes just what a blessing the silent drama is on such an occasion.

The eighth episode of "Wolves of Kultur," with Leah Baird and Sheldon Lewis, is called "In the Hands of the Hun." It has high tension and many thrills.

The Post Travel Series No. 21 affords an insight into life in Java and Malay Archipelago; while the Official War Review No. 23 gives a comprehensive view of the incidents and action along the far flung battle line of the triumphant Allies.

"The Hand of Vengeance" Receives Impetus

The prolonged epidemic of influenza broke into the showing of the unique photo-serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," which the Gaumont Company is now releasing all over the United States and Canada through states rights exchanges.

The showing of this serial in and around New York City was delayed until the influenza was conquered. Exhibitors in Greater New York, Westchester County, Long Island and Northern New Jersey are now booking the ten episodes.

War Productions Very Much Alive

William Fox, Carl Laemmle and Other Leading Producers Demonstrate Conclusively That War Subjects Are Live Issues

EVIDENCES that the signing of the armistice has had no effect on patriotic films as were constructed on the firm foundations of drama and heart interest are rapidly dissipating whatever doubts trade observers may have had as to the future box-office value of these plays.

Many of the patriotic productions evoked by America's participation in the war subordinated the patriotic appeal to stories having a universal attraction which would not be affected by war developments. That these pictures will continue to prove big box-office successes is believed certain.

An example of how a patriotic photoplay is made into an even greater success by the armistice is seen in reports of "The Prussian Cur," the William Fox photodrama made by R. A. Walsh.

H. J. Thacher, manager of the leading motion picture house in Salina, Kan., played "The Prussian Cur" on the day the armistice was announced and on the two days following. Mr. Thacher sent the following telegram to the Fox Film Corporation's branch office at Kansas City, Mo.:

"Played 'Prussian Cur' to largest crowd ever attending motion pictures in this city. Last day biggest of all. First time in Salina that a motion picture theatre has ever displayed S. R. O. sign at matinees. Picture least advertised of any of big pictures we ever played yet holds attendance records. Will go bigger on return than before. Cannot say enough about this picture."

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, also threw a hope bomb into the blanket of despair which a section of producers had thrown over the subject of war pictures. While reports were circulating around Broadway that several companies had pulled their war films off the market to place them on the shelf, Mr. Laemmle took steps to distribute Jewel productions of that character more energetically than ever.

"The demand has grown instead of having diminished," said Mr. Laemmle. "Frankly, I am surprised as much as anyone else at the development. But I am convinced by proofs that cannot be ignored."

Mr. Laemmle produced reports showing that the bookings for "Crashing Through to Berlin" had reached a higher volume during the days immediately following the declaration of the armistice than ever before.

Influenced by this sudden demonstration of favor, Mr. Laemmle caused Jack Cohn, director of the big film, to prepare a special climax to it, presenting scenes of events that marked the close of the war. The scenes were qiuckly collected and added to the picture, and the effect was to transform the subject into one that might well be called, "How the Allies Crashed Through to Berlin."

"There is a good sound reason for the interest that has developed for certain war films," said Mr. Laemmle. The answer is that the public just now is consumed with curiosity to see the Kaiser, the supreme author of the world's misery now happily brought to its end. A film vision of this character goes far toward satisfying the public yearnings.

"While the war lasted, the attention of the public was more or less scattered, and its senses wer esomewhat overwhelmed by the deluge and rapidity of war events. The interest could not be focused directly upon any one particular character, not even the Kaiser."

Karger Shows Novelty in Screen Introductions

A novelty in screen introductions has been evolved for Emmy Wehlen's forthcoming Metro feature photodrama, "Sylvia on a Spree," by Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., productions. Mr. Karger has long been dissatisfied with the slowness with which many stories of the screen get under way.

He believes that the introduction of the characters by lengthy descriptive subtitles tends to weary the spectator and lessen his interest in the picture from the very start. In "Sylvia on a Spree" he has hit upon a plan which he hopes will eliminate this drawback.

In this next Wehlen feature, Mr. Karger will present his characters not by talk, but by action. A "flash" may tell the name of the person, but the explanation will be supplied more by deeds than by words.

United Theatres Appoints Ben Levine

Recent appointments to United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., sales and field forces include that of Ben Levine, who assumes charge of Brooklyn and district for United, commencing this week.

Mr. Levine is well known among Brooklyn exhibitors through his connection with the First National Circuit since the inception of that body.

Frederick's Latest Film Intensely Dramatic

As a fitting successor to "La Tosca," "Resurrection" and "Her Final Reckoning," Pauline Frederick's Paramount picture, "A Daughter of the Old South," released November 24, is said to reveal a story of intense dramatic interest.

The story is by Alicia Ramsey and Rudolph de Cordova.

War Work Activities in "Too Fat to Fight"

GOLDWYN, under whose direction has been produced Rex Beach's greatest picture, "Too Fat to Fight," announces an unprecedented campaign on behalf of the exhibitors of the country by the seven organizations of the United War Work campaign, comprising 20,000,000 members and touching every community, large and small, in the entire country.

"To Fat to Fight" is released everywhere on December 15, but starts its career December 1 with a pre-release at S. L. Rothapfel's Rivoli theatre, New York, and simultaneous showings in a score of other cities, and features Frank McIntyre.

It is not, as its title might indicate, a comedy, though it is said to be human and filled with good nature. It is heralded as a powerful drama of human emotions and just what one expects from Rex Beach.

"To Fat to Fight," besides telling a big story in a big way, also gives a complete picture of the work in America and Europe of seven great organizations of mercy and humanity—the Y. M. C. A., the Jewish Welfare Board, the Salvation Army, the National Catholic War Council, the Community Welfare Bureau, the Y. W. C. A. and the American Library Association.

Exhibitors have favored the plan of permitting members of the Y. M. C. A., etc., to sell tickets for the engagement of "To Fat to Fight," turning over a percentage of their sales to war relief work.

"This plan is sure to result in many hundreds of extra admissions that would never be sold any other way," said a Goldwyn official.

Baby Marie Osborne Some Climber of "Beanstalk"

Baby Marie Osborne, when it comes to climbing and second story work, is declared to be an infantine Douglas Fairbanks. She is said to give a remarkable exhibition of her adventurous agility in "Milady o' the Beanstalk," released as a Pathe Program Feature on December 10, according to schedule.

It is to be expected in such a story that she would climb the beanstalk, which reaches up into the land of the Fe-fi-fo-fum Giant.

Frank Keenan Is to Produce a Series of Eight Features for Pathe Dis tribution. Here We See Him in "The Bells" and "Loaded Dice," Which Were Completed Before the New Contra ct was Signed. In the Center Is the Star Himself

Metro Announces Cast of Viola Dana's Next

What Metro announces as "a cast of favorites" will surround the "big little star," Viola Dana, in her forthcoming production, "Oh, Annice!" picturized from Alexine Heyland's two-part novel which appeared originally in the Woman's Home Companion.

There are practically two leading men in "Oh, Annice!" the interest being about equally divided between young Vance Dunton, played by John McGowan, and the "uncle" who is only a few months older than himself, Michael Darcy, played by William B. Davidson.

Howard Hall plays Annice's father; Elsie MacLeod, Fred Jones, Franklyn Hanna, Ed Mock, Julia Hurley and George Dowling have prominent parts in the cast, and it was directed by the late John H. Collins.

Pathe Gets New Keenan Film

Star to Make Eight Productions Annually at Head of Own Organization—Work at Brunton Coast Plant

FOLLOWING the publication of the exclusive story in MOTION PICTURE NEWS of November 30, which told of the organization by Frank Keenan of his own company, to produce a series of pictures for Pathe distribution, it was officially announced this week that the star and Pathe had entered such an agreement. The announcement came from Pathe.

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, in officially announcing the signing of the agreement with Keenan for the distribution of a series of eight pictures, which will be made at the Robert Brunton studios on the West Coast, characterized it as one of the really big enterprises of the motion picture year.

"We consider ourselves fortunate, indeed," said Mr. Brunet, "in being associated with Mr. Keenan in this undertaking to which he will bring his ripe stage experience as both actor and producer, his concededly high personal gifts as an actor and his high ideals regarding the making and the quality of pictures.

"He will do big things in a big way, so far as artistry is concerned. His place as a screen star is secure and I am absolutely sure he will brilliantly achieve in shaping these pictures, made without restrictions and into which he can put the quality and convincing elements he considers essential to his ideals," continued Mr. Brunet. "It was he who made the impressive stage production of 'The Christian' and later staged the Liebler production of 'The Musketeers.'

"His delineations with Belasco are a part of stage history. His screen version of 'The Bells' is now being shown to the highest appreciation and as an actor and director Mr. Keenan promises to give all of the best he possesses in sincerely endeavoring to make pictures that will mark a big step forward in the advancement of the art of the cinema."

Mr. Keenan, in outlining his plans, announced that individual and independent production must bring a new and healthful era to the making, the distribution and the popular appreciation of the photoplay.

"I want to simply announce my object in making pictures independently," he said. "I have been for three years in the motion picture game and a rather close observer. Now I want to be an independent producer.

"I want to be able to produce motion pictures without dictation from any syndicate, from any personal manager, from any man, or men who can say to me: 'I want a picture made in two weeks,' not knowing I cannot make a good picture on that subject in less than four or five weeks.

"In other words, I am going into independent motion picture productions, the Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., to produce as good pictures as I can; to make as much money as is possible to make under the circumstances, and to make them without the handicap that is part and parcel of wholesale production of pictures as an industry."

Kemper Exploitation for "The Better 'Ole"

J. L. Kempner, well known for his exploitation of big special productions like "The Manxman" and "Lest We Forget," is attending to the preliminary details of the domestic operations of "The Better 'Ole," adapted from the stage comedy now playing at the Cort theatre, New York.

"On December 1 'The Manxman' will play in Rudd, Iowa, at the Electric theatre," he announced. "This is a town of 296 population and the engagement is only for one day. But the town is not in opposition to any of the larger cities thereabouts that we have not played, and we find no reason against accepting the booking gladly."

Vitagraph Elated At New Plan

Vitagraph Declares That Its New Star Series Releasing Plan Recently Adopted Has Proved Elastic and Popular

THERE is much satisfaction among the executives of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization over the fact that their new Star Series releasing plan, which went into effect on September 30, has proved to them its elasticity so well in the wake of the receding epidemic.

When it was announced at the beginning of the seasons that Vitagraph would release, during the course of the year, six series of rotating star features, totaling fifty-two five-reel productions, a serial episode for each week in the year and likewise a two-reel Big "V" Special Comedy each week, it was claimed that from the standpoint of elasticity and accommodation to the individual exhibitor's requirements, the Vitagraph plan had introduced a new era in film merchandising.

Vitagraph states that in the so-called reconstruction period of the industry, following the epidemic shutdown, its releasing plan and policy is proving a tremendous aid to exhibitors in the rebuilding of their business, and that despite the shifts and readjustments made necessary throughout almost every branch of the business, with the consequent uncertainty on the part of exhibitors with regard to their booking arrangements, the Vitagraph releasing plans are enabling exhibitors to know exactly what will be available on the Vitagraph program for each week during the entire year.

Vitagraph's weekly program for the year includes three separate and distinct units of service, which nevertheless offer in their entirety or in a variation of combinations, a service that the company claims will fit every need of every theatre.

Each week, Vitagraph releases a five-part Blue Ribbon Feature in Star Series. These rotating Star features may be booked in their entirety or on the basis of individual Star Series.

Gladys Leslie Is the Vitagraph Star in "The Beloved Impostor," a Blue Ribbon Feature

Vitagraph's serial service provides a serial-episode for every week in the year, giving exhibitors an unbroken chain of chapter-plays of known and proved quality and box-office power.

There is, in addition, a two-reel comedy service. Each week Vitagraph releases a big "V" Special Comedy and it is claimed for them that they have grown into country-wide popularity with amazing rapidity.

With these three units of service, therefore, and with the entire year's program definitely laid out and the dates of releases given so that exhibitors may know exactly what will be available for the period of the entire twelve months, it is said that the reconstruction of the exhibitor's booking arrangements far in advance becomes a simple matter, so far as the Vitagraph program is concerned.

Pathe Has Ruth Roland for Another Serial

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announced that a new contract has just been signed with Ruth Roland for her appearance in a fifteen-episode serial which will be ready for the screen immediately at the conclusion of Pearl White's new serial, "The Lightning Raider."

The new serial has been tentatively entitled "The Long Arm," and was written by Arthur Reeves, of "Craig Kennedy" fame, and Charles Logue. The scenario is by Gilson Willets, who wrote "Hands Up," Miss Roland's most recent Pathe serial.

The story is declared by the Pathe scenario department to be the strongest they have ever accepted and that it will offer thirty reels of sustained interest and intense climax. It deals with the theft of a tiger idol from a band of natives in Sumatra by three adventurers, and the many attempts of the band to recover the idol furnish the action and conflict themes of the serial.

Miss Roland's last serial "Hands Up," is declared to be one of the most successful ever distributed by Pathe. As it drew to a close exhibitors from all parts of the world began asking for another Ruth Roland serial, according to Pathe, and it was this demand which brought about the signing of the new agreement between the star and Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"The Long Arm" will be the sixth Pathe serial in which Ruth Roland has been starred, those previous being "Who Pays?" "The Red Circle," "The Neglected Wife," "The Price of Folly" and "Hands Up." "The Long Arm" will be produced by Astra Film Corporation.

Fair Binney has been engaged to play opposite John Barrymore in the new Paramount production, "Here Comes the Bride," under the direction of John Robertson.

Lloyd Willis Assists Berst in United

PRECEDING the release of its first production, United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., this week announced that Lloyd D. Willis has been appointed to the post of assistant to J. A. Berst, president of the organization.

The appointment is in the way of a promotion for Mr. Willis, who recently made a tour of inspection in United's Eastern territory. He has been with United about three months.

Mr. Willis, who was formerly with the Fox Film Corporation, brings to his new appointment a wide executive and organizing experience acquired not only in this country but in his motion picture activities abroad, including a recent organizing tour of Australia and New Zealand. As a newspaper man the United executive representative was on the staff of several papers, including a period of five years with one of the New York dailies. There his work attracted the attention of former Fire Commissioner Joseph Johnson, who appointed Mr. Willis his secretary. Later he held a similar post with Charles S. Whitman, then district attorney. Ability in organizing and grasp of detail attracted an offer from the motion picture field, and these qualities added to a ripened experience brought Mr. Willis an offer from Mr. Berst and have been important factors in the promotion just announced.

Mr. Willis will enter upon his new duties immediately.

Dorothy Phillips Brings Film East

Dorothy Phillips, star of Universal Special Attractions, with Allen Holubar, her director, and Frank J. Lawrence, were expected to arrive in New York this week bringing a complete print of Miss Phillips' latest picture. It is declared to be one of the most stupendous productions ever made. The filming required seven months.

The Universal arranged to have the picture exhibited at a special showing before officials of the company and others concerned. Later it is planned to put the subject on for premier at the Broadway theatre the week after next.

The title has not yet been selected, but in the general discussion concerning it the subject is described as a romantic production, with an interweavery of war as the background. The love theme is said to predominate throughout.

The print brought from the coast measures twelve reels. This will be cut down to ten reels or slightly less.

Jewel officials have begun to arrange for the distribution. They expect to make the production their chief offering for several months and to conduct one of the greatest campaigns of exploitation ever attempted for a single film.

In connection with the announcement of the Phillips picture, Universal has issued notice that it will confine its production operations hereafter to the making of Special Attractions. Several stars previously featured in Bluebird pictures have been transferred from that list to Special Attractions.

The complete list of stars in this group is now as follows: Priscilla Dean, Mary MacLaren, Monroe Salisbury, Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Dorothy Phillips and Carmel Myers.

Dustin Farnum Works on Second United

It has been announced from Los Angeles that Dustin Farnum and his company have returned from location in the filming of "A Man in the Open," the second production which Farnum will contribute to the United program, and that work has been started on the interiors.

In the Farnum company, which is using the Robert Brunton studios, are Irene Rich, Claire du Brae, Hershell Mayall, Lamar Johnstone and Robert Dowling.

The first of the Dustin Farnum-United productions is "The Light of the Western Stars."

Official War Review 23 Shows Wide Scope

A deeply impressive conception of the scope and immensity of the great war, with its Herculean tasks, is said to be given by No. 23 of the Official War Review, released by Pathe December 2 and called "The Far Flung Battle Line of the Allies." It shows how, from the Persian Gulf to the English Channel, on desert sands and amid Alpine snows, the armies of democracy waged the good fight for humanity.

Harmony of Allies Is Illustrated

Metro Says "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns" Shows Harmony of Allies

One of the Moments in Metro's "The Great Victory" or "Wilson or the Kaiser"

METRO announces that an inspiring patriotic spectacle furnishes the climax to the seven-act Screen Classics, Inc., super-feature, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," soon to be released throughout the country.

The representatives of all the Allied nations are shown standing at salute to their flags. These tokens of the united sentiment of all liberty-loving lands then merge and are transformed into one great heart, to typify the heart of all humanity.

The harmony between Europe and America is also shown in a more special way, through the love of the youthful hero, a native of Alsace-Lorraine who escapes from the German lines and returns to fight with the "Yanks," and the heroine, an American girl who remains abroad to nurse the wounded.

The historic words, "Unconditional Surrender," are given their broader significance, in regard to the demands of the Allies against the outlaw nation Germany, and also the more intimate, human meaning, when Amy, at the finish of the picture, comes into Conrad's outstretched arms.

This production, produced under the personal supervision of its author, Maxwell Karger, who is director general of all Metro and Screen Classics, Inc. features, has been completed. Charles Miller has directed it, from the scenario version of June Mathis and A. S. Le Vino, and it has been photographed by George K. Hollister, the man who also photographed "To Hell With the Kaiser."

In addition to being an appealing human story, "The Great Victory" is declared to be an accurate account in pictorial form of this, perhaps the greatest period in the world's history, and the events leading up to it both in America and in Europe. Great demands have necessarily been made on the skill of players and producers of "The Great Victory," on account of the lapse in time in this.

"The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns" is announced as a historical document which unfolds itself as it is read upon the screen. Creighton Hale as the young hero, Conrad; Helen Ferguson as his American sweetheart, Florence Billings as his sister Vilma, E. J. Connelly as their Alsatian grandfather, Paul Le Brett, and Frank Currier as a "dollar-a-year man," the father of Amy, carry on the story which is enacted against the background of present-day history.

"The Kaiser's Finish" Big at San Antonio

BOOKED to begin its first run at San Antonio, Tex., within twenty-four hours after it had been approved in screen examination, "The Kaiser's Finish," A. Warner's special eight-part state rights production on Monday began a week's engagement at the Empire theatre without a word of preliminary advertising or publicity of any character, and on the strength of its prophetic action and timeliness alone drew capacity audiences after the first day's performance.

"It is a clean up," declared Mr. Lytle, manager of the Empire, in a telegram to E. H. Hulsey of Dallas, who owns and is booking the production for Texas. In this telegram, filed on Thursday afternoon, Mr. Lytle also acknowledged receipt on Wednesday of the posters and lobby display matter, which usually is the basis for a pre-opening campaign of at least a week on a production like "The Kaiser's Finish." This was said to be after the feature had played for three days to capacity audiences at each performance.

According to Mr. Hulsey this is the first time in the history of motion pictures in Texas that a special production has opened to a week's run without any advance preparation.

Mr. Lytle was declared to be responsible for the unprecedented action. A print of the production was screened for him as the only condition upon which he would consider booking it. Immediately after reviewing it he canceled another attraction advertised to open at the Empire on Monday and booked in its stead "The Kaiser's Finish."

"Why I Would Not Marry" Released by Fox

Heralded by a nation-wide publicity and advertising which has created great interest among exhibitors and film fans, "Why I Would Not Marry," described as "the colossal 1919 morality drama," was released by William Fox. This play treats of the life problems of a girl who is pictured as "the most beautiful woman in the world."

"The Heart of Wetona" Is Finished by Select

Norma Talmadge's forthcoming Select Picture, "The Heart of Wetona," a screen version of the David Belasco success, is finished, and Miss Talmadge, who is now an Indian Princess, has returned to New York with her company, including Director Sidney A. Franklin, Thomas Meighan, her leading man, Gladden James and others.

But there were times during the star's work at Idyllwild when it looked as though the snow would come and go before the picture was finished, according to report. Princess Norma is glad to get back home, while Director Franklin and the members of her company are entertaining their friends with blood chilling stories of their experience in the west.

This latest honor gives Miss Talmadge the distinction of owning another high-sounding title, as last summer she was appointed deputy sheriff of Queens County by Sheriff Mitchell. And now Norma is an Indian princess.

Barriscale Subjects to Robertson-Cole

Negotiations have been completed for the release of B. B. Features starring Bessie Barriscale with the Robertson-Cole Company of New York City, who have contracted for eight subjects. This company will control the American, as well as the foreign rights on the films made with this star. The first film has been completed and is given a final title of "All of a Sudden Norma," and Director Howard Hickman is now at work on the second which is at present known as "The Trick of Fate." The latter is from a story by M. B. Havey, and the continuity was prepared by Fred Myton, who has a number of screen successes to his credit.

This definitely settles the frequently rumored report that the subjects in which Miss Barriscale appears were to be released by Hodkinson or continue under the Paralta trade mark. Howard Hickman will direct Miss Barriscale through the series.

Salvation Army Picture Directed by Jose

Edward Jose, during the past year and a half director of many Paramount and Artcraft successes, at his own request will direct the production of the Salvation Army picture for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He left New York for the Lasky studios at Hollywood, California, where the film will be started.

The photoplay will be produced as a timely offering and in its production the Salvation Army will co-operate in every way, Commander Evangeline Booth herself appearing in a number of scenes showing her in the discharge of her daily duties in connection with the wonderful work this organization accomplishes.

Although it is understood that Mr. Jose's contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is expiring, arrangements for this picture were made between Jesse L. Lasky, in charge of producing, and the director.

Catherine Calvert Joins Famous Players-Lasky

Catherine Calvert, the well known screen star and actress of the legitimate stage, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to play a leading part in the Salvation Army picture which this company is about to produce in conjunction with the big charity organization.

Miss Calvert, shortly after signing her contract, left New York City for the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal., where the film will be started in the near future under the direction of Edward Jose, the French producer.

Miss Calvert, after a successful stage career, has been widely exploited as a screen star. In the silent drama she has been starred in Keeney productions with much individual success. Among the pictures in which her personal achievements were most favorably received are "The Romance of the Underworld," "Out of the Night," "Marriage," "Her Family's Honor" and "Uphill Paths."

Miss Calvert began her stage career several years ago as star in "Brown of Harvard." Later she played in "The Deep Purple," "The Romance of the Underworld," "The Escape," and in vaudeville, a sketch, "To Save One Girl."

While on the road she met Paul Armstrong the well known writer, and married him. Sonce he passed away she has been doing motion picture work.

Gaby Deslys Cables Pathe About Picture

Gaby Deslys, the actress who is soon to appear on the screens of this country in "Infatuation," the Paris and London film which will be distributed by Pathe Exchange, Inc., has cabled Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, expressing her pleasure that Pathe will handle her picture in America. Her cable received at the Pathe home office, 25 West 45th Street, New York, is as follows:

"Delighted hear Pathe to handle 'Infatuation' in America. We are all so happy over here that the terrible war is over. May I express through you the wonderful gratitude we all feel to the American people for their wonderful and timely aid which enabled us to win the victory?

"Gaby Deslys."

"Infatuation" will be released by Pathe on December 1st and is a six-reel special feature.

Wintroub of Omaha Buys Film in New York

Max Wintroub of the Fontenelle Feature Film Co. of Omaha, Nebraska, is ready to leave for home after spending two weeks in New York.

He closed several important deals while in New York. Among others, he contracted for the output of the new Billy West Comedy produced by the Bull's Eye Films Corporation, for his territory.

Mr. Wintroub claims that the West is going to show a big booming business and he is all prepared for the oncoming rush.

William Duncan Enthuses on New Serial Story

When William Duncan started work on "The Man of Might," his new serial, which was written by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, he grew so enthusiastic that he started to talk.

He said at that time that "The Man of Might" was going to make "A Fight for Millions" look like "three plugged nickels."

Therefore, Vitagraph headquarters in the East has been anxiously awaiting the receipt of the early episodes of this new Duncan fifteen-episode thriller. A number of the episodes were received last week, and from the reports coming out of the Vitagraph's offices, Duncan's prophecy must have been more than fulfilled.

It is stated by Vitagraph that never before has a serial been released that starts off with anything like the smash and speed of this new chapter photoplay.

William Duncan is the star and director of "The Man of Might," and he is supparted by a cast which includes Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan.

Advertising Aids Ready for "Panther Woman"

In accordance with the usual policy of the Petrova Picture Company and McClure Pictures, Inc., to offer exhibitors some distinctive advertising aid in connection with each production bearing either of these brand names, the fifth special vehicle of Madame Olga Petrova is declared to be marked by the introduction of two excellent showman helps.

Both of these exploitation aids have been incorporated in the regular matter issued by the Special Petrova Publicity Bureau, and as in former instances, are being offered to exhibitors entirely free of charge. They can be secured from Bert Ennis, director of publicity for the above companies.

The promotion helps in question to be used in connection with "The Panther Woman," Petrova's latest picture, are a twenty-four-sheet stand and a specially prepared electrical lobby display. The picture is being released through the exchange on the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"Shoulders Arms" Breaks All Circle Records

Breaking all previous records for any production and necessitating extra midnight performances to accommodate the crowds, was the result of a week's run at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., second of the million-dollar Chaplin comedies distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

A wire from S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the Circle, to the First National offices, reads:

"Charlie Chaplin in 'Shoulder Arms' breaks all Circle theatre's attendance and receipts records. Solid week to such tremendous business that we were compelled to run extra midnight performances each day. Attendance even exceeds the run of 'My Four Years in Germany.'"

Denver Exchange Gets Six Arrow Productions

The Arrow Film Corporation closed another series of contracts under its consolidated plan of distribution with the International Film Corporation of Denver, Colo.

Contracts called for the delivery of two productions a month. The attractions taken over by the International for the territory of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico being:

"Her Aviator," produced by the Big Productions Film Corporation.

"The Perfect Model," being a re-issue of "Inspiration" produced by the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

"My Husband's Friend," being a re-issue of "The House of Mirrors" produced by the Rialto Film Corporation.

"The Woman's Law," produced by the Arrow Film Corporation.

"The Sunset Princess," produced by the Big Productions Film Corporation.

"The Web of Intrigue," "The Fire of Hope," "Human Shuttles" and "The Shadow of Fear."

These four latter productions starring May Allison and Harold Lockwood were produced by the American Film Company, Inc.

The International Film Corporation is under the management of C. John Predari, formerly general manager of the La France Feature Film Company of Denver.

Mr. Predari will shortly open an office at Salt Lake City, Utah, and will specialize in feature attractions.

"The Iron Test" Serial Reports Big Business

"The Iron Test" is the product of the pens of Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady and they have given this serial a radically different turn and twist in theme. This novelty is said to have found great favor with exhibitors and is stressed in the testimonial of Saul E. Harris, general manager of a chain of theatres in Little Rock, Arkansas, to Vitagraph:

"It has met with instant approval," writes Mr. Harris, "and from the favorable remarks heard in and about the theatre, I am sure that 'The Iron Test' will be even a better drawing card than any other Vitagraph serial—and that is saying quite a bit."

"Rainbow Trail" in War Service Bulletin

"The Rainbow Trail," William Farnum's picturization of Zane Grey's novel of the same name, is listed on the War Service Bulletin of the War and Navy Departments' Commissions on Training Camp Activities as having been selected for exhibition before Uncle Sam's soldiers and sailors. This production was chosen from the list of the National Board of Review.

Another William Fox picture on the schedule is "Bulling the Bolsheviki," a Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon, showing Capt. Bud Fisher's famous characters in Russia.

Goldwyn Gets Bennison Series

Louis Bennison's Star Series of Six Productions Will Be Distributed by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation

GOLDWYN announces that Louis Bennison will appear in six star productions under the Betzwood Film Company imprint and the Goldwyn exchanges will handles the distributing. Mr. Bennison registered very heavily, according to report, on the production entitled "Johnny Get Your Gun."

Already three Bennison pictures are completed and the first of these is in the hands of all the Goldwyn offices in twenty cities for trade showings for exhibitors.

"Oh, Johhny!" is the production selected for Mr. Bennison's debut. The story is by William Bayley and was directed by Ira M. Lowry.

Three seasons ago Bennison played New York in "Johnny Get Your Gun," being at that time absolutely unknown in the metropolitan theatres.

An indication of his quickly-attained popularity is afforded by these comments on the critics of that time:

New York Times: "If you are not completely won by Louis Bennison, you are Grand Canyon or a story by Booth Tarkington."

New York Evening Mail: "Mr. Bennison is a most engaging youth—a husky human fairly exuding good nature."

Providence (R. I.) Journal: "Louis Bennison completely submerges the play and the other players by the force of his personality."

Chicago Tribune: "A different, open-faced, good-natured individual who wins by force of humanness."

Cincinnati Post: "This new star has the build of a Jim Thorpe, the smile of a tooth powder advertisement, the grace of a jazz band."

Indianapolis News: "Like an invigorating breeze from the West—different—something to stir laughs where laughs are hard to grow."

Detroit News: "Louis Bennison has an undeniable talent for making himself liked by his audiences."

Kansas City Journal: "An admirable actor of genial and unaffected presence."

Bennison now comes to the screen in "Oh, Johnny!" surrounded by a cast of players including Anita Cortez, Alphonse Ethier, Edward Roseman, John Daly Murphy, Frank Goldsmith and Virginia Lee.

"Safe for Democracy" by First National

SPECULATION as to the exploitation of J. Stuart Blackton's "Safe for Democracy" is set at rest by Commodore Blackton's announcement that he has entered into an agreement with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., whereby that organization will distribute the production.

"Safe for Democracy" was given its pre-release showing as the feature of the Rivoli theatre (New York City) program during the week of November 3d, two days after it was completed under the personal direction of Commodore Blackton. The reviewers of the trade and daily papers were said to be unanimous in their opinion that it is an effective and entertaining patriotic picture.

The story, which is based on Marshal Crowder's famous "work-or-fight" law, is from the pen of Anthony Paul Kelly, author of "Three Faces East," the current stage success, and scores of other photoplays.

Mitchell Lewis is featured in the production, and the supporting cast includes Ruby de Remer, Gus Alexander, Helen Ferguson, Ida Darling, Eugene Strong, Aubrey Beattie, John C. Wade, John H. Goldsworthy and Sidney D'Albrook.

While no date has been set for the First National's release of "Safe for Democracy," the negative will be turned over to them this week, and it is understood that they will have prints made up immediately and present this timely production throughout the country as soon as possible.

"Safe for Democracy" is the first J. Stuart Blackton production to be handled by the First National Exhibitors who, it will be remembered, also distribute the features of such stars as Anita Stewart, Charlie Chaplin and the forthcoming pictures of Mary Pickford.

War Review for Many Months to Come

The Official War Review will continue to be issued for many months to come, and some of the scenes yet to be released are said to be of tremendous historical value, and the government considers it one of the greatest of educational.

"The Official War Review is the most successful serial ever exploited," announced Mr. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, after a farewell conference with Charles S. Hart, Director of Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, who recently sailed for Europe.

Late Episode Topical in "Fighting for Freedom"

News describing the surrender of the great German battle fleet, which has been hiding for more than four years at Wilhelmshaven, to the Allies, is declared by the Universal to throw particular interest upon the current episode of the serial, "Fighting for Freedom." The episode is the seventh of the series, and is entitled "Britain's Battling Bulldogs."

The chapter gives a complete review of the British navy, with particular attention to the huge dreadnaughts that conquered the German fleet on the famous occasion of their sally off the Skaggerak.

Fox Changes Mix and Brockwell Directors

With the resumption of activities in the William Fox studios at Hollywood, changes were made in the assignment of Fox directors.

Gladys Brockwell, who has just begun work on a new production, temporarily titled "The Framers," is now working under Lynn Reynolds, who has directed several of the most recent Tom Mix pictures.

Tom Mix is about to start work on a new picture, "The Wilderness Trail," under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint, who has directed Miss Brockwell for some time. This is not the first time Mr. LeSaint has directed Tom Mix. He made "Cupid's Round-Up," which was the first five-reel picture Tom Mix made as a William Fox dramatic star.

Ruth Allen with Palmer on Coast

Ruth S. Allen, for nearly two years scenario editor for Douglas Fairbanks, has resigned from the Fairbanks organization to assume the personal management of the manuscript sales department of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, Los Angeles.

Besides being one of the best-known editors of the film industry, Miss Allen is widely recognized for her keen knowledge of story values.

Under Miss Allen's management the Palmer Photoplay Corporation's manuscript department will handle the work of members of the Palmer institution and of successful authors.

Hobart Henley Renews His Goldwyn Contract

Samuel Goldsmith, president of Goldwyn Pictures, announces that Hobart Henley, dean of Goldwyn directors, has signed a long-term renewal of his contract to direct the productions of various Goldwyn stars.

His first assignment will be with Pauline Frederick, shortly to make her bow in her Goldwyn star series productions.

"I regard Hobart Henley as one of the most able directors in the industry," said Mr. Goldfish. "He grows more powerful every day. No problem is too great for him. With Pauline Frederick, one of the greatest dramatic actresses of the screen, his success should be tremendous."

Dodge Talks in Chicago Theatres

Henry Irving Dodge, author of the story, "The Yellow Dog," appeared last week in Chicago and delivered addresses to big crowds in three theatres which were showing the film version of his story. The Jewel production proved a big drawing card on its own merits and the added attraction of Mr. Dodge's appearance provided altogether a fine entertainment.

The theatres in question were the Twentieth Century theatre, Boulevard theatre and Marshal Square theatre. They are among the most prominent filmplay houses in Chicago.

Beth Ivins, Featured Player in a B. S. Moss Production

Beth Ivins Ingenue Lead in New Moss Film

The old adage about "an ill wind always blowing someone good" certainly applies to Miss Beth Ivins, who has stepped into a promising screen future via the latest B. S. Moss' six-reel feature, just completed and as yet untitled.

The ingenue cast for the leading role fell victim to the ill wind—that is, got the "flu"—and in order to save time Miss Ivins, engaged for a "bit," was given a chance at the part.

Director John S. Lopez declares that in Miss Ivins he has found the coming ingenue of the sympathetic type, and that his "find," in addition to good looks and youth, has intelligence and industry, as well as that indefinable something called "screen personality"—all of which in combination usually spell success.

"Little Orphant Annie" Secured by Hirsh

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Film Corporation, has obtained "Little Orphant Annie," the six-reel picturization of the late James Whitcomb Riley's immortal poem. Probably there has been no poem of Riley's which has been so widely read as this.

The featured members of the cast, carefully selected for types, are Coleen Moore, who plays the title role, and Thomas Santschi. The late James Whitcomb Riley also appears in the film, which should lend much added interest to it.

The Pioneer Film Corporation, of 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, is now disposing of territory on a state rights basis.

Sheer Appears with Ward

William Sheer, the newest Bluebird film player, has been "loaned" by Universal to Fanny Ward for a picture. In it Sheer is playing another crook part, which type of role has become his specialty. He calls it a "juvenile heavy."

New Ideas in Pearl White Coming Pathe Serial

"It is not necessary to have your episo crammed full of stunts in order to make successful serial," says Bertram Millhaus author of "The Lightning Raider," t Pearl White serial which Pathe will r lease in January.

"In 'The Lghtning Raider' we have a tempted to make a logical series of ep sodes with a logical heroine. The thril will be all there, but Miss White will n do a lot of spectacular leaps or dives suc as she has done in previous serials, b cause we believe we have constructed running story with such sustained suspen and so many well-timed climaxes that will not be necessary for the star to pe form the psysical feats with which she h long regaled the picturr public."

Standing as Major Thaw in Bert Hall Film

Herbert Standing, who plays the part of Major William Thaw in "A Romance of the Air," by Franklin B. Coates, was personally selected by Lieut. Bert Hall for this part because of his resemblance to the American Ace in face, figure and, curiously enough, even in mannerisms.

Major Thaw is the only other living member of the original Lafayette Escadrille besides Bert Hall, and the two aviators were said to be bosom friends in France. Mr. Standing will be remembered for his work in some of the recent Petrova Pictures.

Special Service Section on

"Cannibals of the South Seas"

MARTIN JOHNSON'S pictures of "Cannibals of the South Seas" give the exhibitor an opportunity to do something "different" with his program. Readers of "Seeing the Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel" will remember that when these pictures were given their pre-release showing at the Rivoli the program was commended as one of the most original that has been presented at any theatre. The pictures themselves put a new "pep" in the program, they get out of the ruts and not only interest in themselves, but they act as a tonic for future presentations.

Robertson-Cole Company has adopted an excellent plan for their release, in two parts. The first section includes 5,200 feet of film, and it is expected that these will be advertised by the exhibitor as he would any unusual feature. The other instalment is 4,000 feet and it is pointed out that these will largely carry themselves on the "word of mouth" advertising that the first portion of them has received. In other words, the exhibitor will have a pulling power ready made for his second week's show.

Yet there is nothing of the serial about these pictures. Each part stands out by itself and you are not handicapped with your second week's show in having an appeal only to those who have attended the week previous. The second half starts after Johnson and his wife have failed to receive the warning of the British consul against visiting the island occupied by the "Big Numbers" tribe of cannibals and includes some of the most thrilling adventures imaginable. Especially after you have shown the first portion of these pictures you can go the limit in advertising the latter part, and you will be backed up by all of those who have seen the first.

This striking one-sheet will get attention

LET us take a look at these pictures. Get the selling points of them as you go along.

In the first place, Martin Johnson was a companion of Jack London on the celebrated cruise of the "Snark," and during that voyage he became familiar with many of the tribes of the South Sea Islands. But it was on the voyage of 18,000 miles that Johnson took with his wife as his only white companion that brought out these amazing pictures. Travelling in small schooners, whale boats and native canoes they went among the Solomon and the New Hebrides Islands, sailing as far North as the Leuneuwa Lagoon, among the Line Island group. In the course of these journeys they were among people who had never seen a white face before, the most savage of savage.

Some of the things that they saw included a race of pygmies that were not known to exist; a group of islands actually manufactured by the natives themselves out of shells and stone: another island whose 782 inhabitants believes that there was nothing else to the world except their territory, and a race in the New Hebrides that buried the old men and women of their tribe alive when they had passed the period of usefulness.

In the latter part of their travels they visited the "Big Numbers" tribe after they had failed to get the warning of the British Government. Here they found the most murderous and repulsive of all the cannibal group. Johnson and his wife were permitted to land but they were quickly taken prisoners and only rescued in the nick of time through the arrival of a British warship.

THESE pictures are wonderfully illuminative, but they should not be advertised as merely "educational." The use of the word has been so abused that in some

This Picture Should be Made an Extra Special Feature

WHEN you book "Cannibals of the South Seas" start in to laying your plans in advance and on the basis that you are going to exploit it as a special feature and that you are going to do strong advertising. Certainly you do not want to attempt to run any other feature on the same bills, but rather to use comedies and other light matter with it. A two-reel comedy drama will balance the bill nicely, and such was used at the Rivoli, together with a comedy and the news weekly. You do not want anything that savors of the travel picture on the same program.

But in all of your advertising feature the cannibal picture just as strong as you would the most unusual story with your strongest star. Tell frankly, and in some detail what this picture is about, point out the elements of adventure in it and bring in the educational interest only by inference.

Teaser campaigns, stunt advertising and all of that sort of a thing is out of place with this offering. There is too much meat in it (not meant as a pun) to depend on anything of the freakish. Plain, unvarnished statement of fact, without the use of superlatives is all that you need.

MANY theatres have found it a good policy to tie up with one of the local papers in exploiting such a feature as this and here you have a splendid chance. That would give you a greater amount of advertising space than you would ordinarily purchase anl you could promise the newspaper a certain percentage of the profits above the actual expenses of the showing.

This suggestion is made for the benefit of the more timid exhibitors. In cities where this plan has been followed the general result has been for the theatre, on the next similar occasion to take the whole burden of the exploitation and therefore get the entire profits. The co-operation plan is an excellent one as a starter for the newspaper, too, for it generally convinces the exhibitor that really big advertising pays, when you have something unusual to deliver.

But whether you decide on newspaper co-operation or straight advertising go to the editor of your paper and explain the picture to him. You can give him assurance that you are going to use unusually large space, but also make the appeal that you are really doing your public a service by showing this picture. It is probable that you can get an advance story illustrated with photographs, and if you do you will arouse great interest for the film offers opportunities for an interesting real news story.

USE the title of these pictures in striking type, and play with the title the line that we have already indicated—"Photographed at the Risk of Life." That little sentence adds more of the thrill than a large amount of description would give.

After you have played up this you can afford to go into detail about the pictures. This is the sort of a production in which you can afford to give the selling talk at some length and be sure that the matter is read.

Use of pictures of these strange people of the South Seas is sure to attract immediate attention and there are an abundance of stills available for use in case you make your own cuts. In addition the Robertson-Cole Company has prepared some striking advertising in line effects bearing

SPECIAL MUSIC

It Will Add a Great Deal to These South Sea Pictures

REALIZING the importance of music with pictures generally, and especially with the South Sea films, the Robertson-Cole Company has made arrangements with the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Co. to supply the exhibitors with a specially prepared musical score, prepared by George W. Benyon. This will be available at all exchanges and at very nominal rentals.

The character of the picture lends itself to atmospheric music and because of the dearth of suitable materials so far as most exhibitors are concerned, there has been special attentiol given to the element of savage music, without it becoming too Oriental to detract from the character of the picture. There is considerable incidental South Sea dance music included.

MARTIN JOHNSON'S CANNIBALS OF THE SOUTH SEAS

"But just as soon as the traveler sets foot beyond these tiny areas under the personal and immediate control of the white man, he finds himself among savages, naked, treacherous, man-killing, and frequently man-eating." MARTIN JOHNSON quotations from Martin Johnson in describing the pictures. These can be used either as they are at present or as a foundation for further discussion. For instance, a couple of the single column advertisements might be used for the upper left hand and the lower right hand corners of the quarter page display and other material employed that will tell still more about the picture.

WE have told you some of the things that the pictures contain, and it would make a good advertisement to make a recital of these things in brief statements:

"Martin E. Johnson, chum of Jack London on the 'Snark,' and his wife cruised 18,000 miles among the strange cannibals of the South Seas to make these pictures. Nearly all the time the couple, who were accompanied by no other whites, were in peril of their lives.

"By trading schooner, whale boats and native canoes they made their way among the Solomon and New Hebrides Islands as far north as the Leuneuwa Lagoon.

"They pictured for you people who had never before seen a white man, people ranging from the most savage in the world, the man-eaters, to the most pacific people on earth, a tribe that has never made any sort of a weapon.

"They take you to an island that the natives built for themselves out of shells and stone and to a lagoon where live 782 who believe that there is no world except their little place; they take you to a tribe where the custom of burying alive the old is followed, and before the camera these rites are actually practised.

"They show you the native customs, the flat-footed dancing that will stir the most stolid to laughter, they thrill you with the perils of this man and woman adventurers, they will register on your mind so that they never will be forgotten.

"They are the history of adventurous travel—photographed at the imminent risk of life."

Study this picture carefully, see it in advance if you possibly can and there will be a dozen elements appeal to you that will make you all the more enthusiastic in in the advertising that you are going to do.

THIS picture should be advertised as far in advance as you ever advertise any big special event. As we have suggested this should give a general idea of the content of the film. This general advertising should be followed up by single sentence matter telling one of the incidents that the picture contains, and if you can do so each one of these points should be illustrated by a special cut.

Here is another good line to use:

"You will see the strangest people on earth, the cannibals of the South Seas and you will thrill with the romance and the peril of the nook of the world made famous by Jack London and Robert Louis Stevenson.

Sketch, the title and a quotation from Martin Johnson, forms this advertisement

Or this one:

"A young white woman risked her life at her husband's side that they might picture for you the fiercest people on earth—the cannibals of the South Seas—and there are mirrored for here stranger things than fiction has told and than one would be willing to believe without the pictured proof."

communities there is resentment when you offer productions that attempt to "teach" the public. Most of your patrons feel that you are pulling something "high brow" on them when you start out to talk about how instructive your offering is.

There is a splendid line in the advertising that has been prepared by Robertson-Cole—"Photographed at the risk of life."

It is really a history of adventurous travel. There is a thrill every moment, there is the drama of peril, with laughs mingled with it. You get a close-up study of people that you will never see with your own eyes, and you get an education by seeing them—but the point is that you are never conscious that you are being educated, because you are held with tense interest every moment.

HERE is one point to be considered: The war has banished our provincialism. In the news weeklies and in the Official War Pictures we have looked upon strange peoples and visited lands that were strangers to us. Our desires to know more of the world have been stimulated. The shams of life at home are worn away, people want to get out and see things and know things. The leaven is still working, and it will work for you if you exploit these pictures to the extent that you should.

You have a well nigh universal appeal here if you will take advantage of your opportunities. The fact that Mrs. Johnson, a beautiful little woman, accompanied her husband on this voyage is going to add a great deal to the appeal to the woman element, and all the more so since this war has awakened the world to the things that women can and have been doing. People will not look upon her presence among those savage tribes as a mere adventure, but as an achievement.

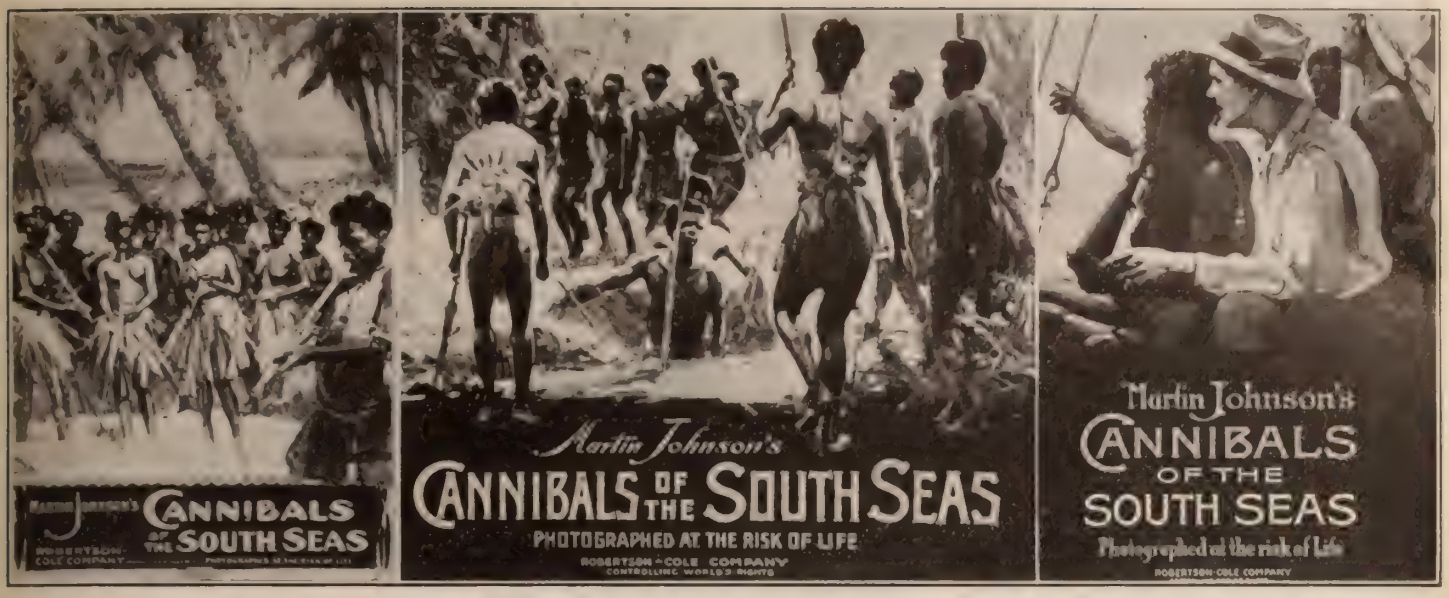
You have the appeal to the schools and colleges and you ought to be able to get the interest of the teachers in helping you put this over. And the great thing that will appeal to the box office is that the exploitation that you put on the first instalment is going to bring business in on the second.

AT THE RIVOLI

WHEN this picture was given a pre-release showing at the Rivoli Mr. Rothapfel used the entire footage, but it will be released generally as a 5,200 foot first part feature and then with 4,000 feet for the following week.

His program included "Il Trovatore" as the overture, the Rivoli Animated and Greek Evans singing "My Angel of the Flaming Cross." Then came a two reel O. Henry, "Mamon and the Archer" and finally the South Sea pictures.

When the second part of this picture is shown another feature may be used, but one with the comedy element is suggested.



Some of the striking paper for "Cannibals of the South Seas" is illustrated here. At the left is one of the one sheets, in the center a six-sheet and at the right a three-sheet. There are two additional one-sheet, a second three-sheet and a twenty-four-sheet. It would be advisable to use this paper with the circus style of advertising, especially if you have considerable outlying territory to which to make an appeal. Attractive cut-outs for the lobby can be made from these

Strong Appeals can be made to Schools and Churches

HAVE you ever used the personal guarantee plan in your advertising? If you have and have used it honestly here is another chance to repeat. If you haven't used it this is a good time to start.

Ordinarily we think the suggestion of the personal letter to the patron is poor stuff. Certainly the common type of letter that tells you that this and that is the best picture that "Mary Jones has ever done" is getting to be worse than worthless. Here is a production, though, where you need to call attention of every patron to its unusual character. Mr. Rothapfel, who rarely uses any advertising outside of his regular newspaper space, thought so much of it that he had a special folder printed to tell some of the things that the picture contains. Descriptive folders, including scene pictures are supplied by the distributors.

It would be well to prepare a special letter calling attention to the character of the picture and reciting the things that it contains. We would not confine the circulation of this to the regular mailing list (to those who ask for programs) but would send the letter, and folder included, to every possible patron. Remember, too, that there is a second portion of this picture and that you are going to get into your theatre the next week practically every one that saw the first half of the film and therefore you can afford to make a larger investment in the exploitation than you could if you were getting each person but once.

IF you can arrange to have a special showing of this picture for the teachers of your community, do so. They certainly will see in it wonderful educational value and it is likely that they will consent to talk to their classes about these cannibals and refer to the fact that the pictures are being shown at your theatre.

You can further co-operate with the schools by offering a prize or a series of prizes for the best essays written about these strange people. (However, in any case of contests where you use the mails, be sure to consult with the local postal authorities to get approval).

We have already mentioned the appeal to the woman element. Here is a good chance to get all of the clubwomen interested. If you feel it advisable, give a special matinee performance for them and if some one of the members wishes to make a talk let the clubs take charge of all the arrangements. Of course, this is not to be a free performance, but you should have it as early as possible in your engagement so that you can get the word of mouth advertising. If you can quote some of the more prominent women in your newspaper advertising it will add strength.

If you do this, be sure to bring out strongly that Mrs. Johnson braved these perils with her husband; in fact, that fact should never be lost sight of.

BY diplomatic dealing you ought to be able to get the women's missionary societies of your various churches to endorse the picture. Get the names of the officers of these various societies well in advance of the opening of the picture and call attention to the fact that this picture shows the kind of people that the Christian women of the world are trying to reclaim from savagery and point out that there could be no production more likely to arouse interest in the work of their societies than this. It is probable that you can go further than this in getting the endorsement of the Sabbath schools. But no matter how closely you co-operate with these bodies, do not, under any circumstances, go as far as one exhibitor in connection with another picture and allow a collection to be made in your theatre.

When you have followed these angles you have gotten about one hundred per cent exploitation and those in whom you haven't created a desire to see the picture are hopeless. The newspaper campaign will cover the men, and when you have the interest of the women and the children of your section aroused, you'll get the men anyway.

PAPER on this production is especially striking and includes three one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet and a twenty-four-sheet. All of these, except one three-sheet, which shows the heads of five of the cannibal leaders, are reproduced in these pages. The colors are very striking, the twenty-four-sheet being one that will stop the crowds in the street.

This picture should be posted like a circus. Plenty of paper ought to be used, especially if you have an outlying section to which you can appeal. You can get people to come to see this production that would not stop to read an ordinary advertisement if you will go to it with a smash.

We have advised straight exploitation through these articles, avoiding the freakish. We would follow the same idea in the lobby displays. One of the one-sheets contains a huge head of a warrior whom Johnson describes as the finest specimen of a man that he saw in the island. The twenty-four-sheet contains the head of another warrior and also Johnson and a third warrior together. All three of these can be used as cut-outs.

Don't let anyone induce you to go into the details of cannibalism in your lobby. Some "arm-chair exhibitor" suggests using a huge kettle. Don't do it. There is nothing revolting in these pictures, and don't manufacture anything of that sort for your lobby.

Clean, intelligent and generous exploitation is what you need here.

You are not offering anything of a "freak" character, but an unusual picture on its merit. Anything that leaves the impression that this is not a real feature is going to diminish your patronage.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Vitagraph News Bits

At least one motion picture company welcomed the recent rains in Southern California. The William Duncan Company of Vitagraph players received a delicious soaking in a heavy downpour making some long delayed rain scenes. While most of the companies on the Vitagraph lot had to suspend operations during the wet weather, Duncan was able to keep going.

One other Vitagraph Company continued work during the rain. James Young, director of Earle Williams, had his company at work in the dark stage during a portion of the rainy weather, and also used some interior scenes for the new picture, "The American Ace," under a glass enclosure.

Joseph P. Rock, of Montgomery and Rock, Vitagraph comedy company, is the subject of many side remarks around the studio owing to the fact that the comedian started to celebrate the signing of the armistice a week ahead of time. The erroneous telegrams published in some of the Los Angeles papers prematurely announcing peace so worked upon Mr. Rock's emotions that he stopped work in the middle of a scene and began a dance with pistol shot accompaniment. Since that time he has not failed to hear from his associates upon his actions.

Universal Newsettes

Universal City's production activities are almost as great beginning this week as before the close down of this big producing plant. Six producing units have resumed activities, and preparations are now being made for others which means they will be at work in a few days.

During the period the studios were closed the laboratories were completely rebuilt, remodeled and refurnished under the supervision of John Nicholous, who originally designed these laboratories, and who has been re-engaged by the Universal following eighteen months of service as superintendent of photography at the Triangle plant. The remodeled laboratories have a greater capacity and will make possible more efficient service in this department, having all the new devices which have been perfected since the laboratories were built.

The first company to resume production was that directed by Tod Browning and headed by Priscilla Dean. This company has begun the filming of "The Gutter Rose," an adaptation from a story by Evelyn Campbell, which was prepared for the screen by Harvey Gates. Wellington Playter, who recently returned west, will play the lead with Miss Dean, and Lon Chaney and Spottiswoode Aitken are named as members of this cast. This will be Aitken's first appearance in Universal made subjects following a long career in films, spent principally under the direction of D. W. Griffith.

ONE by one the producing organizations of the West coast are again assuming activities, but it is now estimated it will be at least the first of the year before all companies have resumed production, which means that many of the units will have been off from four to ten weeks.

November 19th was the date set for the resumption of activities at a number of the plants, but the week has passed and but a few companies have actually begun the work of filming new productions. Included in the number are six at Universal City, two at Christie Studio, one at the Lasky plant, one at the Morosco Studio, and one at the Goldwyn plant at Culver City. Plans have already been made for other companies to resume production, but delay has been caused in the preparation of stories, settings, etc.

The Henry Lehrman Sunshine Studio, Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet Companies, as well as the several producing organizations working at the Brunton Studios, and the three companies of the Thomas H. Ince organization, have worked through the epidemic close-down without a break.

Here and There

Louis William Chaudet has been selected by the National Film Corporation to direct the first of the Henry B. Walthall pictures. Mr. Chaudet is now making a selection for the production from two stories, one of which is "Lives for Sale" and the other a popular novel.

Al E. Christie has two comedy companies at work on the Christie studio lot, Hollywood. Dorothy Du Vor, formerly starring under the Lyons and Moran banner, made her debut as a Christie comedy star. Earle Rodney is playing in support of this little comedienne.

Preparations are being made at the Lois Weber studio, 4635 Santa Monica Boulevard for beginning work on the first Anita Stewart production to be made under the direction of Miss Weber. Actual work on the picture started the last week in November, although the complete cast had not been selected. The picture will probably be ready for its initial showing about the middle of February.

H. G. Harper, to Introduce American Films and Accessories Abroad for Inter-Pcean

Harper Tours for Inter-Ocean

Paul H. Cromelin, President of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, Appoints Horace G. Harper as Far East Field Representative

THE first important peace time move by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation developed in the appointment of Horace G. Harper as Far East field representative and his immediately leaving New York for the scene of his activities on the Twentieth Century Limited, Friday, November 22d.

A delegation from the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, headed by President Paul H. Cromelin, escorted Mr. Harper to the train. He sails from San Francisco on December 3d for Sydney, Australia, where he will spread the gospel of American films and motion picture accessories for a number of months, covering New Zealand also, after which he will go to India, visiting Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and Colombo; thence to Saurbaya, Dutch East Indies; Shanghai and Hongkong, China; and finally he will tell his story in Japan and the Philippine Islands, perhaps returning then to New York, depending upon advices from Mr. Cromelin.

All told it will be about a 40,000 mile trek from Inter-Ocean Building. Thursday evening, November 21st, the executives and staff of the Inter-Ocean gave Mr. Harper a farewell dinner at Reisenweber's, Columbus Circle.

Mr. Harper was bidden to "feed up" against the possibility of encountering food shortage in any of the distant lands he will visit. Since it was not considered likely that his associates would see him again for at least a year, the festivities lasted till the early hours of the morning.

As many of the staff as could be on hand next day left the Inter-Ocean Building at 2:15 o'clock to see the traveler off. A few of these dauntless survivors of the "night before" were: Paul H. Cromelin, George W. Newgass, Eugene H. Kaufman, Robert A. Foster, J. L. Kempner, Bert Adler, Louis Brock, Ricardo Castro, Gus Schlesinger, Al Hartlieb, Martin G. Cohn, Allan Lownes, E. C. Wallace, and others.

The NEWS man managed to rescue Mr. Harper from the Inter-Oceanites long enough to get the particulars of his trip. "I am an Englishman who possesses faith in the American film," said Mr. Harper. "As a purchaser of films for Australia in New York, and before that in London, I had a good chance to get a line on the work of the producers of all countries. I doubt if any man has looked at more pictures of international manufacture than the speaker, because of this very purchasing work here and abroad. My irresistible conclusion was this: not only are American pictures supreme at present, but they are the chief films of the future. In that feeling I go out to introduce them, or to advocate an increase in their use where they have already been introduced. Therefore, my campaign is not so much a selling one as educational. If we can develop the proper attitude of mind on the part of these far-off exhibitors and buyers, the sales will come of their own accord.

"I am also out to show the foreign picture men—or rather those who persist in the habit—the utter folly of showing junk films. With all due respect to the wonderful American film industry, it has not been careful in its handling of this evil. It is understood that the foreign market is a great source of profit to the American producer—at times his greatest source of profit—and yet he permits his sale of new films to be seriously reduced by the junkman who managed to get his old prints, and then sell them to foreign buyers who ought to be using the new pictures. Aside from the sales loss, there is a loss in quality reputation that is just as harmful. The foreign picturegoer judges the quality of American films by what he sees on the screen; and then sees junk, often produced as long as five or six years ago, which does not begin to indicate the present day standard of American pictures.

"Lots of this junk was bought up in London and shipped from there to the Far East, but a check on the evil was brought about through the war, when shipping tariffs became so high on new films and junk alike that the junk dealers could not meet it, many going out of business. As I say, this was strictly a war development, and it was not in the slightest due to the efforts of American producers. Now that the war is over and shipping restrictions will speedily dissipate, the junk dealer will come back—but he can be met by a campaign of enlightenment right amongst the very people he hopes to supply.

"I am likely the first representative of an American film concern who will talk a double gospel of pictures and accessories. The latter are strictly of American vintage also—Speer carbons, which are made in St. Marys, Pa., and the "Fulco" line of supplies, consisting of three hundred articles all of them manufactured in Chicago. I shall further introduce the Globe steel reel—which is made in Pittsburgh, Pa. Do I fear German competition now? It is true that they make a good carbon, but the American-made carbon has been shown by tests to stand up with that from any other country. Our accessories are admittedly better than theirs, and there are more of them. German motion picture accessories, some of them quite unimproved, held sway in many of these countries before the war, but I think this was due to the tremendous price reductions which are impossible today, as labor costs have risen in the Central Empires to an unprecedented degree."

Francis Ford New Serial in Work

Francis Ford Is Working Energetically to Complete Later Episodes of His New Fifteen Episode Serial, "The Silent Mystery"

FRANCIS FORD is hard at work on a new serial which, he says, will surpass all previous efforts in swift action and in the popular element of mystery. A brief season in the production of feature dramas and a number of shorter subjects had made him eager to get back to the making of another multiple-reel picture.

He declared that he had stored up for future use some big punch ideas, and that a number of weird electrical effects gave added zest to the opportunity presented by the new fifteen episode serial, "The Silent Mystery."

Known as one of the hardest workers in the business, it is not surprising to find that he is playing a lead as well as directing the production, but that double role, according to an admirer, is what makes a "Francis Ford Serial."

"Frank has gone about the new production with characteristic energy," said one of the company, "he has surrounded himself with a huge cast, picked principals whom he knows and feels he can depend upon, and provided a script that has a thrill to every line.

"Anyone who has seen him work knows that his hurry-up methods will permit of no dragging at any stage of his productions, and as the serial is the form considered best adapted to that rushing headlong action so generally popular with the masses, it is the ideal medium.

"The first six episodes recently reviewed give the pleasing assurance that Frank knows the war is over. It brings strange settings and situations to replace the recent over-supply of mimic warfare, German spies, and pacifistic slackers. The first episodes are laid in Egypt, and the swiftest of paces is struck in the first few hundred feet. From then on there is no let up, and there is action piled on action as the mysterious elements are developed."

Mae Gaston, who has appeared with Francis Ford before, plays the heroine, a beautiful American girl, wedded by an ambitious mother to a wealthy suitor who is found mysteriously murdered within an hour after their marriage. The mother herself is suspected of the theft of a sacred jewel known as the "Eye of the World" from a pagan temple, and its recovery is entrusted to the Priestess Kah, a big part in which lovely Rosemary Theby is said to be particularly well cast. Peter Gerald, long associated with Ford in his serials, has a prominent part, and also acts as technical director.

The character creation, Phil Kelly, soldier of fortune and sometime Secret Service man, which Francis Ford has made a familiar figure, is the star's own role, and in the wide scope afforded by a 15-episode drama he has had a splendid opportunity for the greater development of this serial.

From the offices of Hiller & Wilk comes the announcement that the distribution of "The Silent Mystery" will be along entirely new lines, details of which are now being worked out. Mr. Wilk is authority for the statement that the new plan will prove most equitable and will afford the exhibitors a real opportunity for generous profits.

Good Posters Vital, Says Robertson-Cole

THE poster plays a vital part in the success or failure of a film," declares one of the officials of the Robertson-Cole Company. "A poster is good or bad, according to its advertising value. It goes without saying that a good poster attracts and that a bad one repels.

"Although screen producers are improving in this respect, they have in the main disregarded the value of artistic posters from the very start. In the very first days of the photoplay, old theatrical posters were purchased and used to advertise film plays. Whether or not they described the actual action mattered little. Of course, those days have passed.

"When we secured the world releasing rights of Martin Johnson's remarkable 'Cannibals of the South Seas' we decided to place our ideas upon posters in operation. The result is that 'Cannibals of the South Seas' has, to our way of thinking, the most colorful, artistic and atmospheric posters of the year.

"We could have secured cheaper posters at a considerable saving, but the advertising value of these is worth far more than the difference in price. They describe Mr. Johnson's remarkable series of pictures as no written or spoken words could. They will unquestionably help the success of the films. We are staking our faith in the psychological value of the good poster in that statement."

The "Cannibals of the South Seas" posters were designed and executed by the Greenwich Lithographing Company.

Gaumont Sends Cameras for Flying Stunts

The Gaumont Company sent a corps of expert cameramen under the personal direction of Pell Mitchell, editor of the semi-weekly independent news-reels, the Gaumont News and Graphic, to the aviation training fields of Oklahoma and Texas to record in motion pictures the making of an aviator from the time he enters the service, an ambitious recruit, until he is graduated as a finished flyer.

The first instalment is shown in Gaumont News No. 35, released on Tuesday, November 19. This series was taken at Camp Dick, Texas, and shows the "ground work" which starts the training of the future "ace"; the work which puts and keeps the recruits in good physical condition; the equilibrium tests; the healthful amusements provided, etc.

Educational Names Its Parke Feature

The title of the Educational Films Corporation's multiple-reel feature, which has been in the works since June last, has been finally chosen, and the picture is practically ready for a Broadway pre-release before general distribution to the country. "The Key to Power" is the title selected. It symbolizes the struggle for the possession of potential and kinetic energy which forms the theme of the play and out of which arises the conflict of wills between the lovers. The hero and heroine are Bruce Wendell, an ex-army officer and owner of a chain of mines, and Miss Anne Blair, a West Virginia girl. "The Key to Power" is not a war play, for while the era is that of international war the scenes are laid in the Allegheny Mountains, Washington and New York, and the love story is in no way dependent on the events in France.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational, went with J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the Epoch Producing Company, to California on November 24. During Mr. Hammons' fourteen-day absence on the transcontinental trip, the arrangements for the distribution of "The Key to Power" will be in abeyance. On his return he promises important announcements not only regarding this release but also concerning the future policy of the Educational and some valuable new accessions to its short-reel material.

Compliment Pleases Dolores Cassinelli

Walter Knight, who handles the publicity for Adolphe Osso, who in turn looks after the interests of Dolores Cassinelli, the star, advised MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week that Miss Cassinelli is overjoyed at the way in which President Wilson's wife congratulated her on her appearance in the production, "Lafayette, We Come!" The occasion was the benefit performance at the Knickerbocker theatre in Washington of Leonce Perret's film. Miss Cassinelli was also congratulated by Mrs. Franklin K. Lane, Mrs. Lansing and Mrs. Herbert Hoover.

Miss Cassinelli made a short talk at the showing of the picture.

DIRECT CURRENT

Motion Picture Carbon

The Silvertip is the standard negative carbon for direct current projection. It is of small diameter and is heavily plated with metal to give it a high current carrying capacity. When used with the Columbia upper it gives a pure white light of high intensity.

The illustration below shows clearly the difference in size of the Silvertip negative and the old negative carbon. The great improvement in positive crater is also shown.

The blunt point of the negative carbon in the old system permits the negative spot to wander, since the spot covers but a small portion of the point. The negative spot on the Silvertip covers the entire point with the result that the arc cannot wander and cause a flicker on the lens and screen.

Society of Motion Picture Engineers

THE meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held in Cleveland on November 18, 19 and 20 marked a new era in the development of the Society and its influence.

The value of the work and actions of the Society was demonstrated. There is no doubt that from this time on the Society will be looked upon as a court of last resort in all technical matters connected with the motion picture industry. It is pleasing to the entire membership to note that some of the federal authorities are strongly urging projectionists to obtain copies of the Transactions of the Society, in order that their knowledge of projection problems may be increased.

The invitation of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to the Society of Motion picture Egnineers to affiliate with them was greatly appreciated, though it was unanimously decided by that body that under no circumstances should the Society, at any time, affiliate with any other organization. The Society stated that it was willing at any and all times to assume any standardization responsibility which any branch of the industry might wish to delegate to it, providing this standardization has not already been taken care of by the Society.

The establishment of a new standard film width for small projectors for home and educational use was a step in the right direction. This new standard may or may not be adopted by the manufacturers of small projectors, but, in the opinion of the majority of those present at the meeting, it was believed that even those at the present time opposed to it would ultimately approve of the action taken.

This new standard, which is for home and school use, means a broader use of motion pictures and the adoption of this standard will tend to lessen any competition which might occur between the church, home or school and the motion picture theatre.

A committee was appointed by the Society composed of absolutely disinterested parties to work with and advise the Fuel Administration as to recommendations which may well be made to the various branches of the motion picture industry for the saving of electrical current, and therefore the conservation of fuel.

This committee will undoubtedly be called upon by the Fuel Administration should the stringent fuel regulations continue to be put into effect.

Another important stand which was taken by the Society was the adoption of the name "Projectionist," to take the place of "Operator," when applied to the man or men who are responsible for the projection of the picture on the screen.

Carbons and the incandescent lamp as a light source, the condenser system and its functions in connection with projecting the picture, as well as the advantages in the use of the new standard, narrow width film for portable projectors.

There were other subjects treated such as color cinematography, the making of motion picture film, sprocket teeth and film perforations and their relationship to better projection, fundamental principles for the measurement of illumination in motion picture projection, all of these subjects being accompanied by a discussion.

The officers elected were as follows:

H. A. Campe, Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., President for one year
A. C. Roebuck, Enterprise Optical Co., Vice-President for two years
E. K. Gillett, Motion Picture News, Secretary for one year

The Society gave voice to its appreciation of the untiring work and perseverence of C. Francis Jenkins, its retiring president. On July 24, 1916, Mr. Jenkins called together in Washington certain men interested in the industry and it was at this meeting that the Society was first organized. Its growth since then has been remarkable and its future position in the trade is absolutely assured.

In honor of Mr. Jenkins' labor the office of past president was established to which Mr. Jenkins was elected and this office is to be held by him during the term of his successor.

Although a definite date has not been set, the next meeting of the Society will be held in Philadelphia some time during the month of April, 1919.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Conducted by Alfred S. Cory

Cleveland an Interesting City from the Projection Viewpoint

OUR recent excursion to Cleveland, Ohio, to attend the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, afforded us the opportunity of a brief glance into the activities of the "sixth greatest city" in things pertaining to the "fifth greatest industry," and we shall endeavor in the following paragraphs to record some fleeting impressions gained during a two-day tour of visits to manufacturing plants, research laboratories, executive offices, and the projection rooms of a few theatres.

As a motion picture city Cleveland has all the initiative and ideals of the greatest producing centers, such as New York and Los Angeles, and a wealth of interest and enthusiasm in such matters which finds its outlet in the production and use of up-to-date apparatus, combined with numerous innovations in exhibiting methods.

Early on the morning following the concluding session of the Engineers' meeting, we were grabbed by Mr. Wm. C. Kunzmann, the genial representative of the National Carbon Co., and transplanted, in short order, to the vast works of that concern, which are situated some distance out from the center of the city.

An enormous variety of articles, mostly composed of, or containing, carbon in some form or another, are produced by the National Carbon Co., but as our time was limited and as it would have taken at least a month to study the whole works properly our guide, Mr. Kunzmann, decided to acquaint us at once with the process of manufacturing arc light carbons, of which projector carbons are one variety.

Powerful crushers, rollers, and stamping mills knead and refine the mixture of carbon flour and other tarry constituents, which, when of proper consistency is fed to a powerful machine which forms the actual carbon rods. The formation of the carbons in lengths of five feet or so is the most interesting item to witness of the entire carbon manufacturing process, so a brief description of how carbons are formed may prove of interest. The carbon mixture is squirted, at terrific pressure, from a round nozzle just the diameter of the carbons being made, and the soft carbon rod is allowed to run the length of a groove cut in a board held level with the nozzle. When the carbon has run the length of the groove in the board it is severed at the nozzle by the finger of the operator; the board is shoved sideways a trifle to bring another groove into line with the nozzle, and another length of carbon immediately traverses this groove also. The carbon is continuously issuing from the nozzle, and assistants rapidly move the grooved boards sideways to receive the endless succession of rods into which the plastic carbon is cut, at the nozzle, by the squirting machine operator. When a board is filled with the freshly squirted lengths of carbon, it is instantly replaced by another, and no cessation of activity occurs until the charge of carbon mixture contained in the machine is exhausted.

A needle of suitable size is fixed in the center of the nozzle when cored carbons are to be made; in this case the squirted carbon rods have a hole running through them, which is later filled with the core material. The National Carbon Co. have recently commenced the stamping of their name on all projector carbons, which is very easily done by attaching an appropriately lettered steel roll to the nozzle of the squirting machine. One side of the plastic carbon rod issuing from the nozzle touches the circumference of this roller stamp, which is caused to revolve by friction, thus lettering the carbon along its entire length.

Another section of the plant is devoted to the baking of the carbon rods, which process is carried out at high temperatures in large furnaces of fire-brick, heated by gas. Due to the tremendous heat employed in vitrifying the carbons, these furnaces rapidly deteriorate, and have to be rebuilt after two or three loads of carbons have been baked therein.

After the long carbon rods have passed through the baking ovens they are cut up into the commercial sizes, and those with hollow centers, which are to become cored carbons, then have the coring material inserted. The coring of carbons is another interesting operation to witness, and may be briefly described as follows: The coring mixture is a black paste of much more fluid consistency than is the dough of which the exterior of the carbon is formed, and it is intermittently squirted from a nozzle on the coring machine. The process of coring carbons consists in rapidly placing the cut-up carbons so that their hollow centers are brought in line with the nozzle of the coring machine, whereupon the mechanism is operated to squirt a stream of the coring material right through the center of the carbon. Due to the pressure at which the core material is ejected from the nozzle, it passes entirely through the hollow center of the carbon, a small amount running out of the further end. The carbons are fed up to the coring nozzle, and removed again, by hand, the operators on this process working with amazing speed.

Before leaving the manufacturing departments of the National plant, we were shown the interesting method by which a plating of copper, or other metal, is applied to certain varieties of arc-light carbons. In principle the plating, or metal coating, device is very simple. It may be said to consist of an endless belt, running over rollers, and passing down the length of a long room. On the periphery of this belt are countless sockets into which the ends of the carbons are slipped by operators at one end of the machine. The carbons of course project from the belt, like spokes from the center of a wheel, and first pass downward into a long narrow tank containing a solution of the salts of copper which deposit the metallic coating upon the carbon. After traversing the length of the room immersed in the solution, the carbonds are strongly coated with metal, and the belt then takes an upward turn, bringing the coated carbons successively out of the solution. The plated carbons now pass back down the room, being now on the uppermost part of the traveling belt, and by the time they arrive at their original starting point they are dry, and are rapidly removed from the slowly moving belt. Uncoated carbons are immediately installed in their places and so the coating process goes on continuously.

The splendid achievements of the American manufacturers of arc-light and projector carbons during recent years have been largely due to research work upon arc-lighting efficiency and the chemistry of carbon combinations, and we next turned to the research laboratories of the National Carbon Co., where, among other experimentalists, we had the pleasure of talking with Messrs. Mott, St. John, Moore and Eynon.

During recent years the flaming arc has been the subject of extensive experiments on the part of Mr. Mott and other workers in his laboratory, and we were shown an interesting series of test trims, showing various colored burning residues, which Mr. Mott had secured by forming cups in the ends of the lower carbons, filling them with salts and compounds of the various elements, and then burning these experimental trims in a photo-engraver's lamp. While the color deposited upon the sides of the burnt carbons permits, in most instances, the establishment of the identity of the substances experimented with, the examination of the carbons themselves is not the primary purpose of Mr. Mott's experiments, which have for their aim the analysis and study of the arc, or flame, itself, when various compounds are burned in it.

To this end a sheet of metal pierced with a small hole is placed in front of the arc, in Mr. Mott's apparatus, and a simple convex lens placed before this hole projects an enlarged picture of the craters and arc flame upon the white wall of a darkened room. The color and characteristics of the arc flame are then studied visually and spectroscopically, and the influence of the salts of all elements, and mixtures of them, upon the resultant arc can thus be conclusively determined. A technical discussion and description of this work is given in Mr. Mott's paper on "Chemistry of the Flaming Arc in Relation to Luminescence" (Trans. Amer. Electrochemical Soc., Vol. 31, 1917).

Following the chemistry division of the laboratory, the testing department next commanded our attention, and here were to be seen arc lamps of every conceivable type, in which sample trims of the carbons specially made for them are tested by burning them in the actual lamps. Here, also, the photometric apparatus is maintained for recording candle-power and distribution data, and on the day of our visit some interesting photometric measurements were to be made by Dr. St. John of the laboratory. A Sperry searchlight arc had come in for study and photometric testing. The Sperry lamp was recently described in the "Picture Making" Department of the NEWS under the name Sunlight Arc, which is the term applied to the form of this lamp used in photography.

This lamp is, perhaps, the most powerful light source in use today, its intrinsic brilliancy being rated as more than 100,000 candle-power, and it is necessary to greatly reduce the initial brilliancy of this source in order to make photometric measurements. For this purpose Dr. St. John first allowed the beam to fall upon a plate of ground glass, which allowed a large amount of the incident light to pass through, but reflected a comparatively small percentage at the first surface. This reflected beam was further reduced in intensity by repeated reflections from glass plates mounted at proper angles in a blackened box, and finally fell upon the screen where its intensity was to be measured. The initial brilliancy could readily be computed from the final measured result, as the reduction factor of the system of reflectors was known.

On another floor were located apparatus for the measurement of the intensity of the motion picture arc and of the beams projected by searchlights and optical lanterns. While talking about the subject of crater brightness with Messrs. Mott and Moore, we elicited their opinion on the subject of the relationship between screen brightness and amperage at the arc, in the case of the D. C. arc at various amperages. It is known that the brightness of the D. C. arc crater becomes a constant at the melting point of carbon, and it is also known that while the crater area of the arc increases with increasing amperage, only a portion of the increased crater area can contribute to the illumination on the screen, due to physical limitations imposed by the projector mechanism and optical system.

It would seem, therefore, that after the maximum crater area had been reached which could be utilized by the projector optical system, no further increase in screen brightness would be attainable by further increasing the current at the arc; but in practice a noticeable increase in screen brightness does result when the arc current is further increased, although the added brightness at the screen is by no means proportional to the increase in current. Mr. Mott explains the observable increase in intensity when the amperage at the arc is increased to such an extent that the crater area exceeds the transmitting capacity of the projector optical system, as due to the fact that the brightest portion of the crater area becomes more nearly stationary as the current is increased, whereas it wanders considerably at lower amperages. It will at once be appreciated that the radiation from the brightest portion of the crater surface can be much more completely and efficiently focussed and transmitted to the screen when this region of greatest brightness remains stationary than when it travels around on the crater surface, and thus the seeming discrepancy between theory and observed facts is accounted for.

After viewing to our hearts' content every phase of the National Carbon Company's activities that could possibly be of interest in connection with motion pictures, our guide, Mr. Kunzmann, conveyed us to the factory of the Hertner Electric and Mfg. Co., which is only a short distance from the National plant.

There we were met by Messrs. D. C. Cookingham, secretary and treasurer of the Hertner Co., and H. K. Cookingham, manager, who proceeded to demonstrate the performance capabilities of the Hertner Double Arc Transverter, a splendid A. C. to D. C. generating outfit which delivers constant current and is making good in the theatres wherever used. The limitations of the present article prevent us from doing justice here to a description of the "Transverter," but a special article on the device will eventually appear.

Small Images Projected to Large Size

Mr. F. B. Merrill, Jackson, Mich., writes as follows:

I am in need of some information which I hope you can give me. What I wish to know is if it would be possible to make a lens to project pictures one-eighth inch square the same distance as is now done in the average theatre. The size of the picture upon the screen must be as near the size now used as is possible. This would require a lens 48 times more powerful than is now used. Do you think these lenses could be made?

I would also like to know if a lens could be made for opaque projection, on the Balopticon principle of projection, for projecting one-eighth inch pictures for four feet upon a screen between one and one-half feet square to two feet square. Do you think a lens can be made to project the pictures this way for the distance stated? In the moving pictures of today the single pictures are ¾" by 1"; now would it take as much light to project the ⅛" pictures by direct projection as is now required in the moving picture machines?

In reply:

In order to project images only ⅛" square (either from slides or film) up to the size of the average screen picture encountered in theatres, a lens of much shorter E. F. than any at present obtainable would be required for use on the average throw, or projection distance.

Undoubtedly such lenses could be specially made, but not just at present, as the optical companies have not yet been released from the war work to which all their energies have been devoted during the last few years. It will probably be at least six months before the optical manufacturers can consider any special work, and the first lenses of any special construction will be quite costly, as you are paying in the first place for the skilled work of the designer and computer. After a satisfactory design is evolved, and the initial objectives made, similar ones can be obtained in quantities at a much lower price.

We believe, from our experience, that your proposition to project ⅛" images at such great magnifications is totally unfeasible, assuming that the images are photographic, because at such magnifications the silver grains, and clumps of grains, in the emulsion of the film, will be very much in evidence on the screen. These grains will be comparable in size to the finer details in such small pictures, and will break the screen image up into a coarse, grainy reproduction of the image on the film. A study, at fairly close range, of projected motion pictures, as made at present, will probably convince you that the positive emulsions now available cannot stand much greater magnification than is usual without giving a very grainy image.

With regard to a lens on the Balopticon principle; the lenses used in opaque projection are no different in design or principle than those used in projecting transparencies. The object, or picture, is merely illuminated, at an angle, from in front, and the illumination from the picture surface is then reflected into the lens (either directly or by auxiliary reflectors), and thence projected to the screen. You could undoubtedly have lenses made to project the size image you require, but we know of no lenses now on the market which would fulfil your requirements.

If you propose to project a tiny image ⅛" square up to the size to which the usual cine images are magnified, you will have to illuminate the small image much more brightly than would be necessary for the standard cine image, in order to have each appear equally bright upon the screen (the size of the screen pictures, of course, assumed equal in each case). You can readily see that this is true when you consider that the light sent to the lens by the small picture ⅛" square has to cover as large an area on the screen as the greater volume of light sent to the lens from a film picture of ¾" x 1" size. As the volume of light supplied by the ⅛" picture is much the smaller, its intensity must be made greater, in order to secure equal brightness at the screen.

Porter Makes Trip in Interests of Simplex

E. M. PORTER, general manager of the Simplex Company, is now on a two weeks' trip throughout the country in the interests of the Precision Machine Company, 317 East 34th Street, New York, N. Y.

The journey has been made necessary by the changed industrial and economic conditions facing the country as the result of the advent of the return of general business to a pre-war basis. It is Mr. Porter's intention to study the local situation at first-hand in the principal distributing points of the Simplex products.

He expects to obtain valuable data which will enable him upon his return to New York City to complete extensive sales plans, long under consideration, which have been held in abeyance by the unusual business conditions of the last few months.

Doings of Dubuque

GEORGE BROMLEY has opened the new Home theatre at Elston avenue and Montrose boulevard. Mr. Bromley proposes to show what can be done with three-hundred seat houses.

LEE HERZ, president of the Silee Film Exchange, has made a quick jump to Indianapolis, expecting to do considerable business with "Ashes of Love."

MRS. EMMA COHN, manageress of the Casino theatre, has again demonstrated what quick action in the show business means. At 2:30 Monday morning when the whistles and bells were announcing that the armistice had been signed, the lady got busy, got her operators out of bed, managers, cashiers, and all, and had them down in the theatre, opened it up with the latest News Weeklies, and had a crowd lined up way out into Madison street before six o'clock in the morning. An accomplishment that some of the loop managers could have done well to emulate.

Consider the Evidence

Since the Projector is (or should be) a fine piece of mechanism, to perform work upon which depends the success of your undertaking, you owe it to yourself to consider all the evidence that can help you in the selection. Let us present it:

(1) The Simplex never dominated the field just because it was alone and no one had yet undertaken to build a better Machine. But it entered a closely fenced-in market with an argument of quality so convincing that it quickly grew into favor, until to-day it dominates the field of high-quality projection, proved by the fact that three out of four go to replace other makes and that it is practically the only Machine considered by the masters in the industry.

(2) When you buy a Simplex you not only buy the best make of Projector, but the best Simplex ever made as well. Our Distributor will not offer you a new Machine of an old model for the sake of getting your order on a price basis. There is but one model and one quality of Simplex—the highest.

(3) When you buy a Simplex you buy it of a man with whom doing business contains the utmost of satisfaction. He doesn't sell the Simplex because he makes most money on it; and he knows that the after-profits for repairs are almost nil. He sells the Simplex because he thinks more of his reputation than of immediate profits. He never needs to go around another street when he sees you coming. He knows he's sold you the best there is and that you appreciate it because it makes you more money than even next-to-the-best could.

VERDICT: IN FAVOR OF THE SIMPLEX

How could the jury bring a different verdict, with such evidence before it?

Tinting and Toning of Eastman Positive Motion Picture Film

[Latest instructions issued by the Eastman Kodak Co.]

PART II—TONING

AS distinct from tinting, a toned image consists of a color image embedded within a layer of colorless gelatine, so that while the high-lights are clear, the shadows are colored.

The coloring matter may consist of an inorganic colored compound or a dye, or of a mixture of both, and by wholly or partially replacing the black and white silver image by one or more of these substances, a colored image is produced.

It is, of course, important that the colored compound should be as transparent as possible so that the full tone will be apparent on projection. In this respect, while some samples of toned film appear colored in the hand, they produce a substantially black and white image on projection, so that when judging any particular tone it is absolutely necessary to view the image on the screen.

Of the various inorganic colored compounds, the metallic ferrocyanides are the most suitable for toning purposes of which:

Iron (ferric) ferrocyanide is blue,
Copper ferrocyanide is red, and Uranium ferrocyanide is reddish brown.

It is the object in toning to replace the metallic silver composing the image more or less by one of the above compounds or by a mixture of these. In this way intermediate tones are obtained.

Toning may be effected either by a single solution process or a two solution process.

Two Solution Process

This consists of first converting the silver image into silver ferrocyanide by a suitable bleaching bath, thoroughly washing, and acting upon the ferrocyanide image with a metallic salt, usually in presence of an acid, the metallic ferrocyanide being produced by double decomposition. The reaction, however, is never complete, so that the image is mixed with undecomposed silver ferrocyanide which tends to make the image opaque, but at the same time it also adds "body" to the latter. Providing allowance is made in the original positive for this intensification, good tones are obtained.

Single Solution Process

Instead of the two separate baths used above, a single solution may be employed consisting of a metallic ferrocyanide dissolved in a suitable solvent (say, an alkali salt of citric, tartaric, or oxalic acids) in presence of an acid and certain other salts.

On immersion of the positive film in this solution the silver image is converted into silver ferrocyanide, while the colored ferrocyanide is formed simultaneously and combined with it.

In either of the above cases, in view of the fact that the metallic ferrocyanide is deposited in a colloidal condition in presence of the gelatine of the film, its state of division and the nature of the tone are usually affected by the presence of certain salts, changes of temperature, concentration of the baths and other factors which must be maintained constant in order to obtain uniform results. With such single baths it is possible to secure tones which are unobtainable by a two solution process, though as such single solutions are sensitive to light and rapidly attack foreign metals which may be present in the shape of faucets, etc., such solutions are comparatively unstable and require care in their use.

Dye Toning

Owing to the limited number of colored inorganic compounds available for toning purposes, it is possible to obtain only a limited range of tones by the above methods.

In view of the possible wide range of colors obtainable by the use of dyes, it has been considered that a satisfactory method of producing a dye image would be the ideal method for toning purposes.

As a result of recent work in our Research Laboratory, it is now possible to recommend such a method of toning, which depends upon the fact that certain inorganic compounds, including copper ferrocyanide, have the property of mordanting certain basic dyes, so that when they are immersed in a solution of the dye the latter attaches itself to the mordant, which in turn becomes colored.

The most suitable dyes for dye toning are those which do not readily dye gelatine, so that on immersing, say, a sample of copper toned film in a weak solution of the dye containing a little acid. the dye becomes mordanted to the image, while the high-lights consisting of clear gelatine remain colorless, the resulting tone being a combination of the color of the toned film and the dye.

Full particulars are given under tones J. K. L. M. and N.

Nature of the Positive to Be Toned

Since most toning processes either intensify or reduce the original image, in order to obtain uniform results, commence toning with positive film of the correct density.

Three standards of positive film have been chosen: Thin, Medium and Normal. The "Thin" and "Medium" standards are obtained by giving a slight over-exposure and a shorter time of development.

The exact degree of intensification which takes place in any particular case will soon be learned after a few trials.

Nature of the Developer

Any good Elon-Hydrochinon, Kodelon-Hydrochinon, or straight Hydrochinon formula will give satisfactory tones, though in the case of Tone G and Elon-Hydrochinon developer is essential in order that a rich olive color may be obtained.

For toning, it is necessary that the developed film should be entirely free from fog, since a thin veil becomes intensified in most of the toning processes. Fog may be caused by:

(a) Oxidation of the developer, noticeable by the brown coloration produced after continued use. The remedy is to renew the developer.

(b) Carelessness in compounding the developer. The usual mistake consists in adding the carbonate to the Elon and Hydrochinon without previously adding a portion of sulphite to prevent oxidation. It is not advisable, however, to add the whole of the sulphite to the Elon and Hydrochinon in the first place, otherwise the Elon may precipitate. Mixing the developer with water which is too warm will often cause fog.

(c) The presence of copper, brass, and tin, the fumes from sodium sulphide, etc., in the developing baths are to be strictly avoided. A salt of copper if present only to the extent of one part in 10,000 will produce fog on cine positive film.

Fixing

This operation should be complete and, if possible, carried out in two consecutive baths and followed by thorough washing, otherwise uneven coloring will result.

In order to eliminate any possibility of uneven toning it is always advisable to tone immediately after washing and before drying.

Control in Toning

As in the case of tinting, the nature of the tone obtained with the various solutions depends on the following factors:

(a) The nature and dilution of the toning solution. Except in those cases where it is recommended to revive the bath by adding more acid, it is not advisable to modify the composition or dilution of the various solutions, as these have been adjusted to give the best results.

(b) Temperature of toning.

In most cases a change of temperature from 60 to 70 degrees F. has merely the effect of changing the time of toning. It is advisable, however, to maintain the temperature of the various solutions between 65 degrees and 70 degrees F.

(c) Time of toning.

Except in the case of tones F and G, when toning proceeds to a limit, the nature of the tone produced varies with the time of toning, reaching a limit in from 10 to 15 minutes, so that in a shorter time intermediate tones are produced. Since most of the toning processes intensify the original image, if an intermediate tone is required, it is usually necessary to commence toning with denser film than when toning is to be carried to the limit. See tones B, C and D.

When producing intermediate tones, it is therefore possible either to tone in the normal bath for a given time or in a diluted bath for a longer time. In order to reduce the number of individual toning baths to a minimum it is recommended to vary the time of toning rather than to vary the dilution of the bath, and to judge the tone by inspection. Since the strength of the toning bath falls off with use, inspection is necessary in all cases except tones F and G.

Before commencing work with any bath it is advisable to make a test on a short length of film.

Permanency of Tones

The permanency of the tones produced largely depends on the care exercised throughout the various operations.

The silver sulphide image may be considered permanent, though in the other cases, where more or less silver ferrocyanide is present, the toned image is not absolutely permanent, being somewhat soluble in hypo and affected by fumes of sulphuretted hydrogen.

In the case of the iron and uranium tones, the colored ferrocyanides are dissolved by alkali such as sodium carbonate, so that the toned film should not be washed for too long a time in water which is at all inclined to be alkaline.

In no case, however, if the instructions are carefully followed, will the toned image deteriorate during the active life of the film. Moreover, so far as can be ascertained, the wear and tear of film which has been toned by the methods recommended is in no way impaired, though by virtue of the hardening action of most of the toning baths on the gelatine, it is advisable, especially during the winter months, to immerse the film for three or four minutes in the usual 2 per cent glycerine bath after toning.

Should film have to be stored for long periods of time, toning is inadvisable, nor is it advisable to tone valuable film unless duplicates are available.

The life of the toning bath has been carefully investigated in each case, the term "life" being considered as the total length of film capable of being toned by a given volume of fresh solution when toning is conducted continuously and without interruption.

In all cases it is false economy to exhaust a toning bath to the limit and thus obtain inferior tones, since the cost of the chemicals employed is insignificant compared with the value of the film being treated.

Since the figures given represent the capacity of the bath for toning under the best conditions, they only apply providing the baths are kept covered as far as possible when not in use, to exclude light, and providing no foreign metallic surface, however small, is allowed to come into contact with the solution.

As mentioned above, single solution baths are not intended for occasional use. In such cases two-solution methods should as far as possible be employed, although it has only been possible to recommend the latter for the production of sulphide and blue-green tones.

Stability of the Solutions

All toning solutions containing potassium ferricyanide are sensitive to light, the ferricyanide being reduced to ferrocyanide. Therefore when not in use the tanks should be carefully covered, so as to screen the solutions from sunlight.

It is also very important that no metallic surface, however small, should come in contact with the solutions; any metal pegs on the racks or pins used to hold the film together will gather the tone in preference to the film, causing the formation of sludge. Plain wooden racks with or without wooden pegs should be used, and metal faucets replaced by wooden plugs.

If any considerable amount of sludge forms in the tank at any time, it is due either to incorrect mixing, the action of light, or to the presence of foreign metallic substances.

Tone A

Tone A Red (Copper).
Positive Employed—Normal.
After immersion of the well-washed film in water for one minute, bathe in the following:

	Avoirdupois	Metric
Copper sulphate	1 lb. 11 ozs.	800 grams
Ammonium citrate (neutral)	5 lbs. 3 ozs.	2500 grams
Potassium ferricyanide	1 lb. 11 ozs.	800 grams
Ammonium carbonate	13 ozs.	400 grams
Water to	50 gals.	200 liters

Dissolve each ingredient separately in as little water as possible, mix the filtered solutions so obtained in the order given, and dilute to the required volume. The solution obtained should be light green in color and perfectly clear. The ammonium carbonate should be almost transparent and free from white powder, and should be dissolved in cold water, while the ammonium citrate employed should be neutral. Most samples contain acid, which acid would neutralize the ammonium carbonate and effect the resulting tone. The free acid is usually citric acid, and should be neutralized with a solution of ammonia, using litmus as indicator.

Temperature of Toning—To obtain the best results the temperature of the bath should be from 65 degrees to 70 degrees F.

Time of Toning—Five to ten minutes.

Time of Washing—Ten minutes.

Life of Bath—With use the bath precipitates a brown sludge of copper ferrocyanide, and in consequence becomes weaker by virtue of the loss of copper, though 50 gallons of the solution will tone about 10,000 feet of film.

It is necessary to keep the film entirely submerged in the tank, or constantly in motion when on the drum, otherwise if the film is frequently examined, especially during the first few minutes of toning, streaks are liable to occur.

Tone B

Tone B Red (Uranium).
Positive Employed—Thin.
Immerse the well washed film in the following:

	Avoirdupois	Metric
Uranium Nitrate (neutral)	16½ ozs.	500 grams
Potassium Oxalate (neutral)	16½ ozs.	500 grams
Potassium Ferricyanide	16½ ozs.	500 grams
Ammonium Alum	2½ lbs.	1200 grams
Hydrochloric Acid, 10 per cent.	1 qt.	1000 cc.
Water to	50 gals.	200 liters

Mix in the order given. The solution obtained should be perfectly clear and pale yellow in color.

In view of the fact that the nature of the tone is influenced largely by the acid content, it is very important that the uranium nitrate should contain no free acid, and this may be assured by neutralizing the solution with dilute ammonia until a slight permanent precipitate is obtained.

It is convenient to keep stock solutions of the above (say, 10% solutions), from which a new bath may be expeditiously compounded. A 10% hydrochloric acid solution is one containing 10 parts by volume of the concentrated acid per 100 volumes of the final solution.

Temperature of toning—65 degrees to 70 degrees F.

Time of toning—10 minutes.

Since this and the following single solution methods of toning produce a marked intensification of the silver image—which intensification increases with the time of toning—it follows that the nature of the tone changes with time also.

The composition of the bath has been so adjusted that the maximum effect is produced in about 10 minutes, the tone passing through a series of changes from brown to red during this time.

It is therefore possible to obtain intermediate tones by withdrawing the film from the bath at shorter intervals, though in such cases the contrast of the original black and white film should be adjusted accordingly, since with slight toning very little intensification takes place (see tones C and D). Time of washing—10 to 15 minutes.

The high-lights will become clear in the above time, though a thin yellowish brown veil may remain in the clear gelatine as a result of the intensification of minute traces of fog, but this has no effect on projection. If the bath is working correctly the yellowish veil is only just perceptible, but if appreciably visible, then either the film was fogged during development, or the bath was not compounded correctly. Washing should not be carried out for too long a period, especially with water inclined to be alkaline, because the toned image is soluble in alkali.

Life of Bath

Fifty gallons of solution will tone about 5,000 feet of film without any appreciable change in the tone, after which the rich tone tends to flatness as a result of a deficiency of acid in the bath. At this point the bath may be revived by the further addition of acid to the extent of the original amount, when a further 5,000 feet may be toned. At this stage the richness of the tone falls off rapidly and the bath should be thrown away.

Used intermittently over a period of several days the life of the bath is approximately the same.

With continued use a slight brownish flocculent precipitate may form in the bath, but this should only be slight, otherwise it is caused by incorrect mixing, the action of the light, or by contact with a metallic surface.

An Argument About Old and New Violins

ACCORDING to the flowery statements, advertisements, discussions, etc., of certain enterprising dealers in string instruments, the day of "the old violin" is a thing of the past. Clever arguments are devised to show how immeasurably superior a new, healthy instrument is to an old, ramshackle, split, cracked, thinned-out shell, even if it originally emanated from the workshop of some famous Cremonese maker; in addition, photographs of so-called ruined Cremona instruments are shown as further convincing proof of their worthlessness, and while all this valuable information is seemingly handed out for the benefit of the public at large, would-be purchasers are particularly appealed to, to beware of this old-violin folly and by all means to invest in a new violin made by this, that or the other maker who happens to do the talking or advertising.

While an easy-going, uninitiated player or would-be purchaser might consider such arguments in a serious way, there is really little chance of creating any lasting impression with them upon players who know. For, how many are there who, to allude to the story of Aladdin's Lamp, would exchange their old for new violins? Precious few we think. There may be good and practical reasons for investing in a new violin if the buyer's pocketbook cannot afford a real good old one. If the parties' arguments in favor of new violins were sincere and not meant with an eye to business, why, let us ask, is it that every soloist of reputation at the present time of writing uses an old violin of considerable value? Why would such players invest small fortunes in these old instruments if, for practically a trifle in comparison, they could obtain a new instrument which would answer the same purpose and which, if graded and adjusted by some of these makers, would be equally as good, if not superior, to the genuine Italian article?

Even though old instruments do bring exaggerated, fabulous prices in some cases, there is no denying the fact that these large sums of money are not always paid because an instruments is of an unusually old age, or because its maker has been one of the famous masters of Cremona. No; in almost every case it is the tone of an old violin which commands the price, and it is just this prime requisite—the tone—which a new violin cannot and does not possess.

Of all instruments, those of the string family possess a greater human quality of tones than any others. It is this human quality which one misses continually in a new instrument. A fine player can make a violin sing or weep at will. To do this he needs an instrument which responds to his slightest touch, which is absolutely even in tone and volume on any string, in any position, or for any demand. The louder a violin will sound, to the ear of the player, the less its sounds will carry at a distance. This is a point which an unknowing player is fooled with nine out of ten times. Give him an old instrument with a smooth, velvety tone and he imagines it is weak; whereas the further a listener is away from the instrument, the stronger, rounder and fuller the tones will sound. Almost any new violin will sound loud, whereas, responding and tone qualities, particularly in the higher positions, smoothness and evenness of all the strings, are unknown quantities.

No amount of business talk will ever be able to rob the old violin of its unquestionable merits, of its singing, human tone or of the sincere affection which all owners feel for it. Even great players will not part with certain instruments they have had for years, even if their tones does not suffice for the concert hall, but because they are attached to the instrument owing to its peculiar human quality of tone. Mischa Elman always plays a marvelous Stradivarius in his concerts, yet he had an Amita since his student days which no money could buy.

We have had Ysaye, Kreisler, Maud Powell, Elman, Zimbalist, the Flonzaley quartet with us this year, and who, of all these great players, uses a new violin in his or her concertizing? Why does not one of these artists get impressed with this new violin idea and put it to a practical test by using one in public? Naturally, if a great player tries, he can get much from a new instrument, but to play a concerto like Brahms' or Beethoven's upon an old or a new instrument equally well, would require at least double the amount of exertion on the new violin, with no end of chances taken, that the response in the higher positions, delicate passages or important harmonics would be faulty.

In these respects, an old violin, if sound and healthy in body, is always reliable, and our great soloists and fine players know it.

So why keep on trying to make people believe that the old violin is a fad or a thing of the past; why offer statements to the effect that a new violin made by Mr. So-and-So is equal in every respect to the best Italian instruments ever made, when such a thing is utterly impossible? Why try to bamboozle our violin lovers and enthusiasts?

The old violin, with its lustrous varnish, its original workmanship, its beautiful lines and curves, its characteristic scroll, its luscious, carrying, human tone—we all love it and adore it, and no player who knows anything about the necessary qualities in an instrument would dream of using a new one if a fine old one were at his disposal. So why argue such a point?

While admitting that we have a number of very clever makers in our midst, who turn out creditable instruments, it would be nothing short of ridiculous to compare this output with that of the old masters or to encourage would-be purchasers in the idea that these modern business violins are the equals of the highly prized art violins of the Cremonese period. THE EDITOR.

Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Liberty For All" by Alfred Francis. America's Big Hit March. This number is respectfully dedicated to "Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States." The title is from the lips of our great President, expressed in many of his addresses on the world war defining that we are fighting for Democracy and "Liberty for All." It is the new standard march of the day, the snappiest, most brilliant and effective martial success in years! (Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., 228 W. 47th St., N. Y.)

2—"Roses of Picardy."—Medley Waltz on melodies from Haydn Wood's tremendous song hit, "Roses of Picardy," and including the refrain of the popular song, "Waiting (When I Hear the Gate A-Swinging)." The great coast-to-coast success (Chappell's, 41 E. 34th St., N. Y.)

3 "Sabre and Spurs"—March of the American Cavalry by Lieut. John Philip Sousa. One of the greatest marches the March King has ever written. Every audience wants to hear Sousa's latest march, and every up-to-the-minute leader should have Sousa's latest in his library. (Sam Fox, Cleveland, Ohio.)

4—"Out Of The East." Oriental Fox Trot. A wonderful Fox Trot Oriental in theme, and now being played by all the Jazz Bands along Broadway. (J. H. Remick & Co., 227 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

5—"I Am Glad I Can Make You Cry"—New Shimme Fox Trot. The big dance hit of the year—double number with "Belinda" Fox trot. (J. W. Stern & Co., 103 W. 38th St., N. Y.)

6—"The Crafty Spy."—By that famous "composer of classics for the masses," Gaston Borch. It is an original descriptive mysterioso, ably depicting the venomous plotting of the dastardly Hun and was used with wonderful success as the Spy Theme in that remarkable patriotic picture "Over the Top." (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

7—"Oriental Suite" by Irenee Berge.
No. 1, Arabia, (Arabian Festival March)
No. 2, India, (Hindu Prayer)
No. 3, Spain, (Moorish Dance)
No. 4, Egypt, (Homage to the Sacred Ox)
No. 5, Japan, (Geisha Dance)
No. 6, China, (Dance of the Mandarin)

Pianists and Organists will be much interested to know that Irenee Berge, whose Moving Picture music has achieved international fame, has made another valuable contribution to this class of literature. These numbers are not alone highly characteristic of the different countries, but the themes employed are of classic beauty. This work is only issued for Piano Solo. The orchestrations will be brought out in the near future. (Ross Jungnickel, 15 Whitehall St., N. Y.)

8—"Grand Marche Triomphale, by Irenee Berge. This Grand March of noble and heroic measure has been sponsored by "The American Relief Legion" as the American Wedding March. This number will prove a boon to the average pianist, for while it is tremendously effective, the technical difficulties have been reduced to a minimum in this Piano Solo Edition. (Ross Jungnickel)

9—"Requited Love," by T. H. Rollinson. A beautiful concert number which is also fine for love scenes, etc., in the photoplay. (Ditson, 8 E. 34th St., N. Y.)

Index to Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors' Box Office Reports

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to September 1, 1918.

"ALI BABA"—FOX EXTRAVAGANZA

This One Is Not Only Entertaining, But Is Excellent Production Otherwise

BEFORE going into details, I wish to impress on you the fact that, from a production as well from an entertaining angle, this picture ranks with the best released on the Fox program. For its kind, it is one of the best ever made. This fact may be attributed to one reason; that, although the story is of the fanciful sort, he director has treated it as if it were real. His characters act in a way that would be natural and reasonable if he plot were plausible.

The entertainment is derived partly from the action of the plot and the suspense, but mostly from the comdy element, the result of intelligent acting on the part of the little stars. As they portray their roles seriously, in manner maturer persons would have portrayed them, it is evident that delightful comedy would be the result. magine five-year-old Gertrude Messinger dressed in full costume and giving an exhibition of Oriental dancing! Her work is skillful, and as she looks serious, she will delight spectators. Little George Stone, whose emotional expressions are remarkable, is also entitled to as many praises.

Regarding the drawing powers of the picture, this much can be said about it. It is a well known fact that, in coming upon a lobby display that denotes a costume play within, a great many pleasure seekers will sour their faces and turn their backs to you; but they would possibly not do so if they knew how good the picture is; therefore, it devolves upon you to so advertise this picture as to avoid such an eventuality; and as the title plainly indicates the nature of the entertainment, there can be no dissatisfaction on their part. What they paid for, they will receive. In any event, the reception your patrons have given similar subjects in the past, ought to be your guide.—Released Nov. 24.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

"Ali Baba" is much superior to "Fan Fan," he previous Fox extravaganza when its advertising angles are considered. This, of course, because the story of "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" has been universally read. In the first place lay stress on the title because it is the most famous of all the old tales in the Arabian Nights. Don't cut it short to just "Ali Baba" as the latter half of the title will bring the old story back to many people while the first half, in itself alone, means little. In your advertising strive for an Oriental effect and this suggestion also holds for your lobby and house decorations if you are in the habit of "dressing" for the picture.

To our mind you can put on a children's matinee with this picture that will put all others in the shade. Mothers will be only too glad to work with you on this for the story is known to all of them and they will want their children to see it. But don't imagine that it does not contain real interest for grownups as well. The child players have been seen often now and they have a considerable following and again, it is such a well known old tale that it will immediately arouse the interest of all.

AD TALK

"Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," that great classic of the Arabian Nights that has been printed in at least eighty-nine languages, makes its appearance in still another form on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Like "Fan Fan" this is one of William Fox's Extravaganzas which he has begun to produce of late. Mr. Fox is of the opinion that the extravaganza has just as definite a place on the picture screen as it has on the musical comedy stage and judging from "Ali Baba" he is entirely correct in his surmise. For seldom has the management of the ———— theatre presented such a gorgeous spectacle as is contained in this picturization of the old Arabian Nights tale.

Done into scenario form by Bernard McConville and produced under the direction of S. A. Franklin, "Ali Baba" contains some of the most spectacular and imaginative scenes ever thrown on the screen of a theatre. The atmosphere of the old tale, so dear to all of us, has been communicated to the film with admirable ease by the producers and it seems destined to live as long as any other picture ever produced. As in "Fan Fan," the leading roles in "Ali Baba" are enacted by that clever band of children who scored such a success in "Jack and the Beanstalk" and other Fox features. George Stone, one of the cleverest youngsters on the screen, Gertrude Messinger, and Buddie Messinger head the cast and render entirely adequate performances. The sincerity and zest of the little people makes the film twice as interesting as it might be otherwise. We earnestly advise all our patrons to see this novel picture.

THE STORY

This old story from the Arabian Nights has as its central character Ali Baba, the son of a poor wood-chopper who by chance discovers in the mountains that surround his home, a cave that opens to the mystic phrase "Open Sesame." Ali Baba, on making this discovery, feels that he has every bit as much right to the treasure contained within as have the robbers who store the loot there. So he takes away all that he can carry. His brother, an avaricious fellow, compels Ali Baba to disclose the source of his sudden wealth and straightway makes his way to the cave. He gains admittance by using the magic words but the robbers surprise him there and kill him.

In the meantime Ali Baba conducts his romance with Morgianna, a famous dancing girl and slave to the owner of the inn near by. He eventually aids in her escape from her master and wins her undying love and affection.

Now the chief of the robbers becomes suspicious of Ali Baba, suspecting him of making off with his hidden treasure. So, in the guise of a merchant he, together with the members of his band, the famous "forty thieves," seeks the hospitality of Ali Baba. He conceals his tribe in large jars but, while it might seem that he would apprehend Ali Baba, Morgianna is too quick for him. She discovers the robbers' presence and disposes of the band by pouring boiling oil in the jars. Thus warned Ali Baba engages in mortal combat with the robber chief and eventually vanquishes him. And Ali Baba and Morgianna are happy in their new found love.

Hart Keeps You Guessing in Subject That Is Bound to Go

THE necessity of varying the monotony of sameness in pictures in which one star appears never be fore has been so pronounced as is now that the practice of the reissue has become a fixed fact i the industry. That Mr. Hart has fully realized this principle, is evident from this as well as hi last two contributions. It is an omen that speaks well for the future.

There seems to be no need existing of praising a Hart picture now that he has shown an abilit to successfully portray other roles besides the "Two Gun Man" sort, especially when the fact be know that the story is a Gardner Sullivan contribution. We can say this much about it, though, that a "Nurse" or guardian of wealthy men's prodigal sons—his "business" in this picture—he shows grea aptitude and resourcefulness to meet any emergency.

Though the plot is not plausible, it will delight audiences, as it contains plenty of genuine comedy speedy plot action, real suspense and some heart interest. The end defies guessing.

The fact that the star appears in full dress suit, offers new advertising angles, which. if fully an properly exploited, should prove very profitable.

Released Dec. 15.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Robert Sands, a cowboy.....William S. Hart
Mary Lee, a waitress.....Seena Owen
Larry Harrington, a wild youth...Arthur Shirley
Dick Horn, a detective.....Lewis W. Short
Harrington, Sr., a magnate....Andrew Robeson
Author: C. Gardner Sullivan.
Director: William S. Hart.
Photographer: Joe August.

SUGGESTIONS

Make sure in advertising this feature to bring out the fact that the star has a new role in which he deserts the Western plains and comes to New York. There are many who have been asking Hart to offer a new type of story and in "Branding Broadway" as in "The Border Wireless" he answers with flying colors. For your newspaper advertising make use of the scene cuts supplied on the production. All but two of them show Hart in dress clothes. These will certainly attract attention, whether used in either advertistising or text columns. Discard your old "two-gun" cuts on this feature.

If you draw your own advertising a good background could show Hart mounted on a horse and riding pell mell down a crowded city street (Broadway, New York), in pursuit of a man who rides in a taxi. This, too, will bring you the new angle and you will awaken curiosity. In other words, whatever advertising you do, whether it be front, lobby, bill-board or newspaper, bring out the originality of the picture. Hart's name is one to conjure with and in a picture of this sort you should clean up.

AD TALK

William S. Hart forsakes the Western plains, or to be truthful, is forced to forsake them by the Law and Order League in his latest Artcraft picture, "Branding Broadway," which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— ——— week. And now that the title of the picture is out, it is more or less useless to add that his new field of activity is New York's justly celebrated White Way. Yes, sir, Bill Hart, arrayed in sombrero, chaps and pistols, shows up in the civilized financial center of the universe and starts in to practice the tactics of Whetstone, Arizona, on the cafes of Broadway. First, however, he gets himself some new duds, including a dress suit. Hart in a dress suit! But that isn't the half of it. even.

"Branding Broadway" shows Hart as the guardian of a wild youth who patronizes all the fast places along the brightly lighted street—and it doesn't take long before the wild youth discovers that Hart is some guardian. Then there is the love story—the love story of the Westerner and a waitress in one of those white front palaces where they flip the little cakes on the window griddle. And the villain! He steals certain letters from the girl and makes off down the avenue with them via the taxicab route. And then Mr. Hart's inbred sense of the right thing to do gets the better of him and vaulting on a policeman's horse he gives chase.

In other words, William S. Hart just startles the life out of New York and the New Yorkers in "Branding Broadway." The story was prepared for him by that master of screencraft, C. Gardner Sullivan, and Seena Owen is a charming waitress.

THE STORY

Bob Sands heads a band of cowboys into Whetstone, Arizona, on pay day and when the roarin,' tearin' crowd discovers that the place has gone dry there is considerable hell a poppin'. It pops in such great proportions, in fact, that Bob is trussed up securely by the Law and Order League and thrust into a baggage car that is headed generally eastward. When Bob comes to and recovers from the shock of his new surroundings, he picks up a paper and reads the advertisement inserted by one Harrington, a banker of New York, asking for a strong man to take charge of the activities of his son on Broadway. And so, New York reached, Bob applies for and secures the job of guardian.

Larry Harrington is some fast stepper and leads Bob a wild and very much "cafed" life on the White Way, but the Westerner proves his master, particularly in fighting and also in love making—but wait. There is a waitress, Mary Lee, who flips flap-jacks in a white front place and one day a flap-iack drops on Bob's heart—a good thing that she knew how to cook. And then Bob discovers that letters that might be construed as a background for a breach of promise suit have passed between Lary and Mary—with Larry doing the writing. And he thinks that Mary really loves him. Harrington, Sr., then hires a detective to get these letters from Mary. He breaks into her room and after a struggle makes off with them—in a taxi.

And then Bob commandeers a copper's mount and dashes off down the avenue in pursuit, thereby giving the citizens of the place another opportunity for a peace celebration. And, of course, Mary loved Bob all the time and the last the great city sees of them is their backs—they are headed West.

CATCH LINES

William S. Hart forsakes the Western plains in this picture and transfers his activities to Broadway. And he makes all those pesky New Yorkers watch their steps with even greater care than they exercise in the subway. The methods of Whetstone, Arizona, practiced in a Broadway cafe.

No, sir, Hart doesn't reform in this picture. It is he who works the reformation of others. And he picks out one of Broadway's dens of iniquity to turn the trick. How those lounge lizards scatter when Bill gets busy with a few Arizona tricks!

Strictly speaking, it's against the law to appropriate a mounted policeman's horse when the owner isn't looking. But such little niceties of convention don't bother Bill Hart. In "Branding Broadway" he vaults to the saddle and makes off down the avenue in pursuit of the taxi-riding villain. East is East and West is West, but when it came to the crucial moment, Bill forgot the sectional differences.

William S. Hart in a brand new role—in a dress suit—a stiff collar—you can't imagine it can you? But come and see "Branding Broadway," in which the miraculous is accomplished. It is crammed with thrills and laughs.

"FIVE THOUSAND AN HOUR"—METRO

You Know the Ending All the Time; Subtitles Hold Back Action

THE hero of this story sets out to make a million dollars and he makes it; and what is more, you know beforehand he is going to make it; and since you do know he is going to make it, suspense goes to the winds. How he makes it is a matter of detail, not of substance.

There seems to be a tendency lately to base the plot on subtitles that do nothing but talk. Almost even out of ten of the stories in pictures released lately have been constructed in this manner. This is what happens also in this picture. The result is action slow and tiring. These same subtitles, in this instance, have been written with a view to comedy also; since the exponents (the players), however, although may be just the things for dramatic work, are not quite suited for comedy tricks, the results are not what have been calculated.

There are several technical errors in the direction and wording of titles, and as evidences have been multiplying lately that the majority of spectators watch for these trifles, it is bad to overlook or ignore them. For instance, to quote one of them, no gentleman who aspires to higher society strata, will load himself with a box of flowers to present to the girl he covets, especially if such girl is a millionairess.

CATCH LINES

A high romantic drama generously sprinkled with comedy, adapted from George Randolph Chester's popular book of the same name.

George Randolph Chester writes of finance and makes it interesting—he writes of romance and makes it entertaining to a degree—he introduces comedy that combines a wonderful sense of humor with real subtlety—all these qualities you will find in "Five Thousand an Hour," one of the best of his works, made into a picture by Metro.

If an adorably pretty girl stood before you and offered you fifteen thousand dollars for a kiss—what would you do? Probably if your wife wasn't around you'd "earn" that fifteen "thou." But Johnny Gamble had to be forced to it at the point of a gun! And Johnny loved the girl.

Hale Hamilton, popular actor and dramatist, in one of the fastest moving, enthralling romances of the screen.

AD TALK

A romantic drama generously sprinkled with comedy will be the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week when Hale Hamilton, the new picture star, appears in the Metro release "Five Thousand an Hour." This picture is an adaptation of George Randolph Chester's novel of the same name. Incidentally there are few writers better equipped to write of high finance and make it thoroughly interesting than Mr. Chester and his wife, Lillian. Many of their works have been picturized with signal success while their fiction, notably "The Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" series, has been followed by thousands. In "Five Thousand an Hour" the author has created a deft and speedy romantic drama, with innumerable subtle touches that ever keep the observer interested.

The story has as its central figure a young man who sets himself to the task of amassing a million dollars in six weeks. This figures down to five thousand dollars an hour and hence the Wall Street aspect of the title. Of course the impetus to this resolution is furnished by a girl and so the young man, Johnny Gamble, an appropriate name indeed, sets out with a vengeance. And he is almost successful even though sorely harassed by a very nasty villain. He gains all the money with the exception of a mere fifteen thousand. How he gets this final amount in just fifteen minutes' time brings the story to a whirlwind finish.

Hale Hamilton does well with the leading role while Lucille Lee Stewart is perfectly lovely in the opposite part.

THE STORY

Johnny Gamble, head of the Gamble Irrigation Company faces bankruptcy after his partner, Gresham, has decamped with the funds and the books, leaving him to pay the stockholders their just dues. With only a hundred dollars in his pocket he sets out for the races. The one hundred all goes on one horse and Johnny wins—$15,000. So he believes his luck has returned to him. And he resolves to go on making money for the simple reason that he has met Constance. Constance, the beautiful young lady that she is, will inherit a million dollars on her twenty-second birthday, six weeks distant, if she marry Gresham. She doesn't like Gresham and Johnny knows it. Therefore his decision to make a million dollars in those six-weeks—five thousand an hour—that he may marry Constance and that she may lose nothing.

So Johnny plunges wildly into the game of finance but is bucked and battered at every turn by the villainous Gresham who has learned of his plan and who resolves that he shall not win. He tries in various ways to break Johnny—makes an attachment of his money in the bank—bids against him in the market and besides stoops to various underhanded methods in his frenzy. But despite all his efforts Johnny has almost amassed the million, fifteen minutes before the time set. That is he has amassed it all but fifteen thousand dollars—a pretty big sum to raise in fifteen minutes.

But Constance comes to the rescue. She says coyly that Johnny has never kissed her and that she might be induced to pay the fifteen thousand for one. Johnny tries to object but Constance uses a pistol and so what can the poor man do but "earn" the money?

SUGGESTIONS

A good title, a well-known author and a star of reputation are offered the exhibitor with this production and the advertising possibilities presented in it loom large as compared with the average program production. To begin with the mere display of the title in large type in either newspaper advertisements or in your lobby will attract attention. Underneath it you might run a line reading "Johnny Gamble set himself the task of raising one million dollars in six weeks. That's why he had to travel at the rate of five thousand an hour. At the last minute he sold a kiss for fifteen thousand and won out." This line or one of the catch lines provided should arouse the interest.

George Randolph Chester has been before the magazine reading public for years. His "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" stories have been followed by thousands. Cash in on this by mentioning the series after his name. Then too, as suggested with other pictures on these pages, you might procure a copy of "Five Thousand an Hour" published by Bobbs, Merrill and Co., and open it to one of the exciting passages. From the book you might also be able to find some additional catch lines by using excerpts from it.

Then with Hale Hamilton and Lucille Lee Stewart as your stars you should be able to make a real good impression on your public. Here truly is a program picture possessed of big possibilities. Don't pass them up.

"THE NARROW PATH"—PATHE

Here's One of the Wronged Girl Kinds; No Appeal to Emotions

THE main object of this picture is to expound that the sister of the heroine's young lover is lured and wronged by the villain, a married man; and that the heroine, rather than see shame visit her sweetheart and his mother by disclosing to them the real truth, allows the suspicion to rest upon her by keeping silent. In the development of this otherwise noble motive, however, every black and vile human trait, such as breaking a mother's heart, bringing shame upon a brother, infidelity to a wife, bribery, deception and other low and unpleasant human characteristics unfold themselves before the eye as in a Fifth Avenue parade. To top the climax, all these incidents are crowned by the introduction of the resultant illegitimate baby—the picture would not be complete without it.

The story contains hardly an element that would appeal to the emotions. Owing to the unpleasantness of the theme, even such a principle as that of the heroine's self sacrifice, an act that seldom if ever misses its object, in this instance fails to reach the human sympathies.

In an attempt to soften somewhat what is to follow, three full pages of reading matter are used as a foreword at the beginning of the picture.

From the A. H. Woods Play.

Scenario by Ouida Bergere and Jack Cunningham.

Directed by George Fitzmaurice.

Produced by Astra Film Company.

SUGGESTIONS

This is an A. H. Woods melodrama and this, in itself, should give the exhibitor a fair idea of the correct and most lucrative way in which to advertise it. It is sensational in character, as the title itself plainly implies. In any special drawings you may use, play them up in allegory interpreting the title in them. Use a picture of two women in the foreground. The one, her arm around the other, pointing out of the picture while the other looks down a broad road done to represent Sin. If your artist will let his imagination play, this drawing could be made quite impressive.

In Fannie Ward you have a recognized star and in the adaptors of the play, Ouida Bergere and Jack Cunningham, you have two skilled scenarists. The same also applies for George Fitzmaurice, the director.

AD TALK

"The Narrow Path," which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week is an adaptation of one of A. H. Woods' plays which ran on Broadway several years ago. With Fannie Ward as the star of the photoplay version patrons of the ——— theatre are assured of a picture that in every respect meets photodramatic demands. "The Narrow Path" was produced by the Astra company and like all the pictures turned out by this concern, is lavish in all details of production. Under the guiding hand of George Fitzmaurice, the story has been transferred to the screen with due regard to its inherent dramatic qualities. Of dull moments, there are none throughout its entire length.

It tells the tale of a New York manicurist who is well acquainted with the city and its men. She is in love with Dick Strong, who lives in the same boarding house and who is quite different from the men she comes in contact with every day in the manicure parlors. But it is Dick's sister, Gladys, who causes the trouble. She is completely taken in by one of Marion's regular customers and when the good-hearted manicurist interferes in behalf of the girl, she becomes compromised herself.

How she extricates herself from this predicament and how she saves the sister of the man she loves from disgrace, makes a story of absorbing quality. Miss Ward was never seen to better advantage than in the role of the manicurist while she receives sterling support from W. E. Lawrence, Irene Aldwyn, Sam De Grasse, Mary Alden and Antrim Short. The rest of the bill of which "The Narrow Path" is the nucleus includes ———.

THE STORY

Marion Clark is a pawn of fate, moved forward in the Game of Life by the fingers of romance. Marion's occupation is that of a manicurist, in which she comes in contact with all classes of men. At the boarding house she has struck up a warm friendship with Dick Strong, his pretty sister, and his uncomplaining invalid mother. At the boarding house there also resides Lou Black, who toils not nor does she spin. Lou entices Gladys Strong to a merry party at which she meets one of Marion's regular customers—Malcolm Dunn, a broker and a rounder, who neglects his wife in order to "play the game."

Then comes the time when Gladys begins to harvest the tares and thistles of a sinister Fate, when Fear's icy hand clutches at her heart. She goes to Marion with her troubles—Marion, who is in love with her brother. Marion decides to help her, and accuses Dunn of his infamy. But Dunn's neglected wife has had him trailed, and he is discovered in Marion's apartment. Dick Strong also witnesses the compromising disclosures.

Marion's love for Dick and his sister prompts her to remain silent and to take her friend's blame upon her own shoulders. The two girls disappear into an obscure quarter of the town. Meanwhile Mrs. Dunn starts divorce proceedings. Marion is drawn into the net as co-respondent. Dunn's lawyer makes an attempt at a "frame-up" but Marion checkmates him.

As all good dramas should end, so "The Narrow Path" ends—with happiness for the leading woman and the leading man, with retribution meted out to the villain.

Harrison Believes Caruso Is Instant Success; Story Good

TOSS your hat in the air. In engaging a renowned personality to appear on the screen, the producers for once have hit it right. If any of you have felt uneasy as to whether Mr. Caruso could act; if any of you have thought that the producers little cared about his acting values, the possibilities for drawing the crowds being foremost in their minds, let them calm their fears. Mr. Caruso is not only a born dramatic actor, but a natural comedian as well.

In the first place, nature has endowed him with looks: then, magnetism; then, physique; which, combined to the unequaled emotional expressive powers—he can make you laugh or cry at will—make him one of the foremost screen actors of the day. With such material in the hands of a director, provided the proper stories are supplied him, the possibilities are immense.

The story is not pompous, but it is human. It is the sort that appeals to the emotions and reaches the human sympathies. In the interpretation of the thoughts of the story is where the star lays bare his emotional gifts.

Besides the skillful handling of a novice—as far as the screen is concerned—by the director, a share of the credit is due to the author for the intelligent "preparation." She has inserted such little touches at the beginning of the story, as to win the sympathy of the spectator right from the start.

This picture contains also plenty of clean comedy. It should appeal universally.—Released Nov. 17.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Enrico Caruso, famous star of the operatic stage, in his first motion picture! He proves himself every bit as good a comedian as he is a tenor.

See the man who owns that wonderful voice you have heard so often on the phonograph.

Caruso makes his debut on the screen in a dual role—first as a famous tenor—second as a poor artist who claims he is the former's cousin—it is a story filled with romance and comedy.

Caruso, the great comedian! That sounds rather peculiar, doesn't it? But such is the case. His performance in "My Cousin" proves that beyond the shadow of a doubt. Caruso, the great tenor! Caruso, the great comedian!

Caruso is thoroughly at home in both the roles he essays in this picture. He appears as a great tenor—his real self—and as a sculptor—and Caruso could have been an artist with his hands if he had so elected.

AD TALK

And now it is Enrico Caruso that has succumbed to the lure of the camera! His first Artcraft picture, "My Cousin," will be the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week for a run of ——— days.

Artcraft has given us some of the most notable stars of the stage. Witness Elsie Ferguson, George M. Cohan, to say nothing of Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford.

And now it is Caruso!

There was much speculation when the great opera star placed his name to an Artcraft contract as to whether he would be a success on the screen. Caruso without his voice! Unspeakable! Or rather unhearable! But there were some wise gentlemen who had marked Caruso's facial expressions while on the operatic stage who held to it that he would be a great screen actor.

This opinion was substantiated when one of the management of the ——— theatre had the opportunity of seeing him make several scenes for "My Cousin" in the Manhattan Opera House in New York. He proved himself then to be a pantomimic artist of the first water.

Caruso's talents have been turned to comedy for the most part in "My Cousin." The story is a comedy-drama concerning a sculptor who closely resembled the great tenor and who claimed that he was related to him. How this is finally proven makes a story rich in romance and comedy. Margaret Turnbull, one of the best writers for the Famous Players-Lasky organization wrote the story and scenario for the star, while he was directed by Edward Jose. Carolina White, a famous operatic soprano is seen as the star's leading lady.

THE STORY

Mario Nanni, a poor artist, is in love with Rosa Ventura, daughter of a restaurant proprietor. His rival is Bombardi, proprietor of a fruit and vegetable stand, who is favored by Rosa's father because of his bank account. Mario boasts that he is cousin of Cesare Carulli, the great tenor, but Ventura can't see where this relationship will keep the wolf from the door if his daughter marries. Mario one day takes Rosa to the opera to hear Carulli in "Pagliacci." He is given a great reception by the audience and arouses enthusiasm when he brings in a number of Italian sailors and gives them good seats.

Afterwards in a cafe the sailors are entertained. Mario and Rosa enter and take seats near them. Carulli, disguised by old clothes, is at another table. Mario rises and proposes a toast to the great tenor. Carulli gets up and leaves, believing his presence there discovered. Mario learns of his mistake and is taunted by Bombardi, who refuses to believe that Carulli is his rival's cousin. Even Rosa turns against Mario.

The next day Mario calls on Carulli, taking with him a bust of the tenor on which he is at work. Carulli causes him to be ejected from his home, but afterwards discovers the forgotten bust and is delighted. Due to the good offices of a mutual friend, Carulli learns the true story of all Mario's troubles and, the bust in his arms, makes all haste to his studio. Here he meets Mario and Rosa just after the girl has been rescued from Bombardi's unwelcome advances and hastens to adjust matters to the great satisfaction of Mario. He orders the bust completed and Rosa's faith in Mario is restored.

SUGGESTIONS

"My Cousin" offers you a wonderful opportunity for an appropriate musical setting. Turn to the "Seeing the Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel" section and read of the musical setting in which it was presented at the Rivoli, New York. Not only was the score for the picture composed in many places of pieces from the best-known operas sung by Caruso, but the soloists also rendered parts from famous operas. Try to follow this plan in your own presentation and you will surely benefit thereby.

Emphasize in your advertising that Caruso turns out to be a good actor on the screen. Aside from this your duty mainly consists in displaying Caruso's name in as large type as possible. He has a worldwide reputation and his first picture is so good that if you get your house well filled they will surely come back for his second appearance. You might tie up in an advertising campaign with your local phonograph-record dealer, but after all Caruso's name is so well known that this seems hardly necessary. If you need a ballyhoo you might get a phonographic instrument and play Caruso records in your lobby. But this would hardly be the right course for high-class houses to adopt.

"THE DAWN OF UNDERSTANDING"—VITAGRAPH

Romantic Story of the Days of '49; Steady Action of Plot

THE romantic life surrounding the prairie schooner in the days of '49 forms the basis of this attraction. It combines fairly steady action of plot, some little human touches including several pretty locations of Western country with its haystacks and the cows.

The story, upon which the plot has been based, is by Bret Harte. It introduces the heroine as a young girl, traveling with her father and mother on a prairie schooner towards the West. Her mother dies on the way and she is left by her father with the hero, a young Mormon looking like fellow who lives a lonely life.

In the course of the story, a circus man, while giving a performance in a nearby village, and during a gambling game, quarrels with one of the participants and kills him. He escapes, meets the heroine, whom he begs to save him. She furnishes him with clothes and helps him to escape, but he tries to abduct her, shooting the sheriff in the attempt. He is arrested by a posse, and after a trial according to that country's own style, he is convicted to hang.

In the mean time love awakens in the breasts of both the hero and the heroine and they become engaged.

It is just an average program offering.—Released Dec. 2.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

If you played any of the Triangle Bessie Love pictures be sure to announce that this is her return to your screen as she had a large following in the Triangle days. The author, Brete Harte is one of the best known authors of western fiction that the country produced, so play his name up, also the name of the play upon which the picture is based if you think your clientele sufficiently well versed in things theatrical to recognize it as Annie Russell's celebrated vehicle.

CATCH LINES

Bessie Love, the charming little player who scored such a hit in the old Fine Arts pictures, appears for the first time under the Vitagraph banner, in a real story of the West—by Brete Harte.

A film version of "The Judgment of Bolinas Plains," a play in which Annie Russell scored one of her greatest successes.

AD TALK

Bessie Love, the charming little star who made such a hit in the product of the old Fine Arts Company, will appear in her first Vitagraph picture entitled "The Dawn of Understanding," on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Miss Love has been awarded a role well suited to her varied capabilities in this picture. It is an adaptation from Brete Harte's "The Judgment of Bolinas Plains." This same story was also converted into a play and starring Annie Russell, carried her a long way toward the fame she achieved on the stage.

It tells the story of Sue, who was practically sold into a loveless marriage by her father. While her husband, a rancher, does not mistreat her, neither does he, in the opposite sense treat her; and she bears neither love nor hate for him. It is a listless existence that they lead until a travelling circus comes to town. A member of this circus is Jim Wynd, an acrobat and a wild and unprincipled fellow. Then indeed does romance enter the empty heart of little Sue.

But it is only short lived. For when she is about to elope with him, he is taken into custody by a deputy and charged with shooting the sheriff. That the sheriff is only slightly wounded makes no difference. Jim is led away to pay the penalty for his crime and romance goes out of Sue's life as suddenly as it came in.

Miss Love has for her support in this feature such popular Vitagraph players as Jack Gilbert as the husband, J. Frank Glendon as the acrobat and G. A. Williams, George Kunkle and Jack Abrams. The picture was produced in California under the direction of David Smith.

THE STORY

During Silas Prescott's journey to the western gold fields his wife dies. He buries her near the ranch owned by Ira Beasley. Ira becomes attracted to Prescott's daughter, Sue, and because she is in his way Prescott strikes a bargain with the rancher, whereby his daughter becomes Ira's wife. He obtains enough money in return to continue his journey. Sue does not love Ira, nor does she dislike him. And he treats her with mild indifference. Their lives are commonplace indeed, until the arrival of a circus in the town. In that circus is Jim Wynd, an acrobat and a wild fellow.

Ira takes Sue to the show and she is fascinated by Jim. All that night she dreams of him and longs to go on his journeys with him and leave Ira. And the next evening after shooting a man in a brawl, Jim takes refuge in Ira's barn. Here Sue discovers him and cares for him for several days. During these days he flatters her and she agrees to elope with him. On the appointed night Sue, fearing interference, plies her husband and the sheriff with drink. As the elopers start away the sheriff is aroused. He intercepts Sue at the barn door. Ira misinterprets the scene

"THE MYSTERY GIRL"—PARAMOUNT

One for the Imagination, with Lots of Real Entertainment

AS explained in the advance review on page 3274, of November 23 issue, this attraction is of the fanciful sort, as almost all George Barr McCutcheon's stories are, in which no restrictions are placed on the imagination. Fictitious kingdoms, and princes, and dukes, and duchesses, and spies, pass in parade before your eyes.

With all the improbability of the plot, there seems to be no lack of entertaining qualities in it. Mysterious stories, more or less, hold the interest: and as mystery is the predominating element in this one, and as it creates suspense on account of it, it will entertain, provided you advertise the picture in such a way as to make it plain to your patrons what it is so as not to take it seriously.

AD TALK

A story of romance and adventure written as only George Barr McCutcheon could write it, will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Mystery Girl," which has as its star, Ethel Clayton. Mr. McCutcheon's story was published in book form under the title of "Green Fancy' and was held by critics to be one of his best. Like others of his work, the plot involves people of a mythical European kingdom, this time one which refused to sell out to Germany at the beginning of the war. Let it not be thought, however, that "The Mystery Girl" is a war picture, for while it has its beginning on Flanders fields the action shortly afterwards shifts to the United States, where mystery, suspense and romance unite in forming one of the most absorbing screen stories of the day.

Miss Clayton appears to exquisite advantage in the title part and her romance with the American captain forms a very pretty part of the story. The star is supported by such well known players as Henry Woodward, Charles West, Clarence Burton, Winter Hall, Maym Kelso and Parks Jones, players that interpret their respective roles with real ability. Marion Fairfax, a well known author herself, made the adaptation from Mr. McCutcheon's book while it was produced under the direction of William C. De Mille, one of the most talented members of the Lasky studio.

The story concerns a race for the crown jewels of Lurania. They are sought after by a famous international crook, a pretender to the throne and the heroine herself. This leads the principals into all sorts of exciting situations that remain interesting for the spectator from first to last.

THE STORY

Prince Sebastian, ruler of Lurania, who has refused to sell his country to the Germans for a scrap of paper, remains in hiding, while his niece, Countess Therese operates an ambulance on the French front and is known as "driver 477." In a message that she receives by carrier pigeon, the prince asks her to meet him at Green Fancy, Maine, U. S. A., with the crown jewels that she has in her possession. The carrier pigeon that returns with her message is intercepted by Chester Naismith, the cleverest thief in Europe. As the crown jewels are exceedingly valuable he plans to get them and to this end strikes a bargain with Prince Ugo, pretender to the Luranian throne who covets the Countess. They plan to go to America also and through Naismith's work secure the jewels for him and the girl for Ugo.

Captain Barnes, an American officer, is ordered home, suffering from a weak heart. He travels on the same steamer with Countess Therese. He attemps to get acquainted but receives rather a cold turn down. Eventually all the parties reach Green Fancy, which proves to be a deserted manor. Prince Ugo determines to break faith with Naismith and secure both the girl and the jewels for himself. But Captain Barnes takes a hand in the game and secures the jewels. These he gives to Mercedes, member of a theatrical troupe, replacing them with her stage jewels. Naismith, despite all this, manages to secure the jewels and escape. Prince Ugo fails in his attempt to abduct the Countess, through the interference of Captain Barnes and after his fate has been definitely settled, the countess returns to France again to drive an ambulance but this time as the bride of the American captain.

SUGGESTIONS

As the public has showed in the majority of cases that it wants a little relief from war pictures it would be advisable to bill this as a mystery story and play up the name of the author, George Barr McCutcheon, who is known as a writer of this type of fiction. For, while the story opens on the European battlefields, it contains none of the usual horrors or heroics of the war picture and soon shifts its locale to the United States where the game of wits between the crook, pretender and hero and heroine is staged. Thus if you purposely neglect to mention its war beginning you will not be misleading.

If there had not been such a flood of war pictures you might suggest this beginning and if you yourself haven't played them, do what you think advisable. However, you have a strong selling point in the author's name. It is a name which doubtless the majority of your patrons are familiar with if they form any sort of an intelligent audience.

CATCH LINES

George Barr McCutcheon, author of any number of "best sellers" wrote "Green Fancy" on which "The Mystery Girl" is based. It is a fast moving story of adventure, mystery and romance, done in McCutcheon's best style. Don't miss it.

Who got the crown jewels of the little principality of Lurania? A thief, a pretender to the throne, and a beautiful Countess raced for them, their course leading them across the Atlantic ocean. Who won out?

Ethel Clayton, who scored such a hit in "Women's Weapons," returns to the screen of the ——— theatre in a totally different type of role.

George Barr McCutcheon has no equal when it comes to writing stories of romance, adventure and mystery. "Green Fancy," his latest novel, has been made into a picture under the title of "The Mystery Girl." Don't fail to see it. There is a surprise in every one of its many turns.

Vitagraph Exploits "Common Cause" as After-War Film

"THE COMMON CAUSE" is being exploited by Vitagraph as an "after-the-war" feature. It is the aim of the picture to bring out the one common cause for which all the Allied nations fought. Contrary to the usual war picture, gruesome details are relegated to the background while a story of a love new-born on the battlefields divides first place with scintillating comedy. A review of the picture will be published after its premier presentation to the trade.

THE STORY

The opening scenes serve as a prologue and show first, the betrayal of Belgium at the hands of the Germans, then subsequent entrance of each of the Allied nations into the war. When America answers the scene shifts to the United States where the drama itself begins.

Orrin Palmer, a successful engineer, has gradually grown away from his wife, Helene, a social butterfly. At a Red Cross fete which she gives in their home he surprises her in a rather intimate attitude with Edward Wadsworth, a young bachelor with whom she is infatuated. Palmer is too sensible a man to create a scene over this, but quietly taking Helene aside he tells her that he is going to San Francisco to take charge of his office there and that she may take steps to secure a divorce if she so desires.

The fact that Helene's lawyer turns out to be a German spy and is killed by a Department of Justice agent, stops the granting of the final divorce decree. And with the war on, petty affairs are placed in the background. Helene enters ardently into the spirit of the colossal business and it is through her appeals that Wadsworth decides to enlist. In the meantime, Palmer, because of his training at West Point, has been granted a commission as captain in the Marine Corps and soon sets sail for France.

In a shell-torn town just back of the lines Helene works in a hospital. At the front Palmer and Wadsworth meet. The Marines are given orders to fall back through the town. This move places the women there, including Helene, in the hands of the Germans. Palmer, anxious for their fate, asks for volunteers to go on a scouting party. Wadsworth is one of those who offers to go. He is severely wounded and is later rescued by Palmer himself. Soon afterwards the Marines attack again and retake the town. And Palmer arrives only in the nick of time for he finds Helene being threatened by a German officer. Wadsworth, mortally wounded, lies in the hospital and it is he who sends for both Helene and Palmer, joining their hands over his death-bed.

The picture closes with an epilogue showing the triumph of the Allies in the common cause.

AD TALK

Beginning next ——— the management of the ——— theatre will present "The Common Cause," J. Stuart Blackton's big "after the war" picture, one of the really "different" war pictures of the year. "The Common Cause" contains none of the usual war horrors. Mr. Blackton deleted all thought of these from the picture. There are enough of them in the casualty lists. Instead he has given us a stirring drama of a love new-born on the battlefields of France that divides the major portion of the footage with some delightful comedy the exponents of which are an English Tommy, a French Poilu and two little refugees. Judging from the various films that have devoted their entire attention to damning the Kaiser, there is no humor in the soldier's life.. But those who have SEEN, who have been through the hell-fire of it all, know full well that there are times when jokes are cracked in the very face of death. Witness Captain Bruce Bairnsfather's "The Better 'Ole," and in this very instance, "The Common Cause," on which Ian Hay Beith, author of "The First Hundred Thousand," and J. Hartley Manners collaborated.

As the British Tommy, Lawrence Grossmith claims the center of the comedy limelight and is ably assisted in this work by Philip Van Loan and little Charles and Violet Blackton. However, no credit should be taken from the leads of the dramatic story. Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer, nor from Huntley Gordon, who is the third angle of the eternal triangle. In addition to these players there are such well-known celebreties of screen and stage as Effie Shannon, Irene Castle, Violet Heming, Julia Arthur and Marjorie Rambeau who appear as the various Allied nations in the prologue and epilogue.

Mr. Blackton had the assistance of an entire company of Marines in making the picture, and altogether he has turned out a work of art full worthy to be heralded as his best effort. Anthony Paul Kelly made the scenario from the story by Beith and Manners, while the producer himself personally directed it.

SUGGESTIONS

It is suggested that you advertise this feature as a picture showing WHY the Allied Nations united against Germany. In this way you will eliminate the thought that it is "just another war picture," a thought which, by the way, has become something of a curse.

You have any number of advertising angles to work from in "The Common Cause." The leads are taken by two well-known screen players, while, as you will note, in the prologue and epilogue appear five great celebrities of the screen and stage. In respect to the authors too you have another sales angle. J. Hartley Manners has written the greatest modern stage success, "Peg o' My Heart," which has toured the country time and again, while Ian Hay Beith's book, "The First Hundred Thousand," is only his first successful story of the great war. By a liberal use of the photos of the stars provided and by featuring the names of the authors you will be able to create quite a stir.

Don't forget the comedy angle of the picture. In these times it is one of the strongest bets in any picture of the war. Lawrence Grossmith as the British Tommy bent on collecting German helmets is the center of this element. You might have your artist fix up a picture of a British Tommy laden with German helmets, emitting some funny line. For another you could take the scene of the Tommy and the Poilu each trying to kiss the girl. In other ways you could make the comedy side the dominating one in all your advertising if you feel that people are going to be scared away by the fact that the picture shows fighting.

If you plan playing this picture for an extensive run you could get additional advertising from circularizing any patriotic organizatons that have branches or headquarters in your community. You could arrange "nights" for each one of these societies.

CATCH LINES

"The Common Cause," the story of the hour, with a laugh, a thrill and a throb.

Here is a picture that tells why the nations united in a just cause against the common enemy of humanity.

Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer are the leads in the main story, while such well-known celebreties of the screen and stage as Effie Shannon, Julia Arthur, Marjorie Rambeau, Irene Castle and Violet Heming appear as the Allied Nations in the prologue and epilogue.

"The Common Cause" tells why America joined the cause of the other Allied nations.

You remember the record of the United States Marines at Chateau Thierry! Who doesn't? An entire company of these men appear in many of the scenes of "The Common Cause."

Written by Ian Hay Beith, author of "The First Hundred Thousand," and J. Hartley Manners, the playwright to whose credit stand "Peg o' My Heart" and "Out There."

LOBBY DISPLAY

BIG houses who plan a long run of this feature might have erected a small tank. This could be made of wood and camouflaged with various paints.

War relics which perhaps either your city authorities or one of the patriotic societies will lend you could be set at some advantageous spot in the lobby.

By the time this picture reaches you photographs that have to do with the signing of the armistice and even those showing peace celebrations on the other side will have reached the newspapers. Use these along with the stills.

Such a display will attract attention.

FOR BIG HOUSES

A TABLEAUX of the five principal Allied Nations—United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Belgium immediately before the showing of the picture.

If possible obtain men and women to pose in these roles who have good voices. They can sing any patriotic piece or—better yet——

They can render any one of the numerous Christmas songs of Peace, particularly if you show "The Common Cause" during the holidays.

If you can not obtain a chorus have one singer, if a woman, dressed in white, render any of these songs.

"LOVE'S PAY DAY"—TRIANGLE

Characters Fail to Win Sympathy; Production Work Is Good

THE fundamental idea of the story in this picture is the heroine's desire to get away from her narrow environment in the fishing village, where life is without charms, and go to the city, where she could be free and unfettered. In the pursuit of this object, however, she does a thing that deprives her forever of all human sympathy—cheat. Before the wedding takes place she tricks the hero into delivering to her the deeds for the packing house that were to be given to her after their marriage. She then sells them to the villain, who could not induce the hero to sell by legal means. Of course her intentions were not to run away with the money, but rather to compel the hero to take her to the city, but that does not excuse her.

Throughout the picture, things happen which, under the law of logic, should not happen. As a result, although the action of the plot is good, the photography very sharp and the locations artistic, it hardly interests because of the lack of all sympathy for the characters.

Another weak point in the construction of the story is the fact that it is based to a large extent on the subtitles, consisting chiefly of conversation.

Judith thought that happiness lay in the big city where she had never been but woke up one day to find it right under her nose—in the little town that she thought she despised.

Judith made the mistake of looking for happiness ove rthe hills and far away in the crowded town. She learned then that happiness cannot be forced—it comes of its own accord. See "Love's Pay Day" at the ——— theatre.

AD TALK

On ——— of ——— week the ——— theatre will present the latest Triangle feature entitled "Love's Pay Day" with Rosemary Thebe in the stellar role. "Love's Pay Day" is the story of a girl reared in a Newfoundland fishing village. She is the daughter of a poor widow and is possessed of an insatiable longing for the life given those who live in a big city. Her appetite is freshly whetted when George Wilton, the representative of a big New York corporation, arrives in town and paints a wonderful picture of metropolitan life before her dazzled eyes.

So secure a hold does this Wilton obtain on her that, with the promise of riches from him, the girl, Judith, steals the deeds to the fish packing plant owned and operated by the man who loves her, Jean Laroque. With these deeds in his possession Wilton practically controls the destinies of the town and it is not long before Judith discovers the man's falsity and cruelty. He bleeds the inhabitants of every penny and after a year of this oppression they decide to revolt and claim their just rights.

How this story ends, how Judith's eyes are opened to the happiness of true love, in a cottage or in a great city, makes a picture completely entertaining. The producers have invested it with some beautiful sea scenes while the atmosphere of the fisher village permeates the entire five reels. Miss Thebe, whose most recent appearance was in D. W. Griffith's "The Great Love" plays with a rare grace and charm and receives adequate support from the other members of the cast.

THE STORY

Judith, daughter of a poor woman in a Newfoundland fishing village longs for the gay life of the city that she has heard so much about. She is betrothed to Jean Laroque, owner of the local packing plant and as the story opens the betrothal festival is at hand. George Wilton, the representative of a fish corporation of New York, meets Judith and to him she confides her longing for a different life. Wilton who has attempted to buy Jean's plant, influences Judith to steal the deeds of the property from the men that loves her.

On the night of the wedding Jean learns of his loss. And he also discovers that Judith is at Wilton's house, feasting and drinking with him and his companions from the city. He enters and attacks Wilton but is overpowered. He denounces Judith and leaves the town, a broken and penniless man. During the next year Wilton, now in charge of the fish packing plant, is merciless in his treatment of the fishermen and Judith's eyes are opened to the foolishness of her ways.

Finally the enraged fishermen mob the Wilton plant. Jean, who has returned disperses them. Jean is under the impression that Wilton has wronged Judith and his object in returning was to force him to marry the girl. He is about to do so when Wilton is shot and killed by a particular frenzied member of the mob. Then Jean hears from Judith's own lips that he is mistaken regarding her. She is only too willing to go to his arms and Jean, his property returned to him, is the happiest man in the world.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture offers you no unusual angles to sell from. The main point to accentuate seems to lie in the fact of the star's recent appearance in Griffith's "The Great Love." Here is a picture that has been extensively shown and Miss Thebe's appearance in it in one of the leading parts unquestionably added to her reputation.

"Once to Every Man"

(Frohman—Directed by T. Haynes Hunter)

THIS picture will undoubtedly have a wide appeal for the reason that it is based mostly on the human element. For instance, scorned and looked down upon by the town folks because he is addicted to drink, a curse that caused his father's death, his sweetheart stands by him. Her kindness and love instils hope in him and strengthens him to fight out heredity. Eventually he wins out.

It is inherent in human nature to sympathize with the weak. Down in our heart we feel delighted to see others recognize this truth. The sight of the heroine, therefore, standing by the hero and helping him to rise above his environment; the hero's struggles, on the other hand, to extricate himself from the low strata to which he had sunk, cannot fail to win the spectator's sympathy.

As the picture ends in accordance with the natural sentiments of the spectator, he feels an inward satisfaction and makes him leave the theatre happy and contented.

The plot, in a few words, deals with the hero, the son of a habitual drunkard, who because of drink is scorned by friend and foe alike. His sweetheart stands by him and urges him to quit drink. He does quit it, but, kicked by a mule, he is found by his sweetheart unconscious. Thinking he is intoxicated again, she is angered and severs all relations with him.

Heartbroken, the hero goes to the city, enters the prize ring and, inspired by the girl he loves, makes good, after which he returns to his home town and is welcomed by the girl, who all this time had been pining for him. In the end he joins the Aviation Corps.

To a man acquainted with prize rings, some of the details may prove highly dramatic but not technically correct. They are, however, only minor faults, and do not affect the general entertaining qualities of the picture.

Based as the story is on drink, the picture is not repulsive for two reasons: first, because the human element overwhelms the basic idea and subordinates it; and secondly, because drinking scenes are used very sparingly and with delicacy. The death scene of the heroine's father may be entirely eliminated, however, without reducing the dramatic values in the least.

The action of the plot is steady and holds the interest well. But owing to its great length, and when the fact be taken into consideration that you will have to complete the bill by using some single reels, such as comedy, scenic, cartoon, etc., it would be much more preferable if the producers would reduce it to about six reels. This would condense and give it additional speed.—P. S. Harrison,

Maciste in "The Liberator"

(Twenty-four Reel Serial Presented by Harry Raver)

MACISTE, the giant slave of "Cabiria," the Italian soldier who struck terror to the hearts of the Austrians in "The Warrior," has been brought to America the third time in "The Liberator," a twelve-episode serial which Harry Raver will distribute. That Maciste's accomplishments should provide fertile material for the serial director was a foregone conclusion, and his various feats of superhuman strength as shown in a number of "The Liberator's" episodes form a series of highlights the true value of which will be appreciated by any audience whatsoever. On the other hand, his work as an actor is so genial and unsophisticated that even the casual spectator cannot help but admire him.

"The Liberator" differs in one great respect from the American-made serial. Take the average domestic product, and you can miss any episode, or, for that matter, series of episodes, and come back later and pick up the entire thread of the plot; which is a polite way to say that our own serials repeat themselves in every one of their several episodes. Such, however, is not the case with "The Liberator." It is progressive. New characters and new situations are introduced in practically each one of the episodes. Thus when Mr. Raver showed his serial on two afternoons, the reviewer caught the whole continued story and was, frankly, exceedingly interested.

Now if this continuous, progressive plot is carved up in two-reel sections and offered each week as are the sections of the domestic product, the effect, in this reviewer's opinion, will not be as catching. Personally, we think that it should be presented in a series of five-reel episodes. This being the case, the theatre that plays it will have the advantage of advertising it as a feature and creating real interest for the succeeding numbers.

The story is taken from a serial by Agnes Fletcher Bain, and shows Maciste in the role of an attache of the police department, who sets out to solve the mystery of a missing heir—a baby. The child has been kidnapped by its villainous cousin, with the result that its mother has become demented. This task leads Maciste through all sorts of weird and exciting adventures. Truly one becomes wrapped in the various intricacies of the plot and follows Maciste's experiences with ever accumulative interest.

The producers have not neglected the comedy element of the film. Both Maciste and his aide, Seymour Knott, an amateur detective, introduce some comedy touches, the effect of which is excellent. There are times, perhaps, when one wishes that the story had been so molded as to offer Maciste more opportunities in which to display his Herculean strength; but when the merits of the story itself are considered, one has just cause to thank the director for not subordinating them to the star.

The film has been well produced by Pastrone, the same man responsible for "Cabiria" and "The Warrior." It is a certainty that Mr. Raver has in "The Liberator" something different. The manner in which he will release it is to be looked forward to with interest.—Peter Milne.

"The Silent Mystery," with Francis Ford

(Serial Produced by Francis Ford for State Rights Through Hiller and Wilk)

IF the same steam is used all through as is shown in the first four episodes this should please mightily in every theatre that makes a practice of running serials. And especially in those localities where Francis Ford has a good following.

Every episode is full enough of fist fights to bring the average kid to his feet many times and the continuity is preserved and easy to follow even if a person happened to start in on the second or third episode. Francis seems to possess plenty of vim and vigor and is in the thick of it at all times.

Rosemary Theby is the Egyptian Priestess sent to America to recover the 4,000-year-old jewel, "The Eye of the World," which had recently been removed from its resting place beside the mummy. A former German submarine figures in this strongly and the crew have turned pirates after the armistice.

Francis Ford is not alone in passing around the wallops. Mae Gaston was also in the midst of every scuffle and slipped around several clouts herself. She leads in a fast chase across roofs, and also in an apparently dangerous swim through the breakers.

A weird hand, calculated to give the average man bad dreams afterwards, is shown several times through the action and lends the air of sustained mystery so essential to serials. A man, murdered the day of his wedding, lends another mystery to the plot and the weird manner in which the body vanishes augments the mystery.—Tom Hamlin.

"A Wee Bit Odd"

(Bruce Scenic—One Reel—Educational)

IF you happen to be short one reel to complete your program, reach on the shelf of the Educational Film Exchange where they keep the Bruce scenic, "A Wee Bit Odd." To show such an artistic picture to your patrons is a treat. Not only artistic it is but highly interesting as well. For instance, it shows a cataract, as beautiful as that of Niagara, in a desert; it teaches you how to get gold from the soil (if you happen to need any); it makes a bird dive, and a fish fly, not one but several.

Besides these interesting sights, that humor in the subtitles is "side-splitting." It is in one good reel.—P. S. Harrison.

Fire Law in Detroit Causes Exhibitors Inconvenience

ACCORDING to reports from Detroit, Mich., there has been a merry fight on in that city between the state fire marshal's office and the local police and fire officials. Over a week ago the State Fire Marshal notified all the Detroit theatres that standing room would not be permitted and that no tickets can be sold if seats are not vacant. The blow came on Saturday, the police were ordered to enforce the ruling, and on Sunday the houses who look to $150 or more on this one day alone from standees to swell their receipts, were up against it. The local fire marshal and the city's building inspector got busy, however, and the theatres have been unofficially notified that they may again sell standing room providing the aisles and exits are not blocked.

The theatres in Detroit and the state have certainly suffered a lot during the past year and more trouble can be expected. What with government, state, county and city taxes, war taxes for the patrons, two lightless nights a week and the "Flue" epidemic, which closed every house for more than two weeks, a number of houses are facing a certain loss. This winter the legislature meets and censorship will again be up. The state organization is not active and while the bill could be defeated, it is doubtful if much will be done, The only hope is for the leading exhibitors to get legal representation at Lansing.

Fond du Lac Fears Ban May be Put in Force Again

THE owners of the motion picture houses in Fond du Lac have been on needles and pins lest the influenza ban should be put on again. And they have had cause for anxiety. The four weeks of closed doors at what should have been the most profitable period of the year meant genuine hardship—putting the ban on again would mean additional losses that would be difficult to bear.

At that, business since the ban was lifted has been decidedly subnormal. Howe's pictures at the Henry Boyle, an attraction which it was assumed would continue to draw on and on forever, like 'Uncle Tom's Cabin," did a very ordinary business. All along the line there has been complaint of empty seats. To add to the complications the weather man "butted in." Day after day there was rain just about time for the performance to start—sometimes the weather cleared in fifteen minutes, sometimes it didn't, but there is this peculiarity about the picture fan—if the weather is rotten or threatening about the time to leave home—it's all off for that day, no matter how bright the skies may become later. All in all, the lot of the picture house man in Fond du Lac has been an unhappy one of late.

Having had two weeks of poor business and two weeks of anxiety, however, the managers have decided to go to it and most of them are booking in strong programs in the hope of overcoming the handicap the flu has interposed.

Lubliner and Trinz Acquire Ascher Bros. Lakeside Theatre

LUBLINER & TRINZ have bought the Lakeside Theatre, Chicago, from Ascher Bros. The purchase was something of a surprise to everyone. Up to the time of the opening of the Riviera and Pantheon, the Lakeside was looked on as the leading theatre of the Wilson Avenue district, and enjoyed the cream of the patronage in that select residential part of Chicago.

The intention of Lubliner & Trinz is to continue the business along the same policy that has governed the house in the past, contrary to the rumor that the new owners would make a "cheap" house of their new acquisition.

E. Stern who is one of the heads of their executive offices has been placed in temporary charge of the house, and James Keough remains manager of the Pantheon.

The adding of the Lakeside to the Lubliner and Trinz string gives them thirteen houses. The disposing of this theatre still leaves the Ascher Bros. organization the goodly number of fifteen first class theatres.

Springfield Exhibitors Speculate on War Productions

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., managers are wondering whether war films are going to die or go big, now that the conflict has ended. Most of them are under the impression that the public has had its fill for awhile, and that they will not draw well from now on. Perhaps in a year, or less, folks will again clamor for action of the battlefield sort and the war pictures will come back into their own. It is almost a certainty that as the years go on, the films which were made on the different battlefields will become priceless, and will be great teachers of history. "Hearts of the World," for instance, should be a wonder ten years from now. In the meantime local exhibitors are staying off the war stuff as much as possible.

Keeping Up with Dubuque

FRANCIS BUSHMAN, supported by Beverly Bayne, came to the Grand, Dubuque, Ia., Friday, November 15, in "A Pair of Cupids.". This picture was pronounced to be one of the funniest pictures in which this clever team has played.

JACK RICHARDSON was presented at the Dreamland theatre Friday and Saturday in "Desert Law," a fairly good picture depicting Western life. Manager Boyle reported good business.

"WILD LIFE," with William Desmond, was shown at the Liberty theatre Thursday, November 14. On Friday Claire Anderson and Wallace McDonald were seen in "Mme. Paulette," and on Saturday Virginia Pearson was presented in "Her Price."

"A FIGHT FOR MILLIONS," with William Duncan, continues to be in high favor with the serial loving patrons of the Grand theatre. An episode is shown there every Saturday, in connection with a two-reel comedy and a current events reel, and a good crowd is always in attendance.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" will be shown at the Blende theatre at Benton, Wis., during the week of November 24. This picture will undoubtedly draw very well, as it has been extensively advertised for the past several weeks.

THE PRINCESS THEATRE at Lansing, Ia., opened November 15, after being in quarantine for nearly three weeks. The program was "The Girl Philippa," with Anita Stewart. Manager Witt says that now that the quarantine has been lifted he is going to show the very best pictures he can obtain.

THE PLAZA theatre at Dyersville, Ia., put on "My Four Years in Germany," Saturday and Sunday, November 16 and 17.

NORMA TALMADGE, termed by the manager of the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., as "The 100 per cent star," came to the Star theatre Thursday, November 14, in "The Safety Curtain." On Saturday of the same week Mary Pickford played in "How Could You, Jean?" and on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 19 and 20, D. W. Griffith's great production, "The Great Love," was shown.

SOME of the features shown at the Plaza theatre at Manchester, Ia., during the past week were "Molly Entangled," with Vivian Martin; "Blue Blazes Rawdon," with William Hart; "Lend Me Your Name," with Harold Lockwood. On Sunday and Monday of the week of November 17, "Pershing's Crusaders" was shown. On Tuesday Mae Marsh played in "The Glorious Adventure." "Jack and Jill," with Jack Pickford, was Wednesday's program. Marguerite Clark was seen on Thursday in "The Seven Swans," and on Friday "The Winning of Beatrice," with Mae Allison, was shown.

ON Friday, November 15, Douglas Fairbanks was shown at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., in "American Aristocracy." That charming star, Bessie Barriscale, appeared in "The Patriot" on Saturday, and "The Tyrant Fear," with Dorothy Dalton, was Sunday's program. "Resurrection," with Pauline Frederick, was shown Tuesday and Wednesday.

THERE was a number of disappointed picture fans at Hopkinton, Ia., Wednesday evening, November 14, when the sixth episode of "Hands Up" failed to arrive. However, the manager secured it for the following evening, so the day was saved.

ON Saturday evening, November 16, "Whither Thou Goest," with Orrin Johnson and Rhea Mitchell, was shown at the City Hall in Bloomington, Wis. There was a good attendance at this picture.

News of Fond du Lac Theatres

THE nearest approach in Fond du Lac, Wis., to breaking the hoodoo that has followed the influenza ban occurred at the Bijou when Cecil De Mille's "Old Wives for New" drew fair sized audiences on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 18, 19 and 20.

MANAGER SMITH, of the Bijou, advertised "Italy's Flaming Front" extensively, using lots of billboard space and large newspaper copy. This publicity work he supplemented with a line of publicity that he had not ventured on before. He went into the quarries at Marblehead, Eden and Nast, near here, where there is a large Italian population, and did extensive billing. This served to arouse the national spirit and helped make this justly celebrated war picture a winner.

"THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN" is being extensively advertised by Manager Smith, of the Bijou, in the hope that it may be one of the subjects that will pack the house in spite of the flu. The popularity of "Tarzan of the Apes" on its two presentations here leads to the belief that the sequel may also go well.

"FIGHT the flu hoodoo with fire," is "Billy" Ainsworth's policy at the Orpheum. In spite of the fact that there hasn't been a sneeze or hardly so much as a cough at the Orpheum since the flu ban was lifted and the theatre reopened, the picture fans have been leary and many familiar faces have been conspicuous by their absence. But Ainsworth is going to have them back in their places if big programs and oodles of publicity will do it. Thus he is using newspaper space and billboards with perfect abandon; he is turning his lobby into trench and battle scenes, he is getting book stores to make full window displays of Empey's "Over the Top"—he is going at it with a smash and he will win.

WHILE in Milwaukee recently Manager Ainsworth, of the Orpheum, booked "The Yellow Dog," the date of which has not yet been announced.

NORMA TALMADGE in "The Only Way" will be the offering at the Orpheum December 2, 3 and 4.

They Say in Chicago That—

A. C. ROEBUCK, president and treasurer of the Enterprise Optical Company, has been attending a meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held in Cleveland.

R. C. CROPPER, manager of the Bee Hive Exchange located in the Film Building, Chicago, has just opened a new Exchange at 109 West Maryland street, Indianapolis, Indiana, in order to facilitate the handling of their rapidly growing business in that territory. A phenomenal growth of the Bee Hive business has been due to their ability to supply the exhibitors with the large variety of special short reel pictures that deliver the goods at the box-office.

ANITA STEWART passed through Chicago Tuesday, November 19, on her way to the coast, entertaining a number of friends between trains at the Hotel Sherman.

"AMERICA'S ANSWER," the official United States War Film, was shown at the Vernon theatre, Chicago, at a special performance given for children. Young America packed the theatre all morning.

I. L. LESSERMAN, of the Universal Chicago office, reports that their picture, The Lure of the Circus," featuring Eddie Polo, is going with a bang; the claim being that there has never has been a serial put out through the Chicago office that has pleased the exhibitors as this one has. One of Mr. Lesserman's greatest troubles is to supply the theatres clamoring for bookings.

MR. MORRIS FLECKLES is stopping off for a few days in Chicago on his return trip to New York.

CONTRACTS are pouring into the Universal office on their new Hearst Weeklies, Universal Current Events and Screen Telegram.

A. G. SPENCER and his chief, M. C. Hughes, manager of the Program Department, Metro Chicago office, report that their program bookings are growing daily.

LEE WOODYATT, Fred McMillan and H. L. Conway, who cover the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, respectively, for the Select Pictures, are keeping Sales Manager Ben Beadell busy answering contracts on the new Mitchell Lewis series of six pictures; also the specials, "The One Woman," produced by Thomas Dixon, and the Cavell case or "The Woman the Germans Shot," featuring the well-known star of the speaking stage, Julia Arthur; also the "Midnight Patrol," by Thomas H. Ince, special.

LEE HERZ is wearing a great big smile, caused by the big business he is doing with "Five Nights" and "Ashes of Love."

CHARLES J. SCHAEFFER, the dean of Chicago exhibitors, has disposed of one of his theatres, the Keystone, located on Sheridan Road, Chicago.

News and Gossip of Springfield Thatrees

MANAGER LOPER, of the Lyric, announces the booking of "Cleopatra" and "Queen of the Sea," two of William Fox's biggest and costliest productions.

THE publicity department of the Princess is responsible for the statement that the theatre is booked almost solid for the next six months with some fine features coming. The Princess is now practically on the open market, the only big downtown house which has not a regular program.

NOW that the theatres have re-opened, business is again normal at the stores. Ask any shop or storekeeper in this city if he wants the theatres closed and he will tell you "NO!" most emphatically. There was something learned during the three and one-half weeks the playhouses were dark.

ONE of the local exhibitors said recently that he thought it would be a good idea if the exchanges throughout the country would send to Belgium such releases as they have no great use for to give the Belgian children and poor people some free entertainment. After four years of trouble, a good show would be a treat for the heroic allies.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS' correspondent asked Manager Thornton of the Gaiety what he had coming that was good, and the theatre man said: "Well, I have Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires," "The Squaw Man" with an all-star cast, "Thirty a Week" with Tom Moore, Douglas Fairbanks in "Arizona," Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," W. S. Hart in "Branding Broadway," Elsie Ferguson in "Under the Greenwood Tree," "The Greatest Thing in Life," "A Perfect Lady" with Madge Kennedy, "A Perfect 36" with Mabel Normand and Rex Beach's "Too Fat to Fight." How's that for a lineup?" To which we replied, "some lineup."

W. W. WATTS, the famous "66" of the Vaudette, had a troublesome molar extracted, which has increased his good humor tremendously.

THE PRINCESS has been going along like a house afire. Some of the pictures which have made the management happy are "Out of the Night" with Catherine Calvert, Florence Reed in "The Struggle Everlasting," Robert Warwick in "The Accidental Honeymoon" and "The Vigilantes." This last named play opened at the Princess on Sunday, November 17, for three days, and the first day was a big one. Folks who saw the picture said it was one of the best ever brought to this city. "Married in Name Only," "Sins of Ambition," and a new J. Warren Kerrigan picture are scheduled to finish out the week ending November 23.

GEORGE WALSH in "On the Jump" and Bert Lytell in "Boston Blackie's Little Pal" did very well at the Lyric. Both pictures were shown two days each, and patrons expressed their pleasure in no mean terms.

FROM the outlying theatres comes the cheering news that business has opened up nicely since the influenza has desisted and everyone expects to make money this winter. The Empress, North End Circle, Pekin and Palace say that patronage has been satisfactory the past week.

MANAGER ED MAISEL, of the Capitol, announces the booking of The James Montgomery Flagg comedies, the Triangle re-issue comedies, and Mack Sennett-Paramount comedies. The Capitol is now showing Metro, Select and Triangle plays, with special features at times. "The Geezer of Berlin" will be given at the Capitol on Friday and Saturday, November 22 and 23.

GUS KERASOTES has booked "Crashing Through to Berlin" to be shown at the Royal in the near future.

MANAGER GEORGE RIORDAN says that "A Fight for Millions" is attracting more attention at the Majestic than any serial the theatre has ever shown.

NEWMAN, the traveler, is going to make his first appearance in Springfield in about two weeks. Manager Cave, of the Catterton, says that there will be a series of pictures, a new one every week for three weeks. The Lyman Howe pictures have always done very well in this city, and Burton Holmes once had a representative here with his famous pictures, but with only fair success. There isn't a reason on earth why Springfield should not make Newman's engagement here one of the big successes of the year. Howe plays here twice every year, and makes good each time.

MIRIAM FOUCHE, former Petersburg girl, was seen in "Private Peat" at the Gaiety. Miss Fouche has a warm friend in Nellie Browne Duff, feature writer on the Illinois State Journal.

WHAT promised to be one of the greatest Sundays in the history of Springfield from a financial standpoint was quashed by a rainstorm which came whistling in about 8 p. m. A gigantic parade was staged downtown in the afternoon, in which thousands participated, and with many other thousands looking on. As soon as the demonstration was over, everyone tried to get into the playhouses, with the result that none of the theatres could handle the crowds. Every manager began laying plans to make a record-breaking day. Things went fine till the rain came, and then everything went to smash. But at that the day was a banner one and every manager was happy.

SUNDAY, November 17, was the biggest day the Savoy theatre ever had in its existence. Manager Kerasotes had on the second chapter of "A Fight for Millions," a Helen Gibson "Fast Mail" play, a two reel L-Ko comedy and a Universal Weekly. Monday, Colleen Moore was here in "A Hoosier Romance"; Tuesday, Alice Joyce in "The Woman Between Friends"; Wednesday, "The Brass Bullet" number 9, a Lyons-Moran comedy and a two reel Broadway star feature; Thursday, Franklyn Farnum in "The Empty Cab"; Friday, the first chapter of "The Iron Test," new Vitagraph serial, and other pictures; Saturday, Grace Valentine in "The Unchastened Woman."

THE ROYAL has booked the following pictures to be shown the week of November 17-23, succeeding the three days' run of "Pershing's Crusaders"; Wednesday, "The Interloper" with Kitty Gordon; Thursday, "Game With Fate," a Vitagraph production; Friday, "The Kid Is Clever," a Fox production; Saturday, "Up Romance Road," Mutual film with William Russell.

NORMA TALMADGE had four excellent days at the Lyric in "Her Only Way." This was the first time manager Loper had her for a run of this length, and the results were most gratifying. Peggy Hyland followed for two days in William Fox's "Marriages Are Made," and also did nicely. The rest of the week of November 17 to 23 went to Edith Storey in "The Silent Woman" and "The Prussian Cur," Fox's patriotic drama.

BILLIE BURKE gave Manager Watts of the Vaudette four of the best days he has ever had with "The Make Believe Wife." The beauty certainly made the town talk, and pleased one hundred per cent. Enid Bennett succeeded her with "When Do We Eat?" which was good but did not play to the enormous crowds that Miss Burke did.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

THE last episode of "The Lion's Claws," with Marie Walcamp, was shown at the Family theatre on Monday, November 18. The ending of this popular serial caused regret among the numerous Family fans, who followed with great interest its every episode, in spite of the interruptions caused by the closing of the theatres during the paralysis epidemic.

"THE ORDEAL OF ROSETTA," with Alice Brady, was shown at the Princess theatre Monday and Tuesday, November 18 yyand 19 to large and enthusiastic houses. Miss Brady is a great favorite in Dubuque and her plays always draw record crowds.

THE FAMILY presented "Scandal" with Constance Talmadge, Tuesday, November 19. In this picture Miss Talmadge gave promise of developing into a comedian of rare ability, and after seeing her latest plays there is no doubt that this promise was fulfilled. "Scandal" drew finely Tuesday evening, notwithstanding the fact that it had been shown two or three times before at the downtown theatres.

EPISODES of "Hands Up," with Ruth Roland, and "The Hidden Hand," with Doris Kenyon, were shown at the Liberty theatre Monday, November 18. A Harold Lloyd comedy completed the bill.

LOUISE GLAUM, one of the screen's most talented actresses, was presented at the Grand Monday and Tuesday, November 18 and 19, in "Shackled." Miss Glaum began to be noticed here about two years ago, when she appeared with Howard Kickman in a Triangle adaptation of Richard Harding Davis's well-known novel, "Somewhere in France." Since then her pictures have been anxiously awaited by scores of followers. Of late her plays have been few and far between, being shown here at an average of once every two or three months. "Shackled" was a typical Louise Glaum picture and drew fairly well.

"REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM," with Mary Pickford, proved a good drawing card at the Family theatre on Saturday, November 16. The people of the North End like "Little Mary" very well and always turn out splendidly whenever her pictures come to the Family.

"THE UNBELIEVER," with Raymond McKee and Marguerite Courtot, played at the Dreamland theatre, Wednesday, November 20. The fact that the U. S. Marines played quite a part in the picture was responsible for its great drawing power, for up until a month ago there was a marine recruiting station in Dubuque, and as numerous Dubuque boys enlisted in this branch of service, their friends and relatives were anxious to see this picture and packed the theatre at all performances.

PEGGY HYLAND starrd in "Marriages Are Made" at the Dreamland theatre Sunday, November 17. Miss Hyland is a good drawing power, so this picture secured capacity houses for the Dreamland all Sunday afternoon and evening.

THE PRINCESS certainly had a hard time getting "Unclaimed Goods," with Vivian Martin. About a month ago they scheduled it for the Sunday program, but the film did not arrive. Last week Manager Billos was assured that he could get the film, so he advertised it for the Sunday, November 17, show. At the opening hour, one thirty o'clock, on Sunday afternoon, the film had not come in. Luckily, Mr. Billos had on hand "Scandal," with Constance Talmadge, so he ran that picture, thinking "Unclaimed Goods" would come in any moment. At six o'clock the picture came, just in time for the first evening performance. Manager Billos says that he will try to get the picture back in the near future, for the patrons who missed seeing it in the afternoon.

MANAGER F. H. YOUNT, of the Family theatre, put on "Exile," with Mme. Petrova, for the Sunday, November 17, feature. The picture drew the usual Sunday crowd and everyone who saw this picture pronounced it first-rate.

VIRGINIA PEARSON played at the Dreamland theatre Thursday, November 14, in "Her Price." Every time Miss Pearson appears here she adds to her reputation as one of the screen's finest emotional actresses, and this picture was no exception to the rule.

"THE GLORIOUS ADVENTURE," with Mae Marsh, was shown at the Princess theatre two days, November 13 and 14, to average houses. Miss Marsh was very humorous and very interesting in this photoplay. It can be classed as the best play she has done so far this year.

DOROTHY DALTON made a name for herself at the Princess theatre last month in "Love Me," and when "Flare Up Sal" came there Friday and Saturday, November 15 and 16, Princess patrons remembered her splendid acting in her previous picture and came out in large numbers to see the show this week. In plays like these Miss Dalton never fails to please.

"CONQUERED HEARTS," with Marguerite Marsh, was advertised as being one of the best features ever shown at the Grand, and while it was not all its press agent claimed it to be, it was a more than average entertainment and pleased all who witnessed it. The picture was shown Thursday, November 14.

What Racine Is Doing

THE general slump in the picture business in Racine, Wis., is gradually dying out, and the picture houses are again being filled. When the epidemic broke out in this city, and the theatres were closed for about four weeks, the fans got out of the habit of going to the movies. All the houses, however, are putting out some big productions and breaking the people into the habit.

THE MUSIC at the Bijou under the capable directorship of the master-violinist, E. C. Sullivan, is meeting with great approval at that theatre, which is taking over a deal of the afternoon trade. The music is rather soft, and blends wonderfully with the nature and scenes of the picture playing. All of McKivetts' features took well last week, and he is confident that his big investment on the redecorating and renovating of his theatre will pay for itself in a comparatively short time. This week the Bijou is playing "Romance of the Tarzan," a sister picture to "Tarzan of the Apes," which took so well with the movie fans at that theatre last summer. The intentions of the manager is to play the picture continually from Monday, November 18, to Saturday, the 23. Although the price of the production is way above the average, the regular admission price is being charged.

THE RIALTO, known as the most beautiful theatre in Wisconsin, and which cost the Friedmann Co. thousands of dollars to build and furnish, for reasons unknown is not doing the business that they did when they first opened up, although they are showing the very highest class of pictures. "The Law of the North," that drew so well last week, was advertised by a brown bear that walked the main streets on the day that the picture was being played. This week, beginning November 18, the Rialto is playing "The Hun Within," with an all-star cast. Billie Burke in "The Believe Wife," and Constance Talmadge in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots." The management has been unable to land anything for Sunday yet.

THE PALACE is playing to fair houses, which are gradually turning to the normal "crowd." This week the Palace will show Marguerite Clark in "The Wild Flowers," Fred Stone in "The Goat," Gail Kane in "The Manx Man."

THE REX, not to take a back seat in the "Big Feature Game," has had the apparently good fortune of landing "Les Miserables," the master play that has drawn a packed house every time it played here. William Farnum will feature in this production. Clara Williams will star in "Carmen of the Klondike," Olga Petrova in "The Panther Woman."

NORMAN and Blumberg made a trip to Chicago last week where they made a general cleanup of all the productions on hand there, including Annette Kellerman in "Queen of the Sea," and Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives."

ANY amount of competition and rivalry is in evidence in the Racine movie business, and some of the managers even hesitate to announce their features a week ahead of time for fear of being bunkoed.

JACK BESSEY is playing here at the Orpheum theatre again, but his popularity in this city is nearing the end of the rope. His playing here apparently has not much effect on the motion picture business.

What Detroit Is Doing

HIGHLAND PARK, Detroit's big suburb with its 30,000 population and home of the Ford factory, is to have motion pictures on Sunday, starting December 8. The residents voted three to two to open the theatres on Sunday. The Sunday programs will be very carefully selected by the managers of the three houses located there. A big new house already is projected there by Harry Goldstein who originally promote the Majestic, Detroit.

JOE HORWITZ of the Four Square exchange, Detroit, ha purchased "The Accidental Honeymoon" and "The Struggl Everlasting" for Michigan.

DETROIT will have another first run theatre in the Colonia Florence Reed in "Wives of Men" will be the first attractior Heretofore the Colonial has changed its program from two t seven times weekly. This gives Detroit seven first run house: others being the Majestic, Broadway Strand, Washingtor Adams, Regent and the Madison.

THE MADISON theatre house record was smashed Sunda with the Chaplin picture, "Shoulder Arms." It is to remai two weeks. "Italy's Flaming Front" makes up the balanc of the program.

FOR "EVEN AS YOU AND I," the special Universal pic ture, the Majestic management will offer a musical prelud with girls posing as statues.

ARTHUR S. HYMAN is now Unit supervisor of the Exhi bitors Booking Corporation in the central Eastern states. Mr Hyman retains his interests in Arthur S. Hyman Attractions Inc. Mr. Hyman is taking care of the bookings for "La fayette, We Come."

"DOC" OWNES, former manager of the Knickerbocker Detroit, is now in France. Doc is doing Y. M. C. A. work

A TRADE showing for "The Lure of the Circus" was held in the Colonial theatre, Detroit, Thursday night. About 100 exhibitors attended, the biggest turnout yet recorded locally, for an affair of this kind. Several points have been booked.

C. A. SIMPSON has become traffic manager of the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange managers. Central shipping rooms for all the companies are maintained in the Film building. W. A. Haynes has been appointed manager of the Film Clearing House association.

WHILE the influenza epidemic is still dangerous, exhibitors in the state are more hopeful than they have been for some time. The theatres are still closed in Port Huron, Bay City, Saginaw, Pontiac and Alma but will probably be re-opened within a few days.

MORE than 100 theatres in Detroit and the state have signed up for the Gaumont Graphic in combination with the Detroit Free Press Film edition, showing local pictures. The Metropolitan company is handling it.

A. J. REED has been appointed manager of the General exchange, Detroit, succeeding Frank Stuart, who resigned. Mr. Reed has been the Detroit representative for George Leine.

WHEN John H. Kunsky's lease on the Washington theatre expires in September it is reported that William Fox will take it over. Mr. Kunsky has two other big down town houses and seven smaller and residential theatres.

Dubuque Sees Firefly of France at Princess Theatre

"THE FIREFLY OF FRANCE," presented at the Princess theatre Sunday, November 10, was the best vehicle Wallace Reid has had for many months. It took famously. In the first place the name of the star was enough to draw more than an average crowd, and in the second place the title was extremely catchy, more so because on the day it was shown, people were anxiously awaiting Germany's answer and any play with a war sounding title was largely attended. Mr. Reid has a splendid part and he made the most of it. The supporting cast, especially Anna Little and Charles Ogle, was all that could be desired.

BEE HIVE EXCHANGE

MILWAUKEE CHICAGO INDIANAPOLIS

Brief Bits of Chicago

THE FATTY ARBUCKLE comedies which Manager Watts has booked from the Bee Hive exchange, Chicago, are pleasing everyone. The prints are all in good shape, and the comedy in each as good as the big fellow has ever done. One of the pictures comes every Sunday and is run for four days. With a Paramount feature and a Screen Telegram, this makes a splendid program.

THE FIRST of the James Montgomery Flagg comedies was shown at the Gaiety on Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 17, 18, 19 and 20. "Independence, Be Gosh," was the title, and the crowds liked it. "Private Peat," Paramount-Artcraft's special with Private Peat was the feature, and it, too, scored heavily.

EVERYONE is set for the biggest Thanksgiving in history. All managers have booked special shows, and the bills will be most tempting.

JOVIAL Ben Rovin announces the purchase of a new Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, which will be installed in the Amuse-U immediately. Ben has started out since the reopening to shatter all records for big business, and long lines are seen at the ticket window every afternoon and evening. With Triangle, Metro, Universal and Fox pictures, Ben can offer the best of the program releases, and his plan of so doing has resulted in great satisfaction to his patrons, and increased business for himself. "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," a Fox picture with George Walsh, W. S. Hart in "The Devil's Double," Bushman and Bayne in "The Voice of Conscience" and Monroe Salisbury in "The Quiet of Silence" are some late offerings which have garnered much coin for Ben and the Amuse-U.

Dubuque News and Views

"REACHING FOR THE MOON" with Douglas Fairbanks, came to the Family theatre on Saturday, November 9. As usual Douglas kept the house laughing from the start to the finish. Fairbanks' plays never fail to attract capacity houses, in fact, a Fairbanks comedy was never known to draw poorly in this city.

HENRY B. WALTHALL in "With Hoops of Steel" was the star at the Grand on Thursday, November 7. Walthall is a good actor, but just about this time people want lighter plays, and more comedy.

JEWEL CARMEN was shown at the Liberty theatre Sunday, November 10, in "The Fallen Angel." Miss Carmen did some good work in this picture and according to some it was her clever work that put the picture over.

ON SUNDAY, November 10, the Grand picture fans had the pleasure of seeing the Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, in "His Birthright." The fans who witnessed the play considered it much better than his previous successes. There was a good attendance at all performances.

"IT'S A SCREAM FROM BEGINNING TO END," was the comment of an enthusiastic fan after seeing Jane and Katherine Lee in "Swat the Spy," at the Dreamland theatre on Sunday, November 10. That was evidently the opinion of a great many more people who witnessed the play, for nearly everyone coming out of the theatre had a "grin on their face and a smile in their eye." Of all the Fox players, these two children are the most popular hers—they always draw finely.

MARY PICKFORD was presented at the Family theatre Wednesday, November 7, in "The Pride of the Clan."

Los Angeles Board of Trade Incorporates

HAVING perfected an organization, members of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade will incorporate within the next few days. Officers of the board were selected two weeks ago, but a few days ago a special meeting was held at which the members elected a board of directors to serve one year. The directors are: David Bershon, of Universal; T. E. Hancock, of World; Harry Ballance, of Paramount-Artcraft; M. A. Walsh, of Fox; B. E. Loper, of Select.

Mr. Bershon is president of the board while Mr. Hancock is vice-president and Michael A. P. Narlian, a Los Angeles attorney, is secretary.

The incorporation papers have already been prepared, which show that the organization has been formed to encourage a closer relationship between the film exchanges and the exhibitor. Arrangements will be made to settle all disputes between the exhibitor and exchange. As soon as the incorporation has been effected, President Bershon will appoint members of a grievance committee, the duty of which will be to settle all differences between the exhibitor and film man. Another purpose of the board is to see to the fulfilment of film contracts made by exhibitors. A number of committees will be appointed by the president the early part of December.

Theatres of San Francisco Get under Way Again

THEATRES in every section of San Francisco were opened on November 16. The influenza situation showed such improvement on the 15th that the Board of Health decided that there was no further danger of a recurrence of the epidemic and that it was therefore advisable to revoke the order which was to keep the theatres in the Mission and North Beach districts closed another week. When it was announced that all the theatres were to be opened the theatre men and exchanges decided to hold a down town celebration on Friday night. The campaign for the United War Work was on and the motion picture men aided and abetted by the other theatres placed large advertisements in the papers inviting the public to come down town and enjoy a carnival. It was intended to have nearly every professional in town provide free amusement from platforms and moving stages mounted on large auto trucks. The whole plan was to be a grand advertisement for the reopening of the theatres and also to give the United War Workers a chance to take up collections. But at the last moment the Board of Health vetoed the entertainment proposition. The afternoon papers carried the announcement that the carnival was off, but apparently few people saw it for the streets were crowded with people, wondering when the show was going to begin. This fizzle reacted on the Saturday night crowds in the theatres, which were only comfortably filled. On Sunday night a rain storm broke and continued throughout Monday. So the theatres have not yet had an opportunity to test whether crowds will attend the theatres and wear their masks as provided in the opening permit. However, it is announced that the masks will be abandoned by Thursday of this week, so after that date the theatres should again have their normal attendance. Oakland was opened up at the same time as San Francisco and many points in the state started up at the same time. Some places, however, have just been attacked by the "flu," like the mining camp, Angles' camp, and these will probably remain closed for some time. With these few exceptions practically all the northern part of the state will be open before Thanksgiving Day.

Practically every motion picture house in San Francisco gave its entire receipts for the opening day to the United War Workers.

December Hopes to See Cafifornia Towns Open

THE influenza ban is being lifted in many of the towns of Southern California and Arizona and it is expected that by the last week of November all theatres in the Los Angeles territory will be open to the public. Saturday, November 16, was a very busy day with all of the Los Angeles film exchanges. Many of the exchange men reported that preparations were being made to ship almost as much film to points in the territory as before the "flu" epidemic caused a general closing.

A number of towns lifted the ban on Saturday, November 16, including Long Beach, Santa Ana, and Corona. The Corona opened with the Universal special "Crashing Through to Berlin," while the West End at Santa Ana reopened with "For Husbands Only."

On Monday, November 18, the theatres of Bakersfield, San Diego, and Santa Monica reopened. The Superba at San Diego reopened with Carmel Myers in "Society's Sensation," the Cabrillo with William S. Hart in "Border Wireless," and the Broadway with Enid Bennett in "The Marriage Ring." The Pastime at Bakersfield reopened with a rebooking of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

Theatres of Miami, Arizona, opened on Wednesday, November 20, while those of Yuma are slated to begin business again on Monday, November 25.

Butte Opens But Faces Reclosing Order When Epidemic Looks Worse

BUTTE theatres are open but they are being operated under temporary restrictions. There was quite a flurry of excitement last week when it began to look as though the ban on account of the "flu" would be clamped on again in Butte, due to an increase in the number of new cases following the "victory day" celebrations. Such cases reached 75 per day.

For a time it looked as though the city would be closed again. The doctors of the city met and on Saturday the health board decided to permit public gatherings to continue, although children under 16 are prohibited from attending the shows and the public schools will not open until the atmosphere clears.

The "flu" epidemic will be fought from a new angle, one which has many advocates in preference to the scheme of closing theatres, etc. It is simply this—homes wherein influenza cases develop will be put under a week's quarantine and more if necessary. Patients will be isolated.

The theatres put up a vigorous fight against the threatened re-closing. They maintained that if the theatres must close all other places where crowds gather should do likewise, which would include all non-essential stores and business places.

In the advertisement of the American theatre Manager Frank Bailey came out with the following plain and bold statement:

> "NOTE: 'Selling' an epidemic is just like selling soap or soup—just advertise it strong enough and you'll get a flock of 'customers.' Three have it and seven are scared into it. We object to being closed unless every place in Butte where people congregate is likewise closed, in other words, the theatres were the 'goat' in the last 30-day closing which entailed a tremendous financial loss. We consider the American theatre absolutely safe, being ventilated, repainted and everything that human ingenuity can devise has been done. The air is better than that on the street. A rough estimate of new 'flu' cases from Monday and Tuesday's celebration show one new case to every thousand people, which is not an epidemic percentage. THE MANAGEMENT."

This plain statement hit the mark and had its effect with the health officials, as the decision not to close shows.

William Sheer Traces Career Back to Races

"BILLY" SHEER, the new Universal film star, used to be one of the leading American jockeys in the days when the royal sport of horse-racing was in its prime and such riders as Helgerson, Sloane, Mountaine, Murphy, Garrison, etc., were at the top of the list, with Sheer right up among them. Needless to say, he had a lot of thrilling experiences in the saddle, some of which lend themselves particularly well to screen reproduction. So "Billy" Sheer expects to try his hand at authorship soon. Right now he is "doping out" a racetrack story, in which he expects to play the lead. Unless his material fails "to jell," this tale of the turf should prove to the screen what "In Old Kentucky" was to the stage—the best horse-racing story ever produced.

Moos with Universal in Los Angeles

SIGMUND MOOS, formerly special representative of Universal's New York exchange, who came West with President Carl Laemmle on his recent trip, has decided to locate in Los Angeles and has joined the sales forces of the local Universal exchange under the banner of Manager David Bershon.

Reaction Hurts Business in Butte Theatres

THEATRES of Butte, Mont., which reopened to good business following the lifting of the influenza ban, now report business far below normal. For the first few days after the reopening on November 8 business was very good and the outlook hopeful. But gloom now pervades the theatrical atmosphere and all of the managers are operating under severe handicaps which cuts the box office receipts. This is due to the continued agitation calling attention to the alleged gravity of the situation in Butte and to threats on the part of the health board to again close the town. A second closing would mean putting the lid on tighter than ever, including the non-essential stores as well as theatres, schools and churches.

The restrictions prohibiting all under 16 years old from attending a theatre started the tough-sledding for the showmen. This cut business practically in half, for not only did it keep away the young folks but it scared the grown-ups—that is many of them. The psychological effect has been to make the situation appear more serious than it really is. The fact is that from 70 to 100 new cases are reported daily the past week, which is a marked increase over a week precious. So conditions are admittedly bad, but the question arising is how best to combat the disease and prevent its further spread. The business men maintain that to close business is the wrong way; that the correct solution is to quarantine and isolate homes and cases. The experience of Kansas City is cited to prove the contention that closing a theatre does no good.

The Peoples, Rialto, American, Orpheum, Ansonia, Broadway, Liberty and Empress all report light business. The smaller houses are suffering in the same proportion.

"Flu shy" is the most fitting phrase to apply to the local situation and the theatre-goer seems shy indeed. The newspapers have been playing up the seriousness of the situation pretty strongly and this has not helped business for the showman in the last.

The reopening was a grand success, with big crowds at all houses. For three or four days all went well. Then the reaction came with the announcement of the new restrictions to be imposed by the health officials and the continued cry of the fact that new cases were on the increase.

Leonhardt Celebrates His Birthday

HARRY LEONHARDT, presentation director at the New California theatre, to be opened early in December, recently celebrated his birthday with a forty-seventh annual eats. The menu included Leonhardt special cocktail, Poutporri a la Universal; Select, Turkey; Salad, United; Pie, a la Fox Sunshine; Miller's Green-Eyed Monster Cream de Menthe, and Rosie sparkling Burgundy. Other refreshments were imported direct from Venice and Vernon. As a number of exchange managers were present, the menu advised that cancellation should be sent to the home office, and that no first run engagements for the California theatre would be considered at the party.

Seattle Sees Pictures While Wearing Masks

THE great "flu" ban was lifted in Seattle, Wash., on a Tuesday. Although it was announced that "Flu Masks" should be worn in all theatres none were worn, as that ban was also lifted. The theatres and movies were crowded and only standing room was left, for the fans were so anxious to be able to return to their favorite shows. They also desired to celebrate the ending of the war. This announcement came the day before. The movies at Camp Lewis opened a week later and in Tacoma almost ten weeks later. The Sunday following the opening of Seattle movies, crowds were lined up for two blocks at some of the larger establishments. The whole state is now open.

In and Out of Seattle

J. WILLIS SAYRE, one of the best advertising and newspaper men in Seattle, has accepted the position as publicity manager of The Greater Features Company, in Seattle. G. F. Fullerton, formerly held this position, but resigned to take a position with the United States Exporting and Importing Co., Seattle.

SEATTLE is not only a fan city, but these fans as well as others like to have their pictures taken by a picture camera. Ernst Brothers have opened a studio, where they take photos. The machine, which is made by the Anderson Company of San Francisco, does not work as fast as the regular movie camera, so that the different poses can be obtained in a shorter time.

MR. BERSTON has purchased the picture house at St. Helens from Mrs. Ethel Jeffries.

THE EXHIBITORS' FILM EXCHANGE, F. V. Fisher manager, has obtained the Northwest rights for the Mary Pickford pictures.

ETHEL CLAYTON, famous Paramount star, paid Seattle a short visit the later part of the week.

AMONG the recent visitors to Seattle's Film row was George H. Reizner of Raymond and South Bend, Wash., who is building a combination moving picture and road show house that will seat 1,100 people. Mr. Reizner believes that every exhibitor in a small town can make more money when his house is built on these lines. His reasons are that one cannot always get the picture he desires and that the patrons often wish to see a road show.

A RUMOR has been rampant in the Northwest that the Mutual Film Corporation, which has an exchange in Seattle, is about to give up its business, as published in Motion Picture News, Mutual has merged with Affiliated.

JOE DONNELLY, the Queen Bee, of Film Row, has taken over the Montana rights for "The Finger of Justice." Miss Donnelly is well known for her aggressiveness in the Northwest film business. She was formerly connected and Seattle manageress for the Billy West features and the Bee Hive exchange. "The Finger of Justice" has taken well wherever shown and it is certain that with Joe in the pitcher's box there is no doubt but what "The Finger of Justice" will be put over 1,000 per cent style.

H. ABRAMS, of the New York office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, recently paid a visit to Seattle, where he consulted with Manager Rosebaum of Lasky Corporation in Northwest. From Seattle he went to San Francisco.

THE COLISEUM and the Mission each opened on the first Sunday after the ban was lifted with new Wurlitzer's. The Coliseum now claims the largest organ in the world. It is a Wurlitzer of the Hope-Jones type and cost $50,000. The organist will be Arthur Hay Malotte. For the opening Oliver G. Wallace gave a special half hour concert which consisted of melodies of popular songs, a sextet from "Lucia," a serenade by Drdla and the National Emblem March by Bagley. The Mission's organ cost $20,000.

THE NORTHWEST FILM BOARD at its last meeting decided to issue letters to all exhibitors, notifying them that after December 1 no C. O. D. shipments will be made. Instead films must be paid for in advance.

A RECENT visitor to Film Row included H. Neuman of the Arcade, Hog, Wash., who after a trip East, has become an enthusiastic film man. After this he will show high class films, which he believes will pay him better than vaudeville, which he has been playing in his house. Messrs. McNish, of Tacoma, and Guy Halperg, of the "Lincoln," Pt. Angeles, Wash., also paid visits to the exchanges.

FRANK MONTGOMERY, efficiency expert for the L. J. Schlaifer Company, is now on the road and is sure to bring in big orders, placing "Mona Darkfeather."

Correspondent Says Fans Tire of War Pictures

IN a letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, a correspondent of Seattle, Wash., says:

"Seattle fans are getting tired of seeing so many war pictures and there is no doubt but what the feeling is the same all over the country. While it is true the houses are crowded, the reason for that is, that the city of Seattle is also crowded and growing faster each day. Then, again, the people go expecting to see something a little different. But they don't. Now when the war is over and won they do not want to be 'entertained' for one hour and a half or longer with killing 'stunts.' That is no amusement. Maybe a two-minute reel, at the most would go. Once in a while a picture is advertised, and under it is the following sentence: 'No war picture.' When the boys come home, they'll be so tired of these reels, they are liable to cut them all out and go to some vaudeville house for a good time."

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

A. P. PATTEN, manager for the Mutual Film Corporation's Los Angeles exchange, is on the sick list. Mr. Patten had an attack of the "flu," but is now improving. A. B. Lamb, manager of the Los Angeles Metro exchange, has also been confined to his home with a cold, but is now much improved.

DAVID BERSHON, manager for the Los Angeles Universal exchange, started his men on the road to cover the Southern California and Arizona territory during the week.

THE BROADWAY theatre of San Diego has booked from David Bershon, of Universal, the special production, "The Model's Confession," featuring Mary MacLaren.

PRIVATE showings will shortly be arranged by Manager H. M. Lentz, of the United Picture theatres, for "Light of West Stars'" in which picture Dustin Farnum is the star.

CLAUDE LANGLEY, proprietor of the Hippodrome of Taft, Cal., spent Saturday, November 16, in Los Angeles, arranging bookings for the reopening of the theatre which took place on Sunday, November 17.

FRIENDS of T. E. Hancock were much concerned when he appeared at his office at the World Film exchange late in the week with his hand bandaged. Mr. Hancock had just returned from a shooting trip at Palm Springs and it was at first thought that he had blown off several of his fingers. Mr. Hancock quickly quieted all fear, however, when he explained that he had punctured his hand while eating some of the quail he had shot on the trip. The expedition was very successful it is reported and many birds were secured although the party ran into a big sand storm several miles from Banning, Cal., which made existence rather uncomfortable for about an hour.

P. J. SOURES, proprietor of the Lyric theatre of Miami, Arizona, is visiting Los Angeles and completing his bookings for the fall season.

THE Metro Film exchange salesmen left Los Angeles for the South and Arizona on Monday, November 18.

T. E. HANCOCK, manager for the World Film Los Angeles exchange, ordered his salesmen to visit the Southern California cities and Arizona theatres beginning Wednesday, November 20.

J. E. RICKARDS, of Rickards and Nace, Phoenix, Ariz., has been visiting his friends of Los Angeles "film row" for several days. Mr. Rickards has been booking pictures for the Hippodrome of Phoenix, which will open in a few days after a five weeks' close down on account of the "flu" epidemic. Arrangements are being completed by Rickards and Nace for the opening of the new Strand theatre of Phoenix. The opening date has been set for December 15. The new house will seat 1,000 persons. It will be very ornamental and will be equipped with a large organ.

A. B. LAMB, manager for the Metro Los Angeles exchange, has booked the first Harold Lockwood, screen classic production at Clunes Broadway. The picture will be given its first public exhibition in Los Angeles the second or third week after the Broadway reopens.

RAY BRANDON, of the American theatre, Phoenix, visited Los Angeles en route home from Salt Lake. While in Los Angeles he arranged a number of bookings for the reopening of his theatre which occurred on Wednesday, November 20. Mr. Brandon was manager of Riverside Park, Phoenix, during the past summer.

G. DOUTHWAITE, proprietor of a chain of theatres in Oxnard, Cal., spent several days in Los Angeles, picking his features for November and December showing. The Lyric theatre reopened on Monday, November 18, with Tom Moore in "Just for Tonight," a Goldwyn production, while the Oxnard Opera House reopened Sunday, November 17, with the Fox production, "Riders of the Purple Sage," starring William Farnum. The Victory reopened with a World feature.

ANNOUNCEMENT has just been made by H. M. Lentz, manager for the Los Angeles exchange of the United Pictures Theatres, that negotiations have been closed by which United Pictures will be presented first at Miller's Californian, the handsome new theatre to be opened in Los Angeles about the middle of December.

PRIVATE showings will shortly be arranged by B. E. Loper, manager for Los Angeles Select Pictures exchange, for Edith Cavell, "The Woman the Germans Shot." The production is a new five-reel picture and the film is expected to arrive in Los Angeles within a few days.

W. H. HEPBURN, manager for the Vitagraph Los Angeles exchange, reports that Guy Empey's "Over the Top" has been booked by Jack McDonald of the Lajolla theatre of San Diego.

THE HODKINSON SERVICE began releasing its picture through the Los Angeles Pathe exchange on Sunday, November 24. G. R. Sirwell, formerly manager of the Hodkinson exchange, moved to the Pathe office and assumed his new duties as special representative for the Hodkinson Service.

R. O. PROCTOR, the new West Coast Division Manager for Pathe, spent several days in Los Angeles the latter part of November. He is now in San Francisco. Mr. Proctor was transferred from the Chicago office, where he was formerly division manager, for the middle west.

MANAGER E. D. TATE, of Pathe, is preparing for preliminary exhibitions to exhibitors of Pearl White's newest serial, "The Lightning Raider." The first episodes are expected to arrive in Los Angeles in a few days. The new Gaby Deslys production, "Infatuation," will have its first public presentation in Los Angeles early in December.

A. T. CUNNARD, a Taft, Cal., exhibitor, spent several days in Los Angeles during the latter part of November.

E. D. TATE, manager for the Los Angeles Pathe exchange, has just announced that the new Pathe Weekly No. 92 will be known as Pathe Victory News.

Reopening with Butte Theatres

THE BLUEBIRD at Anaconda reopened with Charles Ray in "The Claws of the Hun."

THE MYRTLE at Lewistown had a stem-winder for the reopening day which came just after the abdication of the kaiser and the surrender of Germany. Manager Ritch offered his patrons the feature, "To Hell With the Kaiser." With those words on the lips of everyone the selection could not have been more timely.

ANOTHER feature relating to the war was used as the opening headliner by a Montana house. Manager Hyneke of the Judith at Lewistown had "The Hun Within."

"THE GEEZER OF BERLIN" was a part of the feature bill used the past week at the American here. Advertising Manager Raleigh threw some "pep" into the publicity and business was good.

FILM MEN are beginning to visit this territory after a five weeks' lay-off. Mel Wilson, of the Famous Players-Lasky, is again on the job, calling on exhibitors along the Northern Pacific.

"THE IRON TEST" is being shown by Manager Merle Davis along with Pantages vaudeville. This is an innovation at this house but it is expected to prove popular with the patrons.

ARCHIE MALOTTE, formerly with Fox, is now with the First National Exhibitors league exchange, out of Seattle. He is in Montana "making" the territory assigned him.

MANAGER RUFFNER, of the Rialto, reports business normal since the "flu" shutdown has been cancelled. Lila Lee in "The Cruise of the Make Believes" proved a refreshing attraction and it made a big hit. The new star won "a home" with Butte movie fans.

H. BRADLEY FISH, branch manager for Goldwyn at Denver, was a visitor in Butte the past few days.

HALF OPEN is the way E. Marshall Taylor, of the Ansonia, characterizes the present theatrical situation in Butte. This is due to the ruling of the board of health that none under 16 years of ago shall be permitted to enter a theatre. A number of patrons come to the window, with some in the party under that age. They all decided not to enter when informed of the ruling. "Well, is influenza so bad here," is a typical query. Even though the manager replies, "We do not think conditions are so very bad but that is the order that we are demanded to observe" the fear of the prospective customer is not allayed and so not only the children, but the older ones, decide not to enter the house. For this reason business is below what it otherwise would be.

Around the Golden Gate

SOL LESSER is contemplating a trip East in about a week's time. At present he does not know how long he will be away from his San Francisco office. His office reports that the demands for "The Hearts of the World" are very satisfactory and that "America's Answer" is having a good play, notwithstanding the cessation of hostilities across the waters. "Under Four Flags" has not yet been released, but the opinion is expressed that the ending of the war will not seriously affect its bookings.

WALTER S. RAND, Division Manager of the General Film Co. (Inc.), was in Denver recently when he was recalled to Chicago for a conference with the sales managers for the General and the George Kleine System. After this consultation Mr. Rand left for San Francisco at once where he has been busy formulating an extensive sales campaign. The General Film offices are very busy these days and have taken on the appearance of old times. Besides the Kleine System the Parex Films are located at the General Film, and Charles I. Luntz, who was formerly manager of the Sherry Service, has been engaged as salesman in the General's local office. Both M. J. Cohen and H. F. Moore will continue to handle the Kleine attractions from the office of the General, and Mr. Cohen is getting ready to take a swing around the territory controlled by the company.

THE old Kleine office at 183 Golden Gate avenue has been taken over by the Film Clearing House, Inc. J. H. Chadkin is here from Chicago completing arrangements for the opening about December 1. He has just come in from Los Angeles and leaves for Seattle in a day or two, and will take over the fixtures, etc., of the Kleine in that city.

THE COLESEUM theatre, a new theatre in the Richmond district, opened its doors on the 22nd inst. under the guidance of Sam H. Levin. The entire receipts for the opening night will be donated to the Red Cross. The new theatre will be opened under the auspices of the Park-Presidio Improvement club, the Clement street Merchants' Association, and the United Motion Pictures Industries of Northern California. Appropriate exercises have been arranged and among the speakers will be Mayor James Rolph. The whole affair is under the direction of Major M. J. Cohen.

THE T. & D. theatre in Oakland opened on the 16th to big business. "Rosemary" was selected as the principal picture for opening week.

WORD has been received here of the death of J. Dowling of the Newark theatre, Newark, Cal., who has been suffering from an attack of influenza. He was well known among the film exchanges and ran a little circuit of theatres in the small towns in the neighborhood of Newark.

A. RICHARD, of the Lodi and Turlock theatres, and Mrs. Pettingill, of Eureka, were visitors to Film Row during the past week.

All the News of Portland

AFTER a closed period of several weeks, due to the Spanish influenza quarantine, the picture shows and theatres opened Saturday, November 16. The big feature of the week is "Crashing Through to Berlin," or "Why the Allies Won," which is being shown at the Star theatre under the auspices of the National League for Woman's Service. Special features have been announced for each night, which will be participated in by the best of Portland's talent. Monday night will be known as society night, when dozens of Portland folk are planning to entertain with line parties. In addition to "Crashing Through to Berlin," the Marie Dressler film, taken at the Grant Smith Porter ship yards, during a booster meeting when the employes subscribed more than $180,000, will be shown.

INTERMOUNTAIN and Northwestern territory have received visits from a number of important officials from the New York office of the Universal Film Company during the past few weeks. The visitors hit the Intermountain territory just ahead of the "flu" wave, and were in the Northwestern territory while the ban was on tight. Joe Brandt, general manager and assistant treasurer of the Universal, reached Portland the day that the ban was put on. He visited the other Northwestern offices and discussed the needs of the territories before starting for home. Manager Sol Baum, manager of the Northwestern exchanges, accompanied him around the Northwestern circle.

FOLLOWING Mr. Brandt in a few days was D. B. Lederman, who installed a new system of handling contracts and other accounting details, which will immensely facilitate the service of the territory. G. B. Howe, traveling auditor, was in Portland at the same time, coming here directly from the Intermountain district.

A. TUCHMAN, of the Supply Department in New York, visited the Portland office last week. While in Portland he called attention to the features which have been installed, which will provide exhibitors with the best of publicity matter which is obtainable at the present time.

HENRY CLAY BELL has been engaged by Manager Marquard, of the Globe theatre, as organist. Mr. Bell is probably the youngest movie organist on the Coast, being only 16 years of age. Special musical numbers will be a feature of each show. The management of the theater announces that any numbers which are requested by the patrons of the show will be played by Mr. Bell.

WHITESIDE BROTHERS, who control the theatrical situation at Corvallis, Oregon, drove to Portland recently, especially to book for the reopening of their houses last week. The Majestic and Crystal are their theatres. They plan to open as big as possible, so booked "Crashing Through to Berlin," for the Majestic, and "That Devil Bateese," for the Crystal.

THEATRE men in Portland generally took advantage of the closing order to go over their theatres and put everything in readiness to open as big as possible. The Majestic, Strand and others had a thorough renovation. Fred Longerman had a new floor installed in the New Grand. M. B. Donovan put in a new floor, new screen, and all new interior decoration.

INCIDENTALLY most of the theatres are using Universal specials, Jewels or Bluebirds to open with.

WALLACE POTTER, manager of the Spokane Universal Exchange, came to Portland recently to line up things for a big drive in his territory on the opening of the "flu" ban.

HAMILTON ABRAMS, of New York, vice-president of the Famous Players and the Paramount Film Company, was in Portland for a few days on a business trip.

In San Francisco Film Circles

ALL the big houses on Market street, San Francisco, have increased the prices of admission from a basis of 25 to 50 cents to a 35 to 75 cents basis. All the nickel houses have gone on a 10 cent basis. In the Fillmore district the big houses have gone to 20 cents and the small to 10 cents. It is too early as yet to note what effect these increased prices are going to have, but so far the theatre men say that they have had no complaint.

DURING the period that the houses were closed the Lincoln theatre in the Richmond district has been entirely remodeled and renovated. A. Winterhold, who is one of the pioneers in the business in this section, has been made manager. Mr. Winterhold has not been in the business for several years, but the owners of the theatre feel that they have a jewel when they persuaded him to take charge of the house.

THAT the celluloid drama men are now turning their attention to San Francisco and environs is evidenced by the arrival in this city of a quartette of picture producers, who are planning to establish headquarters here for independent pictures. Harry Garson, one of the foremost of the independent producers, spent a few days in the city. Al Cohn, Harry A. Sherman, Miss Pickford's personal representative; Marshall Neilan and Allen Dwan remain in San Francisco to work out details of the new production.

HIRAM ABRAMS, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., and Herman Wobber, district manager for the corporation, were driven down to Los Angeles by M. H. Lewis, manager of the San Francisco branch, in Mr. Lewis' car last week.

THE VITAGRAPH announces that it expects that J. Stuart Blackton's latest production, "The Common Cause" will be released in the near future.

D. WILDER, assistant manager of the Vitagraph, is reported ill with the influenza.

HARRY LEE KNAPPEN, manager of Select Picture Corporation in this territory, has a broad grin on his face over the running start with which the corporation got off in this territory after the long shut down. In practically the entire territory which was opened up the Select opened with first run pictures. In San Francisco "At the Mercy of Men," featuring Alice Brady, was produced at the Portola. Norma Talmadge in the "Forbidden City," will soon be given its premier in San Francisco and Knappen is looking for an early showing of "A Pair of Silk Stockings" at the Portola, featuring Constance Talmadge. A private preview of "The Midnight Patrol," featuring San Francisco's Chinatown, was recently given to a number of the San Francisco police force. The picture is to have an early showing.

THE FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION will have four pictures in four of the principal houses on Market street next week. Dorothy Dalton, appearing in "Green Eyes," will be presented at the Portola; "Private Peat" at the California; W. S. Hart in "The Border Wireless" at the Strand, and Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane" at the Imperial.

R. O. PROCTOR, western district manager of Pathe, is in San Francisco on a visit, the first he has made since he has been transferred to the charge of this territory.

J. VANSANT has purchased the Rialto theatre at Eureka, Cal. This is a new house opened in that city a few months ago by the owners of the Rialto theatre of San Francisco.

E. A. BENJAMIN, a theatrical man of long experience and recently connected with the McDonough theatre in Oakland, has been appointed manager of Sol Lesser's interests in this city. Harry Carney, who formerly occupied that post, has gone on the road for the same company.

What Exchanges and Theatres are Doing

C. H. COYLE, of the William Fox Los Angeles sales force, left November 15 for Arizona.

IT IS probable that arrangements will be made by Guy Gunderson, manager for George Kleine Los Angeles exchange, for a percentage of the proceeds of the first showing of "Behind the Line," the big Italian war film, to go to the Los Angeles Red Cross. Preliminary exhibitions of the picture are now being made.

THE TITLE of the William Fox production originally known as "Why America Will Win," has been changed to "The Land of Promise." The picture which is a screen history of the life of General Pershing will be shown at the Kinema, Los Angeles, early in December.

THE booking rights for "Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit and her son Russell Thaw, have been secured by H. W. Stubbins, manager for M. & R. Features, for Southern California and Arizona. The same concern controls the rights for Dewart Hall Caine in the picturized version of his father's novel, "The Deemster."

BEN FISH, manager for the Los Angeles Goldwyn exchange, is preparing for preliminary exhibitions of two new pictures, Mabel Normand in "A Perfect Thirty-Six," and Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat."

THE BROADWAY THEATRE COMPANY of Los Angeles, who have the Superba theatre, has leased the Laughlin theatre at Long Beach and will take possession November 23. Matthew Bridge will be managing director, and the opening bill has "Laughing Bill Hyde," Rex Beach subject, as the feature. The company will show Jewel, Goldwyn, Universal and Bluebird subjects. Many improvements are planned for the theatre including installation of a big orchestra.

THE THEATRE EQUIPMENT ESTABLISHMENT, organized by Michael and Henry Calmy in Los Angeles several months ago, has found the need of larger quarters and so have moved to 752 South Olive street where they have a big stock on display. Michael Calmy was formerly manager of the Golden Gate exchange at San Francisco, and following that served as manager of the Universal at Phoenix. His brother, Henry Calmy, is a former exhibitor. The window at their new location bears a big sign "Movie Emporium."

C. F. CHARLES, manager of the American Photoplayer Los Angeles office, has placed an order for a style 45 Photoplayer to be installed in the Opera House at El Centro, California, the order being placed by Manager James Cook. Mr. Charles is now making a trip over Arizona and New Mexico.

C. J. MARLEY, manager for the Los Angeles Triangle exchange, has arranged for the initial presentation of the first run Triangle features at the Victory theatre to take place the second week after the reopening of the theatre.

GUY GUNDERSON, manager for George Kleine Los Angeles exchange, opened his new offices in the General Film exchange, 738 Oliver street, Monday, November 18.

MR. AND MRS. JACK McVEY of San Diego, Cal., managers of the Grand and Casino, arrived in Los Angeles the latter part of November where they spent several days filling their booking sheets.

Who Are The Joneses?

THE Joneses are the folks who are the backbone of the universe. Without the Joneses there would be no business, no pleasure, no anything.

The Joneses are neither rich nor poor, neither famous nor unknown. They're the great happy "middle class" that win wars, build cities and pay cash.

The Joneses read the magazines and newspapers. They own Victrolas, they use Community Silverware. Mr. Jones wears Arrow Collars and shaves with a Gillette razor. Mrs. Jones buys Ivory Soap, Heinz's pickles and Campbell's soups. The Jones children eat Cream of Wheat and cry for Castoria.

Why do they use these goods? Because they are Nationally Advertised. Because the Joneses have confidence in advertised goods and buy from the dealers that carry these goods.

The dealer who sells Nationally Advertised products, and who tells his patrons that he has these best known brands is the most successful. You know that.

Ninety percent of the patrons of motion picture theatres are Joneses, the folks whose lives are influenced by National Advertising.

They know all about Paramount and Artcraft Pictures, for they read National Advertising. They want Paramount and Artcraft Pictures just as they want Campbell's soups and Cream of Wheat.

The grocer advertises "I sell Heinz's Pickles," because he knows it helps his business. It brings more Joneses to his store.

If you advertise, "I show Paramount and Artcraft Pictures," you bring more Joneses to your theatre.

Made In America

THEY ARE COMING BACK FROM BATTLEFIELD AND CAMP

MILLIONS of young American soldiers, trained to the minute—those splendid armies whose skill and valor shattered Germany's dream of World Domination—they represent the triumph of our modern military system and our national efficiency.

"MADE IN AMERICA" in a series of eight epoch-making episodes presents with wonderful realism an authoritative story in pictures, of the Selective Draft, the training of the American soldier here and in France, and the making of America's Victorious Armies.

Upon the background of this great panorama replete with scenes of deepest interest to every patriotic American, a story has been drawn which will appeal strongly to the hearts of the American people. It is a story of devotion to country, mother's love and sacrifice, regeneration and the valor of the American soldier on the battlefields of France.

Exhibitors: "MADE IN AMERICA" is sure to be a strong and continuous attraction. Everyone who sees it will "carry on" and follow through the experiences of the typical young Americans to the grand finale—PEACE WITH VICTORY.

Produced by a master of screencraft, marketed by a distributing organization whose name is a synonym for fairness, presenting fourteen noted players—five of them world-renowned luminaries of the stage—and adapted by a master of drama whose creations hold front rank on both stage and screen—a production worthy indeed of the best exploitation a showman can give. GLADYS LESLIE in "THE BELOVED IMPOSTOR"

SECOND RELEASE OF THE GLADYS LESLIE STAR SERIES

Written by Mrs. Elizabeth J. Mariani Directed by Joseph Gleason

A LOVABLE mite of a teasing, heart-grabbing debutante is the role of Gladys Leslie in this tender comedy drama.

Betty made a wager that she could win Dick Mentor—a woman-hater—his hate springing from the heart-ache that another woman had caused him in the past that he was trying to forget.

And to batter her way into a heart armored against the wiles of women—how to do it! Betty knew. She assumed the part of a twelve-year-old child, and Dick turned to her as the first feminine influence that he had allowed to enter his life since the great event that had embittered him.

But Betty's plan worked too well; for when she had won his love as a child, she knew that she had lost her own woman's heart to him. It is the way in which she works herself out of this serio-comic situation that makes this unusual role the best in which this widely popular star has ever appeared.

Shows New York Visitors Never Miss

From now until after New Year's Day New York's Great White Way will be black with visitors.

Their missions in the metropolis will be many and diverse, but these visitors will have one objective in common.

It doesn't make any difference from what station in life they come — it matters not whether they are too devout at home to countenance amusements —no, and not even is the length of their purse a consideration—every one of them—doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief, rich man, poor man, beggar, thief —each and all, from top to bottom, will see the big extravaganzas—and pay a premium for the privilege.

Why?

Because that's the one sort of entertainment they are sure they will like——

because it's a distinctively New York entertainment—— or was, until William Fox conceived the Idea of making extravaganza the universal show—— of transporting it throughout the country and giving to exhibitors of America the privilege of offering their patrons an exclusively New York attraction without the trouble or cost of a long railroad journey.

FAN FAN

A tale of old Japan—thousands of persons, lavishly costumed, in thrilling scenes of Oriental splendor—gay revels, swift action, glorious romance—all the color and charm of the East blended with a beautiful story that fills the heart with the spirit of Christmas — clean, wholesome, joyous — a happy picture for a happy time.

ALI BABA AND THE FORTY THIEVES

The greatest story of the wonderful Arabian Nights translated to the screen with all its entrancing beauty—the magnificence of ancient Persia impressively presented—the famous slave market of Teheran—gorgeous palaces, rich bazaars, quaint caravans—robber chieftains in strange rites and stirring deeds—harems, dancing girls and rippling comedy—a picture to please the holiday crowds and pull the profits.

And the extravaganza of motion pictures, as it has been developed through the Fox Idea, is more colorful, more bewitching, more gorgeous, more fanciful and dazzling than any mere stage production, with its apparent artificiality of painted canvas, ever possibly could be.

It is the newest and most startling triumph of the camera—a triumph appropriately developed just preceding the year-end period when people's thoughts everywhere are turning naturally to amusements.

The William Fox extravaganzas are pictures made for December crowds — productions to draw business into your theatre now.

Why Fox Exhibitors Succeed

Fox exhibitors have a material advantage over their competitors

——they are sure of uniformly good pictures

——they are saved the embarrassment of apologizing for production shortcomings.

Fox pictures are made to a standard; then tested to see if they fit. Nothing is left to chance.

It is the Fox Idea that yesterday's experience should be made the basis of better pictures today ——that it is cheaper to stand the loss of discarding productions than to market them at the cost of good-will.

This is the policy that has made VICTORY PICTURES and EXCEL PICTURES the sensation of the 1918 season.

Every production offered in either of these two series has been a little better than its predecessor, and every one that will be offered hereafter will be better than any that have gone before.

You may have thought, when you saw the first VICTORY PICTURE:

"Oh, well, Fox has to make the first ones right." And you may have argued with yourself that quality of this sort could not long be maintained.

But now you know better——

VICTORY PICTURES are the talk of the trade——

the biggest series of profit-winners, without exception, that ever have been offered the American exhibitor.

They owe their success to the Fox Idea ——to the Idea that it is story, plus direction, plus star that makes a picture, and that a standard of excellence, once attained, merely represents wasted effort unless it is maintained.

GLADYS BROCKWELL, TOM MIX and GEORGE WALSH in smashing, up-to-the-second dramas, sumptuously staged, masterfully directed, and packed with action, punch and popular appeal

——that's the story of VICTORY PICTURES.

And you'll find a similar appeal—similar quality—in EXCEL PICTURES.

No series of productions has ever attained the volume of bookings in a year that have been scored up for EXCEL PICTURES in the three months they have been on the market.

VIRGINIA PEARSON, PEGGY HYLAND and JANE and KATHERINE LEE have established new records for drawing power, and now these recognized and favorite stars have added to their ranks MADLAINE TRAVERSE, the young woman whose marvelous character interpretation in "The Caillaux Case" brought her into national prominence almost overnight.

VICTORY and EXCEL PICTURES are the biggest "buy" in the market today.

EVERY MOTHER'S SON

Written and staged by Raoul A. Walsh

The picture of Reconstruction! It plunges boldly into the future and explores the new world that will rise from the War. The greatest mother drama ever filmed—Inspiring patriotic scenes that show the final downfall of the Hun—The Peace Conference at Versailles—Heroic deeds, romance and the fervor of youth—Filled to the gunwales with box-office values waiting to be seized.

THE PRUSSIAN CUR

Written and staged by Raoul A. Walsh

Why did the Kaiser fall? What was the sinister system with which he long braved the world and made his power so hated and feared? Capt. Horst von der Goltz, for ten years a secret agent of Emperor Wilhelm II, exposes in this astounding drama the whole dastardly German plot to throttle mankind. Show your patrons this great spectacle—and watch 'em raise the roof! Don't procrastinate.

WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY

Staged by Richard Stanton

The most powerful morality play of the decade—A picture that will set society by the ears and strip from marriage the hypocritical shams that now wreck countless lives. The woman in this story lived. She learned the world and its ways—and men. Here is a revelation that goes straight home to every man and woman in America. Sure to be a popular sensation and a money-making clean-up for any live exhibitor.

THE LAND OF THE FREE

Staged by Richard Stanton

The life story of General Pershing brilliantly picturized. What attraction could possibly draw bigger crowds at this time than the intimate record of the career of America's greatest military hero? This absorbing drama follows him from the little Missouri village where he was born right up to the Hun lines—and through these lines right into Germany!

QUEEN OF THE SEA

With Annette Kellerman

The world's most shapely woman and hundreds of ravishing nymphs in a subsea phantasy that eclipses even "A Daughter of the Gods." A vivid story, a stupendous spectacle, and marvellous scenes of surpassing beauty. A picture that never can fade from memory.

The Best that Brains and Money Can Make

Under this slogan William Fox has built up a brand of pictures that has been shown to more people, and has brought more money to exhibitors, than any other brand in the world.

Standard Pictures, featuring THEDA BARA, EVELYN NESBIT and WILLIAM FARNUM, and including powerful all-star productions, have succeeded because they have worth.

They are built upon the best stories available in this country and abroad.

They are built by directors who stand in the forefront of their profession—such men as J. Gordon Edwards, R. A. Walsh, Frank Lloyd, Richard Stanton and Kenean Buel—masters all.

They are built at an enormous expenditure for casts and settings and atmosphere.

They are interesting, impressive, dramatic, artistic, appealing.

Therefore, being built on honor, Standard Pictures have the confidence of the public.

Book them, advertise them, stage them effectively, and then stop worrying about your box office.

No Star in the Screen world is better known or has a greater following than HENRY B. WALTHALL.

He came to the front in the famous old Biograph days when D.W. Griffith was laying the foundation of the modern photoplay.

No portrayal before nor since has so endeared a player to the American public as Walthall's famous depiction of the little Colonel in that screen classic "The Birth of a Nation."

Walthall's Colonel Cameron still stands as the best loved characterization in the realm of the Silent drama

My dear Mr. Rowland:

I have just finished seeing Nazimova in "EYE FOR EYE" and I want to compliment you upon having one of the best pictures I have seen in a long time. It will lend itself to a wonderful presentation and I am sure will be a great box office attraction also.

Mme. Nazimova is absolutely a revelation and her personal performance has not been surpassed upon the screen. I am looking forward to its presentation at the Rivoli on the week of December 22nd with a great deal of pleasure.

"The Francis"

Read These Success Reviews

From MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"Should Please Mightily."

"This should please mightily in every theatre that makes a practice of running serials—and especially in those localities where Francis Ford has a good following. Every episode is full of fist fights to bring the average fan to his feet many times and the continuity is easy to follow. . . . Francis Ford is not alone in passing out the wallops. . . . It has the sustained mystery so necessary to serials.

From MOVING PICTURE WORLD:

"Packed with Thrills and Creepy Doings."

"The new Francis Ford Serial lives up to its title. . . . 'The Silent Mystery' is packed with melodramatic thrills and creepy doings. . . . Francis Ford directed the story and he also plays the hero detective. . . . Everyone in the cast follows the pace set by the director. . . . The regular following of the serial will get a run for its money."

From EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW:

"Starts with a Francis Ford Wallop."

"Mystery has come to be the keynote of serial pictures, and if 'The Silent Mystery' doesn't make your hair stand on end, and cold shivers take possession of your spinal cord, then probably you have died of fright. Sets are lavish and picturesque. The cast keeps the plot humming. It is impossible not to keep one's eyes glued to the screen. It is doubtful if an audience which is following 'The Silent Mystery' would leave the theatre if it started to burn down around them. Such is the power of 'The Silent Mystery.'"

WID'S DAILY says:

"A Full Limit of Stuff to Advertise."

"Has enough novelty, action, creepiness and kick to register as a very good serial. They certainly hand you a full limit of stuff to advertise. . . . Certainly has wild action that will cause gasps, giggles and gulps."

From THE MORNING TELEGRAPH:

"Cannot Fail to Find Favor."

"There is an atmosphere of mystery and suspense about 'The Silent Mystery' which cannot fail to find favor with the eager and enthusiastic followers of serial productions. . . . This latest Francis Ford effort is replete with excitement and action. It would be unwise to attempt to steal 40 winks during the course of the production because during that few minutes so much would have taken place that it would be difficult to take up the thread of the story again. 'The Silent Mystery' is indeed cramfull of happenings."

From BILLBOARD:

"The First Episode Presages Success."

"Packed with punch, a thrill to every minute, Francis Ford's latest serial, 'The Silent Mystery' has gone its predecessors one better of originality, continuity and gripping interest. . . . The synopsis does not convey an idea of the marvelous stunts indulged in by a company of superlative merit. The very first episode presages success, for it has a tense grip upon the emotions, and is withal logical and convincing."

Hand'ed Through the Open Market

The Same As All Other Unusual Productions

Productions that are too large to be handled on programs or through releasing organizations—especially huge productions like "The Silent Mystery," with its great Box-Office value—are properly sold on the open market—therefore Francis Ford's greatest serial will be handled the same way.

My first announcement of a new and greater Ford Serial brought a flood of inquiries from Program and Releasing organizations. They didn't even wait for the splendid reviews shown on the opposite page.

They Knew the Box-Office Value of a Francis Ford Serial.

Some had novel propositions to offer. There were so many that distribution was held up till they could be analyzed. But, as my associates pointed out, none of them considered the Exhibitor.

After mature deliberation my associates and myself decided that the most advantageous way for all was to handle this notable serial,

In the Open Market

—In this we found the Exhibitors' and States Rights buyers views identical.

I have insisted from the first that since the fans demanded this big picture that ALL EXHIBITORS should have an equal chance to book it. And I knew then and know now that the best way to insure this was to handle it in the big way it deserves—through State Rights Buyers.

Hiller & Wilk, selling agents for the serial, wish to thank the Exhibitors and State Rights men for their kindly interest. As the various territories are sold, announcement of the buyers will be made through the Trade Papers. Watch for them.

Volume 18. No. 24 December 14, 1918

The Point of View

UNHAPPY is the picture man who loses his perspective, and with it his sense of humor; sorrowful is the picture man who is fondly convinced that his point of view is the only correct one.

Such are the thoughts that roam through our typewriter keys as we consider the interesting contents of this week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

That fuss we kicked up by publishing J. A. Quinn's protest about producing conditions and by spurring our readers to comment is to blame. You will remember the interesting contributions to the discussion that have already appeared.

But the letters selected for publication this week are the most striking thus far. Striking—because they disagree. Interesting—because each one of the writers presents a case with a ring of conviction.

Coming back to our opening paragraph: If you fear your perspective is becoming warped, if your sense of humor is hanging in the balance, read every word of this week's collection.

The letters start on page 3496.

All Views Are Represented

THE discussion on the Quinn protest opens this week with a letter from a small-town exhibitor who wonders why the big exhibitors always seem to be so sour on life.

This exhibitor declares that he picks his program with as much care as he would a wife—and still he is willing to admit that he finds plenty of good pictures on the market.

It's unusual to hear an exhibitor speak that way—and when you read his letter you will know that, while a small-town man, he gives every evidence of being a showman from hair to heels.

Then following it are letters that yell as loudly as an exhibitor ever yelled—and back Quinn up to the limit in his protest.

And there is an anonymous letter.

"Anonymous" is the bane of an editor's life. If he agrees with the editor, that person does not like to publish his words because there is no strength to an unsigned boost; if he disagrees, the editor doesn't like to give his letter the waste-basket fate an anonymous communication deserves because he feels like a coward.

But this week's anonymous writer says some pert things so interestingly that we waived all rules and let him break into print.

The burden of his remarks is that the exhibitors who know so much about producing should try that end of the game for a time.

What do you think?

And as We Go to Press

JUST as we write these words there comes a letter to the Exhibitors' Service Bureau from that live showman, Frank L. Newman, of the Royal and Regent, Kansas City.

In the course of his remarks, Mr. Newman says:

"I wish that every trade journal would do what the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is doing now—print articles like Mr. Quinn's and request the exhibitors to express their views so that it will open the eyes of the producers and force them to make the class of pictures that the public wants to see.

"I believe I have never read an article that was so true and that told the producers so many facts as Mr. Quinn's article in the November 16th issue.

"I hope that every producer has read that article. It does seem a shame to have producers make picture after picture just simply to have five or six reels of film.

"When Mr. Quinn said that there were only a hundred pictures out of every thirteen hundred that were good, he was absolutely correct.

"I feel that there is no excuse for making bad pictures now. The producer is getting more money for his pictures and the exhibitors are getting better admission prices. I, for one, would always be willing to pay more for the pictures just to know that I have on a regular picture every week."

Getting Acquainted With the Patron

IT seems to us as though our letter-writing friends have succeeded in making a most interesting number of this week's issue.

For instance, in "The Reader Has His Say" department there is a communication from an exhibitor which contains a live tip for all managers.

When the work of the Four Minute Men ceased this showman started thinking. He kept on when a few spoken comments led him to think that perhaps the Official War Review was not wanted now that the strife is over.

He put the two thoughts together. And he decided that the Four Minute Men had "broken" his audiences to expecting some sort of intimate talk occasionally along with their picture entertainment. And what better sort of talk than a heart-to-heart chat with the manager?

So he took the stage one evening, and after a clever talk put the Official War Review question to his patrons for a vote. And the answer came back overwhelmingly, "Keep on giving it to us!"

Since then he has put other problems up to them for solution. He is taking them into his confidence week by week—he is a Four Minute Man on his own behalf.

Don't you imagine those patrons have an extra touch of chumminess now as they enter this manager's theatre?

Read his letter—it's on page 3503.

George Kleine and His Critics

IF he keeps up his present habits we will be inclined to award George Kleine the palm for letter-writing formerly held by the late Mayor Gaynor of New York.

You will remember that some few weeks ago Mr. Kleine's letter to the War Industries Board got him into a tussle with a trade paper editor that brought forth a most interesting Kleine letter.

Now another editor has taken exception to the pioneer's remarks and the result is an interesting letter:

"GENTLEMEN:

"Again you honor me with unsolicited space upon your editorial page under the title, 'Censorship A la Kleine,' and credit me with certain weird opinions, as, for instance, the necessity of censoring electric light signs on theatre fronts.

"This is 100% untrue.

"When I was called before the Commission that is now asking information from moving picture people and others, I made various statements, all of which are in the official record.

"Nowhere do I find any reference to electric signs.

"You state that I endorse 'censorship of films, of posters, of still pictures.' As this is 33⅓% true, I would have overlooked the little difference of 66 2-3% had it not been for the flare of your electric light discovery.

"To be one-third correct might be considered an accomplishment, but to be one hundred per cent untrue is not good sportsmanship.

"Very truly yours,

"GEO KLEINE."

After the War—What?

THAT question might be trite, but it is giving birth to some very interesting reading matter these weeks.

You will remember the article we had a few weeks ago from Edward L. Hyman, of the Training Camp Commission and formerly well known as an exhibitor? And the words of the Department of Labor?

This week a number of the picture producers have expressed their views in an interesting manner. We have combined them into one story and present them on page 3499.

Bad News From the "Flu" Zone

WE don't like to chronicle bad news, but the facts in the case speak for themselves in the story on the opposite page.

But the more we think it over the less we see reason for alarm in the fact that a few sections of the country have experienced a resurrection of the influenza peril.

Only the most optimistic could have expected that the scourge would run its course and then leave the country entirely, without temporary and isolated flare-backs. Its progress was weird enough, without our expecting it to be methodical.

Dealing in Personalities

"He Has Ways of His Own"

SCORE another one for Frank Carroll! Meaning—"The Cavell Case."

Frank doesn't follow any of the accepted rules for "fillum men." He moves along in his own peculiar way, handling a select list of big stars and directors, and occasionally producing. But only producing when he has a sure-fire, hot-off-the-griddle IDEA.

First, with Ira Lowry—that young-old veteran of film producing—he gave us "For the Freedom of the World." That hit the bull's eye and registered one of the biggest successes of Goldwyn's big first year.

Followed a period of quiet. Then the linking of the names "Joseph L. Plunkitt and Frank J. Carroll." Then the news that "Joseph L. and Frank J." presented "The Woman the Germans Shot"—now called "The Cavell Case."

And once more the timely IDEA won. The proof of the pudding is the tip we got that even before Select had ordered the posters first run rental contracts had been signed assuring over half the purchase price.

What's next, Frank?

A Few Odds and Ends

ED. ROSENBAUM, who broke into film ranks with King Bee and has in recent months been with Fox, left for Los Angeles on Tuesday. When he meets Winnie Sheehan out on the Coast he'll know what it's all about.

BEN HAMPTON, rumors tells us, has a new one up his sleeve. He leaves for the Coast this week, so, with Sherlock Holmes cleverness, we surmise that it might be a new production organization.

WE ARE ALL GLAD to see Oscar Cooper back on the job after a few months' tussle with an Officer's Training School. The blame school didn't let him loose soon enough to get a whack at the Kaiser.

"Wants You To Call Him Bill"

UP at the top of this page we told you of one man who plays the "special production" game with success.

Which reminds us of another "regular fellow" who does the same thing—and with successful regularity. William L. Sherrill is the name.

We prefer to call him "Bill"—and he's the kind that likes you to do it.

We all remember the ten-strike "Bill" made with "The Witching Hour" and "Bill" probably remembers it better than any of us when he looks at the bank balance.

The next time "Bill' called for our admiration he did a two-fold job. First, with a good picture—Arnold Daly in "My Own United States." And second, with some live-wire inside salesmanship on that picture—and if you want to know the answer ask the Metro auditor.

And today "Bill" Sherrill has the distributors smiling to him again—for he has "Once to Every Man," a Larry Evans story, a "Tony" Kelly scenario, a T. Hayes Hunter-Sherrill production.

Keep your eye on it.

Influenza Peril Flares Up in Sections

Two Pennsylvania Counties Close Churches, But Permit Theatres to Open with Restrictions—Flareback of Plague in Some Western Territories

DISQUIETING signs of a flareback on the part of the influenza scourge caused uneasy interest this week among picture executives in New York. A summary of the reports at the close of the week indicated, however, that the boomerang had struck in widely separated sections, and that there was little fear of the epidemic even taking state-wide proportions again.

Two counties of Pennsylvania, many Ohio towns, some sections of Indiana and Iowa, and Butte, Montana, are the territories from which definite reports came during the week that the "flu" had returned and theatres closed again.

Penn Churches Closed

HARRISBURG, Pa. (Special).—The influenza flareback has resulted in the health authorities of Erie and Johnstown re-establishing the ban on public gatherings, although in the latter city motion picture theatres have been permitted to remain open provided their attendance is kept down to 75 per cent of capacity. On several days last week, nevertheless, the theatres were overcrowded, but the authorities took no action. This riled the church folk, because the churches and Sunday schools were ordered closed, and the ministers met on Friday and filed a protest.

Following the placing of the ban on Erie, which covered theatres and saloons as well as churches and other places of public gatherings, Richard P. Dailey, saloonkeeper, went into court and applied for an injunction against the enforcement of the order. C. H. English, attorney for the business men interested, announced he had instructed his clients to disregard the closing order. Subsequently Judge Rossiter and Whittelsey issued the preliminary injunction asked for by Dailey, restraining the local health authorities.

In both Johstown and Erie the closing orders, in this instance, were issued by the city health boards, and not by the State Board of Health, Dr. B. Franklin Royer, State Health Commissioner, having declared, since the statewide ban was removed several weeks ago, that the restoration of the ban in communities where the flareback occurred rested entirely with the local officials.

Cleveland Managers Worrying

CLEVELAND (Special).—Contrary to general expectations the influenza epidemic has not abated with the coming of the cold weather. Last week twenty-one towns in Ohio sent in a report to the various exchanges in Cleveland that the epidemic had taken another spurt, and the motion picture theatres were again closed down for another two weeks period. The towns affected by this order are at the present writing Bellaire, Crestline, Cambridge, Cochocton, Cadiz, Canal Dover, Bratner, Canton Alliance, Garretsville, Massilon, Minerva, Marysville, St. Mary's, Willard, Martin's Ferry, Prairie Depot, New Philadelphia, Oberlin, Tiltonville and Chagrin Falls.

In almost all of these cities the theatres have been operating again for the past two weeks. In Canton the theatres have not yet opened at all. They have been closed for the past six weeks in Canton, with indications of remaining so for the next two weeks. An exhibitor from Canton was in Cleveland one day last week, and said the influenza had not yet abated in the least.

Cochocton is not only closed—it is quarantined altogether. Travellers are met at the station by members of the police, who announce that they have the privilege of boarding the next train out of the city, or of remaining in the town indefinitely.

No trouble of like nature has been met with in Cleveland since the opening of the theatres here two weeks ago. In fact, all of the restrictions have been gradually lifted, until now everything is being conducted as formerly, with the additional benefit that the lighting restrictions have been either raised or sufficiently modified to overcome the difficulties of operating a theatre without advertising advantages derived from bright illumination in front of the house.

Comes Back in the West

BUTTE, Mont. (Special).—Butte theatres are dark again for an indefinite period and all non-essential business places have been closed. The action was taken by the County Board of Health.

Previously a partial closing order that was not fair to the theatres was adopted. But the general closing order came on Nov. 30 following the appearance of a delegation of three hundred persons connected with motion picture work at the office of the health board.

An average of fifty new cases of influenza and ten deaths daily have been reported during the past week.

SAN DIEGO, Cal. (Special).—Claiming that the influenza situation is again serious the local Board of Health sought to have the Common Council adopt an emergency ordinance placing quarantine upon churches, schools, theatres, saloons, pool halls, rest rooms and other places of gathering, but the request was denied.

Every theatre and motion picture house manager was present at the meeting. They urged enforcement of a strict quarantine upon every individual case of influenza to include the members of family, servants, and others.

All houses are still open as usual. Requests are in the evening papers that people with coughs or colds remain away from amusement places.

OPEN AGAIN!

Los Angeles Theatres Draw Big Crowds Once More

LIKE the Christmas Jack-in-the Box, Los Angeles motion picture theatres have popped open again, after being opened and closed once before.

In all, the picture palaces of that town were closed seven weeks and a half.

Following the latest lifting of the influenza ban, the theatres have been drawing remarkably large crowds, and exhibitors are rejoicing.

All seem to believe prosperity is on the way, and coming fast.

United States Frowns on Proposed Comedy

Hint of the probable action of Government officials with respect to propaganda pictures which have been made, is given this week in a letter by Frank R. Wilson, director of publicity of the Treasury Department to Julian Eltinge. Mr. Eltinge had written the department offering a suggestion for a film to boost the Fifth Liberty Loan sales. Mr. Wilson's letter follows:

My dear Mr. Eltinge:

I have your letter of November 8, asking my judgment concerning a proposed comedy drama entitled "Blewey Fluey," having to do with distribution of influenza germs by German agents. I am disposed to think that this story has been outlawed by the war developments.

Our immediate task in government finance is to raise money to bring the boys home, and to re-establish peace. We must finance peace, as well as war.

I offer the suggestion that it would be timely to capitalize in a picture for the Fifth Liberty Loan, the patriotism that will be generated by the return of our victorious soldiers. It would contribute to patriotism and support of the government too if the wonderful achievements of the United States in quickly bringing order to a disturbed world could be emphasized.

You know the way to appeal to human emotions so much better than I, that I feel presumptious even in making these suggestions to you.

Sincerely yours,
FRANK R. WILSON,
Director of Publicity.

Admits Children Free

A. J. Ellsworth of the Orpheum theatre, South Side, Omaha, opened Ruth Roland in "Hands Up" at his place several weeks ago with the idea of admitting every child for war tax only.

And the kids flocked there and brought their parents. The Orpheum will start Leah Baird's "Wolves of Kultur" on Saturday with the same stunt.

Bing! Bang! Biff! Zowie!

¶ Our First Is From An Exhibitor Who Says There Are Plenty of Good Pictures.

NEW EMPIRE THEATRE

TIMMINS, ONT., November 30, 1918.

The Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

DEAR SIR:

IT seems strange to me that all the controversies ever carried on in the trade papers should be signed by the big boys, of whom the great majority of the lesser lights stand in awe.

We open our paper on its arrival and find an article signed, Whoozis, Manager Director of the great Turnemaway theatre, and the little fellow says to himself he must be right—I'll put his argument into working order, only to find that either circumstances alter cases or that the thing never looks the same the second time it is worked.

It was with a great deal of pleasure I read the article by Mr. Goldfish in your issue of November 30th, wherein he asks the question: I wonder how many exhibitors there are in the United States who really know what kind of stories, themes and productions their audiences really like and desire to see on the screen. I wonder if Mr. Goldfish asks this question of the exhibitors as a body or to the representatives of first-run picture palaces of the country.

For the big fellow I should answer NO! But—if he is an intelligent person he can offset the fact that he has no means of studying his audience with the great advantage he has over the little fellow that he has an eye in his head to tell him which is good and which is bad. Namely, he can review every photoplay shown in his house.

For the little fellow I shall at least answer for one—myself—YES! While he has no four-foot electrics to flash out the fact that he is showing "Sheeza Bear" for the first time in the city, he can at least spend his time to the better advantage of studying his audience inside his theatre and buying his program accordingly.

I believe that there are enough good films made—get me, I say GOOD—to supply all the first-run theatres in any city, providing there are enough prints made. If my contention is right, and according to the pictures I can buy it is, I feel sorry for the big boy who can't pick the good ones.

Having the firm conviction of the first-runners in the matter of finding fault with the present output of film, and the most of them seem to know a remedy, I would get out of the exhibitor end of the game and start producing. However, as I understand from themselves that good pictures are hard to find, I would suggest that good scenarios might be harder. This would tend to make it tough on the rest of the kickers.

I am a small town manager, you will readily understand—the city boy may have a laugh at my expense—but I at least know my own needs and the needs and wants of my patrons.

Ours is a mining camp. Our audience, from all parts of the world. Rich, poor, educated, and those of them who are ignorant. I am glad to say that I have been successful, which I derive from the following facts:

I have studied my audience.
I have made percentages of the different nationalities.
I know on which nights certain of these come.
I provide pictures for them accordingly.

Our patrons did not need a brick house to fall on them before they understood my methods of running this theatre, and today I believe they enjoy knowing that at least I am in there trying to please them, and they back me up in the box-office.

Now, Mr. Big Boy, I'm not after your job—probably I couldn't hold it—but every time I read of some of you kicking against the present output of features it reminds me of the story about a certain manager of a theatre in a great location, who on being approached by a film salesman says: Why should I buy your pictures —my help like them—they tell me they are all right—which tends to prove that a great many don't take too much trouble to get the right grade of film or they are not interested enough in their own business to get out and dig it up.

Very sincerely yours,

C. J. APPEL,
Manager New Empire Theatre.

SISK & JAMES, OWNERS AND MANAGERS
B. F. PARKER, ASSISTANT MANAGER

CHEROKEE, IOWA, November 21, 1918.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, INC.,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:

MY pardner and myself have been going to write something to the NEWS for a long, long time, but we have been so very busy that we have neglected to do so. However, things will be differently with us in a short time, and we have several articles written, in unfinished form, that will make somebody's hair curl—if the NEWS will print them, as they say they will in the issue of November 16th in "We Dare You To———."

We have been watching the different trade papers for some time, more closely than before, and we said to ourselves just a few weeks before the article appeared in the NEWS that there was a Motion Picture Revolution in the air. We could seem to FEEL IT. It is coming as sure as anything can be sure.

There are many reasons for it. Each branch of the industry has got a bone to pick with some other branch, and the only thing that is holding it back is the fact that there have been so many beat-around-the-bush letters and articles. We believe that when a man has got something to say about ANYTHING or ANYBODY that he should SAY IT in no UNCERTAIN terms, so that the fellow who is being criticized can either remedy his ways or deny the truth of any statements made. Unless you make the "other fellow" understand that it is HIM that you are talking to there is no use in talking at all.

Under such a policy we were intending to write an article to the NEWS when you came out with your dare in the issue of November 16th, but we are going to wait a little while now and see what some of the bigger fellows have to say—it's all very interesting. We are very small exhibitors, anyhow, and probably our opinions would not get a place where they would be read, anyhow—and if they did not it would not pay us to voice them.

But, just the same, no matter what this "big gun" or that "little gun" may say or do, there is going to come a "poppin' off" time in this industry, because there are too many fellows that are bleeding the "other fellow," and just as soon as the "other fellow" really wakes up to the fact that he IS being bled, and finds out

War On Over Quinn Letter

¶ Fun Poked at Exhibitors Who Should Try Producing, By an Anonymous Writer — Opinions as Varied as Weather.

who is DOING it—well, there is going to be HISTORY MADE FAST in the picture game.

There is hardly anyone in the business that's really IN it that won't tell you there are a lot of things that need fixing which are being "passed off" as GREAT BUSINESS JUDGMENT.

After Mr. Quinn has had his say, and Mr. Williams has finished, and any others that will no doubt come out, it will be laid on the shelf and all that will be said is: "Well, it made mighty fine reading, anyway."

Why are none of these arguments ever settled?

After everybody has exploded his opinion—we don't even find a shell-hole. What's an argument for if not to BETTER conditions? THE EXHIBITORS UNITED IN STRENGTH OF OPINION AND ACTION is the ONLY way that ACTION will EVER be brought. It's a dead cinch that the producers will never start anything that will make them walk the "famous dotted chalk-line." And, believe us, there IS a time coming when THEY are the BOYS that WILL walk it, either forewards or backwards, on their feet or their hands—any old way that the BIG NOISE MR. EXHIBITOR SAYS HE SHALL WALK.

Why, the Exhibitors, if ORGANIZED, would be the BEST THING THAT COULD EVER HAPPEN TO THE PRODUCERS. It would keep THEM from cutting EACH OTHERS throats, and that's what they DO. DON'T THEY? To the tune of millions on a single contract. OH, BOY! THINK OF IT! The producers have MORE enemies in their OWN ranks than anywhere else, and the devil of it is THE EXHIBITORS PAY, PAY, PAY for the cut-throat policies of the producers. NOW ISN'T THAT THE CHEAPEST THING FOR THE PRODUCER TO DO, that is possible FOR THEM TO DO? THEY GAMBLE with the EXHIBITORS' money. If THEY bid MORE than they should, the exhibitor PAYS. What of the Pickford case?

But we didn't start out to write an article on this business. The above is just a little "passing thought." But we could write an article that would start an awful howl—if it was given a chance. And the time IS coming, as we said to start with, when the Exhibitor WILL "rear up on his hind legs" and then on his front, and simply kick the stuffing out of EVERYTHING that has got the WRONG kind of stuffing in it.

A FEW MEN CANNOT RULE THOUSANDS ALL THE TIME, and those FEW better WATCH their step NOW or they will be adopting a NEW kind of STEP—more quickly than they will be prepared to step in harmony.

SISK & JAMES.

¶ We Don't Like Anonymous Letters, But This One Demands Print—A Style All His Own.

November 25, 1918.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

GENTLEMEN:

Anybody can criticize. No person is perfect.

THE First National (J. D. Williams) is perfectly right when he agrees with J. A. Quinn in relation to what he intends doing with the Mary Pickford pictures, and he is right when he has Chaplin Features in mind, and probably "My Four Years in Germany." BUT how about "On Trial," "The Sign Invisible," "Fall of the Romanoffs," "The Third Floor Back," "Empty Pockets" and the Petrova Pictures? Are the latter pictures some of the HUNDRED?

In order to criticize a picture it is first necessary for some one to MAKE a PICTURE. Then, after the many weary days of work and worry are over, sixty per cent of the first-view people tell you "it's no good," or bad, or fair, or rotten. But, Mr. Critic, can you do as good?

Why don't Mr. Quinn and the southern California theatre owners MAKE PICTURES? They are in Los Angeles and have everything within their grasp. Why not SHOW the producers? SHOW what real, live, up-to-the-minute, sure-fire hit producers as well as critics you are. YOU have 1,600 failures to enlighten you, you have 100 good pictures which for this or that defect "would have been" GLORIOUS PRODUCTIONS. You have the settings, facilities, knowledge, scenery, climate and other men's failures to act as pace-makers for you.

Glory be! It isn't the star, for there are few. You can show the actors how to act—MAKE STARS OF THEM.

You can improve on the stories written by this and that author. You have advertising facilities, plenty of material, plenty of press agents, and IF YOU NEED MONEY, GET IT LIKE OTHER MANUFACTURERS.

Then if you produce a flivver: Throw it away. Make a new one.

Spend money. Build magnificent sets, as you would like to see them. Make and produce the things you said these other producers and manufacturers didn't do.

Show these swivel-chair encumbents what real, live exhibitors, producers, critics can and will do. Then, after you have produced one or two of these mammoth, epoch-making, record-breaking, world-wonder productions—SEE IT GET THE MONEY, and rest in ease and prosperity the balance of your natural life, OR, if you can't do it or won't do it, don't criticize anybody any more.

There's millions in the business? You say you can get it? Go after it. That's the thing to do—get the million out yourself.

Don't tell these poor ignorant swivel-chair executive loafers what they should do. Keep it secret. Go get some of these millions for yourself.

EXHIBITOR.

Of Course Nat Royster Didn't Miss the Chance

KNOXVILLE, TENN., Nov. 22, 1918.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

I HAVE been reading with great interest the many letters from Geo. Kleine's down to Mr. Quinn of California. Now to start with, I want it understood that I do not claim to know it all in this business, and of course most every one should know that I am only a small potato in this field, but, being sales manager of a small firm that buys what is known as states rights productions, I have learned quite a few things lately for myself.

In regard to so-called program pictures, I think, and have thought all the time, that when a star, director and company have one picture to be made and released weekly, or twice monthly, as a general rule that particular star and company can't give that production the time and attention that should be given a really finished picture. There are many plays not suited to the star and there are many plays that are not properly "treated" to make them 18 karat in every way. To my mind, they know that they have one, two or four a month to be released, and no matter how they look they release them. I know of a feature billed big by one of the foremost exchanges of the country this week, and I sat and counted over twenty of the grossest errors in producing I ever saw.

NEWSY NEWS OFF THE WIRE

Many Happenings of Interest Reeling Away in Los Angeles Circles

REJOICING at the lifting of the influenza ban is not the only pastime in Los Angeles and the West Coast these days, according to sparks from the wire to "Motion Picture News."

Activity seems to be in the air—interesting activity that makes the industry sit up and take notice when reported exclusively through the medium of the "News."

Among the more important happenings is the purchase by Claude Halsell of the Garrick theatre from H. P. Caulfield. This gives Halsell three Broadway houses in the City of Angels: the Victory, the American and the Garrick.

Not the least surprising news of the week, if reports can be called news, is that to the effect that Goldwyn will return all producing units to New York as soon as current productions are finished. No reason for the move was announced.

D. W. Griffith has decided to give his forces four weeks of rest, beginning December 7. He stopped production on that date.

E. W. Hammons, of Educational and Griffith's New York manager, McCarthy, closed a deal here, but are silent as to the details. They have left for New York.

Nazimova and her leading man have arrived to film "The Red Lantern," which will be directed by Henry Kolker.

Samuel Goldfish Tours Country

President of Goldwyn Pictures Will Visit Principal Cities En Route to New Goldwyn Studios in Los Angeles

IN order to make a thorough survey of conditions in the motion picture industry throughout America, Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, left New York, December 3rd, on a trip to the new Goldwyn Studios, in Los Angeles, which will take in all the principal cities of the United States.

With him went S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of New York's Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

The chief purpose of Mr. Goldfish's tour of the country is to meet and consult with the most successful exhibitors in the big centres. It is his object through them to keep in touch with the trend of public thought and taste and to get opinions and suggestions that he can make use of in the production of Goldwyn pictures. He will also visit the most important of the Goldwyn branches.

For Mr. Rothapfel the trip will be primarily in the nature of a vacation

Having worked very hard steering two of the biggest cinema theatres in the world through the most serious crisis in the show business, he expects to have a grand time watching the other big exhibitors of the country work.

Since the news of his impending visit became known, it is reported that exhibitor associations, press clubs and chambers of commerce in several cities have arranged luncheons at which Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Goldfish will be guests of honor.

The first of these took place in Cleveland at the Hotel Winter. One of the surprises of this occasion, by the way, was the presence of Will Rogers, who recently made his cinema debut in Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde."

"My trip is primarily an educational journey," said Mr. Goldfish before he left. "I mean educational for me. I am going to admire and to see, but above all to listen and learn. You know it is rather a misfortune that a cinema producer has for business reason, to spend so much of his time in New York. We do not produce our pictures for New York, but for America—for the entire world, in fact. It is, therefore, essential that a producer keep the closest personal contact with the exhibitor.

"I shall also spend four or five weeks in the new Goldwyn Studios at Culver City, Cal., supervising the production of our new pictures before I return East."

More Producers May Enter Detroit Theatre Field

It begins to look, in Detroit, it is reported, that many of the leading producers will have their own town theatres within a year, in order to insure themselves first runs.

There are more features released each week than there are first-run theatres, in Detroit, because its eight big houses hold their pictures for one week and often for two.

About a month ago William Fox secured a lease on the Washington theatre, which has been a part of the John H. Kunsky local circuit. It is now said that Universal, Paramount and others are not aggressively but still persistently after houses.

The lessee of one of the big theatres, where the rental is about $25,000 yearly, asked $40,000 for his lease only a week ago, when a film company representative inquired about it.

Now comes word that Marcus Loew is or has closed a deal for the lease of another downtown house, the old Detroit, recently called Detroit-on-the-Campus.

Many Gold Stars Shine in Film Industry

There are many Gold Stars displayed in the film industry to do honor to the boys who have made the supreme sacrifice. Carey Wilson, of Fox, United and Rolfe associations, sends us the sad news about Harry Sunshine. And Vitagraph furnishes us with the name of another of the many heroes.

Carey Wilson says of Harry Sunshine: "I knew young Sunshine when he was in motion picture advertising work. He was a New York boy, and the wrist watch he took with him when he went South to camp was a token of the goodwill of his fellow movie workers. Following a brief training Sunshine went to France.

"A postal card reached us in New York the day peace was declared and Mrs. Wilson and I were happy to know Sunshine would return. Seven days later the tidings arrived that the boy had been killed in action. He was only 22."

The day that the people of the United States were having their premature peace celebration—Thursday, November 7—a gold star took its place in the Vitagraph service flag, for on that day David Davidson, formerly an artist in the advertising and publicity department of the Vitagraph distributing organization, fell in action in France.

It was one of war's ironies that the young Vitagrapher, who was one of the first National Army men to reach France, should have died even as the armistice that halted hostilities was being arranged. News of his death was conveyed to his family in an official telegram from the War Department on December 2.

Davidson was twenty-six years old, a graduate of the Cooper Union Art School, and had been a commercial artist for several years before he went into the country's service. He had been in the Vitagraph art department for more than a year.

American Film President Will Visit Europe

Immediately upon his return from a flying trip to the Coast studios, President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, will leave for an extensive European business tour. He is expected to sail on or about December 15th for France.

Thence to England, Belgium and other European countries. After a general meeting with his London managers and British representatives, Mr. Hutchinson will allegorically investigate the continental conditions on a two months' travel through Europe.

While in California he will inspect the latest, unnamed Mary Miles Minter feature, said to be an unusually interesting comedy drama, replete with plot, suspense and comedy.

In this picture Miss Minter plays the part of a charming, through shrewd girl who thwarts some deep international schemes. It is not a "spy picture," but is described as a story told in an interesting and convincing manner, with a strong cast and magnificent scenic effects.

Peace Stimulating All Motion Pictures

According to Three Prominent Producers in the Film Industry the Arrival of Peace Has Already Given Added Impetus to Motion Pictures

"WHAT is the effect of peace on the cinema industry?"

This question, so vital to exhibitors and producers alike, has been answered very thoroughly by three leading producers: Samuel Goldfish, J. Stuart Blackton and Famous Players-Lasky, through its art director.

It seems to be the consensus that the art has advanced so rapidly toward perfection during the strenuous fifteen months just past that the general public will just crave motion pictures more than ever.

The war picture has not run its vogue, according to the most authentic information gathered from every available source.

In fact, the productions touching on the world war are expected to have longer life than pictures produced upon other themes.

Stress is also laid by many on the demand for more pictures of the breezy light comedy type.

Samuel Goldfish Predicts

"Well, obviously the first and happiest result you will see from peace will be the one everybody has been shouting for so long—better pictures," said Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn.

"In every way peace is a godsend to us. Of course, we were prepared and organized to stand an indefinite period of war conditions, although we were harder hit by them than any other industry in the country, probably.

"You see, quite apart from taxation—a tax on raw film, a tax on the finished product, income tax and so forth—and tremendously increased expenses, we had to face a seriously curtailed revenue. In the first place a great many very keen regular fans were for the time being eliminated by enlistment and the draft. Out of every 100 soldiers there are probably not less than 100 enthusiastic attendants at moving picture theatres.

"What has been still more serious for us is that while they were away from home, or at any rate as long as the war lasted, their women folk stayed away from the theatres. This was particularly noticeable in the smaller towns, where this is partly a matter of sentiment and partly of convention and imposing on the neighbors. Already reports from Goldwyn exchanges all over the country show an extraordinary increase in theatre-going since the news of the signing of the armistice was confirmed.

"So, although a couple of years may elapse before all the men return from Europe, the relief from worry and anxiety has brought many of the indispensable fans back to the theatres."

J. Stuart Blackton Asserts

"What will be the future of motion pictures and stage plays founded on or concerning the war? Will they continue to make a record as successful box office attractions and satisfactory entertainment?"

On this subject, J. Stuart Blackton, producer of "Safe for Democracy," work-or-fight picture, and "The Common Cause," filmed under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission for Vitagraph distribution, states:

"The dominating question is 'What will be the attitude of the public toward war plays and war pictures now that peace has been declared?' And in answering it I am very glad to be able to express my opinion based upon a close and critical study of the situation during the past week or two, based also upon common sense, logic and human nature and, best of all, because most practical, based upon actual performances and conditions I have observed.

"Do the people still want war plays? Emphatically yes. To substantiate this opinion, I sent around to the Cort Theatre the other day to get seats for "The Better 'Ole." The house was sold out! Late in the afternoon two box seats were returned and I got them at $3.30 each. And this was not on a holiday. The play is a dramatization of Captain Bairnsfather's well-known sketches of life as it is or was at the front. It is war from beginning to end and the packed house loved it. They cheered wildly, laughed a lot, cried a bit, and went out saying, 'beautiful, wonderful! They'll go home and tell their friends to go and see it.

"The people still want war plays of the right kind, the proof being that every war play in New York is doing big business. They do not want any more horrors or atrocities, but the play or picture that is human, clever and funny, with a war background or a war theme, that picture is going to get the money for its producers when many others are starving to death."

Artistic Progress

Wilfred Buckland, art director of the Famous Players-Lasky Studio, in Hollywood, expects the films to follow the lead of the stage in artistic staging. Not the lead of the stage represented by the Broadway production, but the school of producing represented by Gordon Craig, Granville Barker, and others of the radical artists. Mr. Buckland believes in suggesting a scene and appealing to the imagination of his audience.

"During the past year," says Mr. Buckland, "we have made some advance in an artistic way, but it has been slight. For the most part we have played safe, and realism has held sway, both in the kind of stories filmed and in their handling.

"'The Blue Bird' and 'The Whispering Chorus' were successes from the artist's point of view and all lovers of literature and the decorative arts were glad to see those pictures.

"I firmly believe that the next few years will see a great many changes in the pictures from the art director's point of view. We will come to handle scenes in a different way; we will try to create backgrounds that will emphasize the mood of the scene, that will allow the audience to follow the story without distraction and give a smoother flow to the narrative.

"But artistic progress in the pictures is necessarily slow, owing to the wide appeal of the screen as an entertainment and the necessity of securing a marketable and popular commodity. We have to face that fact. The greatest advance of the pictures, as far as artistic settings are concerned, is still to take place—and in the near future.

"I also believe that there will be a corresponding advance in the artistic value of the stories that we will present in the future. Now that the war cloud has lifted, the screen art will again become more experimental and more progressive."

VERY MUCH ALIVE

Reads His Death Notice But Thinks It Exaggerated

LAST week's issue of "Motion Picture News" carried a glowing account of the heroic death in France of Fred Wade, a former cameraman. His death in action had been reported from the West Coast.

This week Fred Wade, now a chief chemist of the Republic Laboratories in New York, walked into our office and entered a protest at being pronounced dead. Mr. Wade said the item refrrred to him, undoubtedly. He termed it greatly exaggerated.

The Fred Wade in the casualty list was not in the industry, it is said.

Hines of South Bend in Big Theatre Deal

George H. Hines has been running the Auditorium, a 1,650 seat-house at South Bend, Indiana, for the past five years and for eight years previous to his arrival in South Bend he was a Chicago exhibitor. It was only a short time ago that Mr. Hines declared that he has been a subscriber to Motion Picture News since its first issue and anxiously awaits it each week.

The South Bend News-Times runs a first page story to the effect that two new theatres are contemplated for that town. It is reported that Chicago parties have interested themselves with Mr. Hines and that a 2,500 seat house will be erected on one site and the Auditorium management will also erect a 3,000 seat Hippodrome.

A "STEPS TO SUCCESS" STORY

How a Michigan Exhibitor Made His Fliver a Packard

HARRY SCOTT, manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit Exchange in Detroit, has turned writer for the moment and contributed one of the most interesting features of next week's Motion Picture News.

It's a regular "Steps to Success" story—the sort of plain recital of facts that gives you jazz and inspiration.

Mr. Scott tells of a Michigan theatre which has just completed a year with a gross profit in round figures of $20,000—and the twelve months preceding had chalked up a loss of $10,000 for the previous owner. "The house had been given seven 'Grand Openings' in three years," and as many managers had fallen by the way-side.

It was certainly some "Flivver"—and just as certainly it is today some Packard. How it was done is told in Mr. Scott's article.

AND BEST OF ALL! NAMES and PLACES are mentioned. This is the real goods, not the day dream of a space hungry dopester. Watch for it!

Katterjohn Predicts Golden Era

Monte M. Katterjohn, Well-Known Producing Author of Los Angeles, Is Enthusiastically Optimistic on Film

"WE face a golden era in the film industry if we only know how to make it so," declared Monte Katterjohn.

He then proceeds to give a comprehensive outline as to the best themes for photoplays at this time and sends a copy of his views to all the prominent producers.

Mr. Katterjohn believes that if a thorough experience counts for anything in the motion picture industry, the following views are well worth the earnest consideration of not only the producers, but the distributors and exhibitors as well:

"The cessation of the great world strife, heralding a gradual return to the normal course of human events, ushers in a new era for motion picture entertainment. The amusements of the American people must now accord with new characteristics shaped out of the destinies of war, and our national viewpoint will unfailingly bring the plain, unvarnished story-drama back to its own," declared Mr. Katterjohn.

"With the signing of peace and the demobilizing of almost four millions of men, affecting every home in the United States, the tendency will be toward an appreciation for the true dramatic story, with its tenseness, pathos, laughter and heart-throb—toward exhilarating tales with resounding and tremendous punch. The signing of the armistice has lifted the nervous barrage so long suspended over the nation, and our future productions must return to spirited drama if they are to please a populace which no longer thinks in terms of war, but nevertheless in terms of confident, conquering, honest-to-goodness red-blooded Americans.

"Clever satire, clean comedy and really original comedy-drama will always have their following; but the sugar and saccharine play, as assembled to exploit doll-faced ingenues of more or less ability, who pout through willy-nilly, tiddley-wink stories, will surely fall into the discard.

"Wholesome entertainment is something more than a filmy fabric of nothingness with a happy ending. The greater portion of American picture patrons have always demanded on the screen those things which they themselves may have felt or observed, but have been unable to properly clothe in imagination or express by words. And instead of catering to this natural inclination, we have for the past two years been presenting totally false pictures of life, with the laudable but somewhat mistaken idea of making a people's burdens easier. Cheerfulness is always an absolute necessity of every story, but in our endeavor to create pictures with this quality—for a war-time public—we mistook silliness for gladness. The result has been a procession of productions in which inane puerility has been presented in its most advanced state.

"Photoplays became meaningless. We knew they were not true, and never could be true, so we smiled and let them flicker their way across the screen. We were not especially depressed; perhaps we forgot for the moment the horrors of war, but surely we were not entertained. We merely drove dull care away and lowered the public estimation of our art.

"The present situation confronting us may be likened to the 'novelty' period of yester-year, when the movements of the characters formed the attraction—before real thought had been introduced to the screen play. Again we stand on the threshold of a great advancement, bound only to the past by the entangling fetters of production precedent. The paralyzed thought of the war period has served to bring about a stagnation which has halted our march, even though the wheels of progress apparently seemed to turn.

"Three years ago we were producing big, virile dramas, with as many as six or eight sterling players in them. Now each one of these players is alleged to be a star, although the public at large refuses to accept them as such, or to appraise them at their exploited valuation. The truth of the matter is that in no way are present-day productions on the high plane of quality that they occupied during the years 1915 and 1916. "Quality," as here used, implies all-around entertainment value.

"Since the temperamental attributes of the industry extend even to the executive offices of our leading producing organizations, an earnest effort toward motion picture reconstruction may thoughtlessly be regarded as Bolshevikian reform, but with the very financial future of the industry at stake it is high time that consideration were given to working a change in the system which has proven so disastrous.

"But we cannot rebuild around the winsomeness or the charms of a few popular stars. We must create new groupings of sterling players who will discount the growing dislike for alleged star-pictures, or at least the lack of interest which is the direct result of monotonous sameness and vacuous inanity.

"It is of interest to learn that more than one big producing organization has recently discovered that their special productions are in greater demand than their star-pictures—this solely for the reason that the former are vastly superior in actual entertainment value to the star-productions. Recent conditions, brought about by the manufacturers themselves, have made a group of perhaps ten stars, and not the photoplay itself, the real drawing power of all cinema entertainment.

"The productions on which we now embark must be shaped to meet the after-war conditions of public thought; they must accord with the progressive, combative spirit which has been kindled through winning the greater conflict; or in other words, with the birth of a new and better national soul.

"The full import of the motion picture's retrogression can only be realized through a study of war-time releases, while even a superficial review of the year's pictures is sufficient to show that the productions of the future must not be founded on the precedents of the past. A close study of the reception accorded pictures already produced, but not yet released, should be instructive and valuable in indicating just how far we have missed the mark in providing true entertainment.

"The pictures which endure will be those which accurately reflect our ideals as a nation, and which accord in thought with the present world era. The same noble spirit which made possible the creation of our great national army will obtain in commercial pursuits, and the people will revel in the portrayal of virile thought and action with true characterization.

"Now is the time to act upon the realization that through the manufacture of prune-pie meringue plays, not to mention a mistaken policy toward commercial production, we have builded a Tower of Babel on shifting sands.

"We face a golden era if we only know how to make it so."

No More Censorship for Films Exported

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry received a communication from the Committee on Public Information stating that it had been agreed at a conference between the Treasury Department, the Committee on Public Information, the War Trade Board and the Customs Department that commencing Monday, December 9, the censorship of films for export would no longer be required.

Following is the statement authorized by the committee:

"At a conference held in Washington, Friday, November 29, between the Treasury Department, the Customs, the War Trade Board and the Committee on Public Information, it was agreed that on and after Monday, December 9, there will be no censorship of films for export by the Customs or the Committee on Public Information. Applications for export license must continue to be made by the shippers according to the requirements of the War Trade Board."

This action on the part of the Government officials is expected to clear up a large degree of the difficulties that have been hampering the exportation of motion pictures. Much of the delay and resultant loss of money that has characterized the export business since this country entered the war will be done away with by this action.

Launches Country-Wide Trade Show

Louis B. Mayer in Introducing Anita Stewart's "Virtuous Wives" Plans the Innovation of Simultaneous Trade Showings Throughout the Country

FIRMLY intrenched behind the confidence of complete satisfaction with the first Anita Stewart production, "Virtuous Wives," Louis B. Mayer is clearing his decks to show the trade such co-operation between producer and exhibitor as it has never seen before, according to announcements.

In a recent interview Mr. Mayer took up arms in behalf of the out-of-town showman; he pointed out that the so-called "trade showing" is a misnomer and a great injustice to the theatre man who cannot come to New York, where all trade shows have always been held; he has been expected to read about it and abide by the decisions of the various self-constituted authorities who usually disagree on the merits of the picture and leave the absent exhibitor to gather his conclusions from the confusing reports published.

Pre-Release Showings

While the remedy has been almost prohibitive because of the expense involved, Mr. Mayer has decided that this is the time for innovations and that the service justifies the expense; and now, for the first time in the history of the trade, there is to be a pre-release showing of a production on a national scale.

It means that arrangements are being made for the showing of Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives' in at least twenty-five cities in the United States and Canada, each showing to be conducted on as great a scale as the most elaborate "Broadway showing" within the memory of film men. An operation of such proportions is declared to be entirely within the broad-stroke plan of action of Mr. Mayer, and the following will convey an idea of how it will be accomplished:

Four crews of experts in publicity and theatre exploitation will leave at the same time, each striking into a certain part of the country, with itinerary so arranged that when each has covered its group of cities the country will have been covered from coast to coast.

General Sales Manager Joseph F. Lee will oversee operations from the exhibitors' standpoint, jumping into each territory as situations may arise. The general publicity arrangements are in the hands of W. H. Leahy, who has selected his own corps of assistants from his years of experience in the highest class of theatrical press-work.

Special Press Work

Still another phase of the work which Mr. Mayer has planned in each territory is that of special "stunt" or novelty press work.

For this he has engaged Leon J. Rubinstein, known to the trade as "Ruby," with an established reputation for special publicity; his work and that of his assistants will team with Mr. Leahy's corps, so that in each territory all the available advertising and publicity forces will be let loose at one time.

In every city visited the best and biggest house will be engaged, and if there should not be a large enough symphony orchestra available, the house music will be augmented with artists from the nearest city to play the thirty-five instrument score.

All of the newspapers in each city will be served with material on this first Anita Stewart production, so that the trade show in each city will at the same time serve the purpose of publicity leverage.

The operation will accomplish also the personal touch now lacking between the producer and the theatre; all the accumulative effect of the experience of Mr. Mayer's special representatives will be abridged for the benefit of all the territory, so that "Virtuous Wives" will carry, in every house where shown, all the business-getting force which thought and experience of the most specialized kind can give it.

All the exhibitor needs do is reach out for it—it's his for the asking, and Mr. Mayer asks no special thanks for placing it before him; it's the Mayer idea of co-operation.

Many Want Mayer

A vexatious problem confronts Mr. Mayer in the execution of the national trade-show plan in which he asks the indulgence of the exhibitors. Since notice has gone forth regarding it, he has been wired and written to from various points throughout the country asking him to attend the shows and place before the exhibitors in person some of his constructive views which have attracted such wide attention.

It is obvious that Mr. Mayer will be unable to attend them all, but he wants the trade to know that he will take some means to communicate an important message at every viewing.

Unquestionably, the whole industry will observe with keen interest the operation of this first transcontinental trade show, and no matter what the final result may be (and they should be manifold plus profitable), it will mean that Louis B. Mayer has jumped right into the front rank of the film industry's progressives, a pioneer of the first water.

MOVIES ON BOARD

President Wilson Will Be Entertained Enroute

WHEN President Wilson and the other American delegates to the peace conference at Versailles left for France a few days ago they found that a series of elaborate entertainment had been provided for them while on board ship, a leading feature of which was motion pictures in which several of the most popular stars of the screen are seen.

Arrangements were completed by wire whereby the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation furnished the pictures and a list of fifteen Paramount and Artcraft subjects were accordingly prepared.

Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of Distribution, took personal charge of the selection of the subjects and picked out four Douglas Fairbanks pictures, three William S. Hart subjects, D. W. Griffith's Artcraft picture, "The Great Love"; three Mary Pickford subjects and one each starring the following players: Enid Bennett, Charles Ray, Dorothy Gish and Polly Moran.

M. W. McGee Resigns from Majestic at Detroit

M. W. McGee, managing director of the Majestic, tendered his resignation to the board of directors, to take effect about the first of the year.

He is considered among the most progressive motion picture theatre managers, and became identified with the Majestic when that house opened some four years ago. It is in a residential district nearly two miles from the center of the city and at the time nearly every one predicted its failure.

War Is On Over the Quinn Letter

I could not direct a picture if my life was at stake, but it seems to me that there are many producers making pictures today who just a year ago were not known to the business. How do they learn to really produce so quick? What school did they attend? I met a friend of mine a few weeks ago who, when I asked him what he was doing, said he was producing pictures for such and such a company, and I know to my certain knowledge, that he never saw one made until eighteen months ago.

There is no doubt but that seven-tenths of the features on the market today, could be culled down one reel out of every five, and many of the big features more. Our company sees many features, which we always do before buying, and half of them could be cut fully a reel less. Still, I want to say that the state rights market today offers better service to the number produced, than any other branch of the business. WHY? Because they know that they have no positive guaranteed market for their films, and they must be good, otherwise, how can we who think we know a good one, be expected to buy it. That is one reason why I have always contended that the open market was the safest way to buy.

Regarding stars' salaries, I would say that there has been much money paid to stars who had spent months between pictures, but at the same time, even Uncle Sam don't hire mail carriers by the trip, he hires them by the year, and when we go to paying stars' salaries by the picture, I think it will bring about more waste than ever. The right way is to get them at the right salary; and that will be hard to do when one firm with plenty of money wants that star.

Regarding the using of two journals for advertising, I would say just this: We know there are two legitimate papers through which to advertise; but does any other industry as large as this one confine itself to so many trade journals? Does the automobile industry confine itself to two papers? We must conserve, but at the same time, let's not get autocratic and ask and demand that free speech be stopped. Let them do all advertising they want to in as many journals as they want to, but if the exhibitor hasn't got sense enough to know how far to go, then he is not worthy of being in business for himself.

If any exchanges are trying to be autocratic in their business dealings, and I have no reason to believe otherwise, then let us, if possible, enlighten the exhibitors where we can. But I have found some that only will learn through experience, which is the dearest school of all. But by no means let us say that the industry can only advertise in two papers, for that sounds too much like the once happy fool of Germany, the Kaiser.

We don't buy features for the stars, as is testified by "The Whip," "Raffles," "The Warrior," "The Stiff Alarm," "Stolen Orders," and "Berlin Via America," and I believe that these pictures have made exhibitors about as much money as any pictures on the market, no matter how or where they come from. First, we buy for story and action, and of course if stars there be in them, so much the better, but the story and direction should come first.

I have found very few exhibitors that really use publicity in the right way. There is too much publicity on most pictures, and I only know of ten exhibitors in the South that have used the right methods of advertising pictures. Which also goes to show that there is much wasted in the way of letters, circulars, and certain publications that do not do an exhibitor one dollar's worth of good.

Brother Quinn is right in most of his arguments, and if this thing keeps up, I would like to submit a table some time in the near future, which will show a saving of over two million a year to the industry, just in needless advertising alone.

Respectfully,
NAT. L. ROYSTER,
Sales Manager,

"The Story in the Picture Is What Counts"

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

With every point covered thoroughly, briefly and convincingly, as has been done by Mr. Quinn, it seems almost useless to answer the challenge of the NEWS and enter into a discussion of the matters treated.

There are so many ramifications to the problems confronting the exhibitor today, so many topics of discussion, that it is difficult to pick upon one which is of more importance than another. There is, however, a key log to this jam, which, if found, will set free the timber of the industry, to continue on its way to the quiet waters of Success. To my mind, this key log is the STORY, upheld by good delineation of character and capable direction.

It seems to have been forgotten, alike by producer, director and star, that the true motion picture is not of necessity a play, wherein one character predominates, but a visualized narrative depicting in natural sequence events in the lives of two or more characters of nearly equal importance. As such its construction should be governed by the rules which apply to narration and not by the whim of director or actor.

The successful pictures o fthe past year have been those which have contained an appealing story, stars having been of secondary importance. By the clever interpretation of the parts assigned them, stars have been made by these great productions. How many productions have been made by the stars?

Another point which has been overlooked is cleanliness. Can anyone point out a successful picture of the past year which was based upon sex lure, suggestiveness or morbidness? No. The really great pictures have been clean, every one of them, clean and uplifting. Yet the market is flooded with the productions, the stories of which would make any self respecting exhibitor blush with shame were he compelled to stand before his audience and tell them. Try it sometime, Mr. Manager. Then sit down and cancel every last picture on your program the story of which you cannot detail fully to your wife, your family or your friends, without feeling ashamed. By doing this you will strike the first blow at that key log which is holding us back.

What are the successful magazines of today? The ones which are clean and wholesome, the ones which the public can buy with the assurance that all the family may read, not the ones which have to be concealed from certain members of the household. The example of the publisher is one which the producer may emulate. Let the latter profit by the experience of the former.

Aside from cleanliness, which is the first asset, the picture must have the elements of simplicity and plausibility.

The picture caters to all classes—the rich, the poor, the educated, the ignorant—and must be so presented so that the masses may understand. All minds do not work rapidly, do not grasp the intricate details of complicated plot. A picture readily understood is appreciated; one hazy and uncertain, even though upheld by a great star, is branded "poor."

Plausibility, although of the utmost importance, seems to have been relegated to the scrap heap by the majority of producers, if we are to judge by their offerings.

One of many examples of the lack of plausibility in pictures is here given. The setting of this particular picture was in California in the days of the first gold rush. In the course of the story a means must be provided for the escape of an outlaw from the hands of the Vigilantees. In the early part of the story a doll has been purchased from a peddler by the outlaw and presented to a young girl who is living with him. The doll is of the wax variety, with movable arms and legs and almost as large as the girl herself and dressed as a modern society lady, hat and all. Just how dolls of this very fashionable variety came to be in the mining camps of California in the days of '49 is not explained.

Aside from this lack of discernment on the part of the director, further incongruities are offered. When, in the last reel, the outlaw, who is made a hero, is about to pay the penalty for his misdeeds, the girl rushes forward, holding in her hands the doll's clothes, which the guillible Vigilantees immediately accept as the garments of a future member of society, illegitimate though it might be.

For the sake of the presumably soon-to-be mother, and without any further investigation, this band of rough men, in the bigness of their hearts, let the outlaw go. This was a habit they had in those days. Upon visiting their former prisoner's cabin they find a 1917 model doll's body, denuded of garments, thereby discovering that they had been cleverly gulled by a supposed-to-be-ignorant girl.

Without further details it can readily be seen how utterly improbable, not to say vulgar, the situation is. By a little application of brains, a perfectly logical, clean, wholesome conclusion could have been given. It might be surprising to learn that this picture, instead of being a cheap production was the high-priced Artcraft offering, "A Romance of the Redwoods," the director Cecil De Mille ad the star Mary Pickford. And this is but one of many.

There are other elements which go to make up a real picture—originality, climax, interest—but space forbids a discussion of them.

It may be difficult to get all these six elements into a picture, but an analysis of the successful offerings of the year will show each and every one of them. Not only in the best pictures, but in every popular book on the market are they to be found, for they are the elements with which the author constructs his story.

Get these elements in the picture and you have the quality for which Mr. Quinn longs and which Mr. Williams claims are paid to publishers of books to secure.

These elements are to be found in every good scenario offered to the producer, for the scenario writer is trained to use them. Unfortunately, the accepted scenarios are seldom used as submitted, being changed to suit the stars and the whims of directors, thereby losing part or all of the elements which are their life.

Let us then look to the story in the picture. By so doing we may encourage authors to better efforts, thereby getting away from the necessity of presenting books, good and bad, in visualized form. By so doing we may persuade producers to present the scenario as written, thus preserving the delicate gradation of story from opening to climax. By so doing we may be able to eliminate some of the "rotteness" mentioned by Mr. Quinn.

Saw His Soldier Son in Hearst-Pathe Film

George P. Ahner, president of Duparquet, Huot and Moneuse Co., No. 110 West 22d street, New York, proudly displays at his Flatbush home a two-star service flag, for both of his boys are actively in the service of Uncle Sam—George Werner Ahner, 24, 305th Infantry, 77th Division, Headquarters Company, and R. W. Ahner, 22, with the 104th Machine Guns.

The Ahner family, accompanied by Louis H. Huot, vice-president of the concern of which Mr. Ahner is the head, went to a theatre on Nostrand avenue, Flatbush, where Hearst-Pathe News, No. 93, was being shown. The American pictures were grouped under the head of "With the Stars and Stripes Over There."'

The picture showed a husky, well set up collection of youngsters who looked capable of undertaking and carrying through the severest of tasks. Among them was one particularly aimiable and smiling face. "That is my boy—that is his smile," said Mr. Ahner.

M. Kashin Augments His Board of Review

So interesting have been the results of the Special Board of Review inaugurated by M. Kashin, at the Broadway theatre, New York, that he has extended it to include the class in scenario writing of the Y. M. C. A.

The earlier group of reviewers comprised the class in scenario composition of Columbia University. They attend each week. Criticisms written by the members concerning the various productions shown there, are engaging the interest of big producers.

A. G. Stolde Takes Charge of Omaha Strand

A. G. Stolde, former manager of the Strand theatre at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has been engaged to manage the Strand theatre of Omaha, one of the A. H. Blank enterprises.

He was a printer at Waterloo, Ia., several years ago and broke into the picture business at Vinton, Ia., with a small theatre there. He later became manager of the Strand at Cedar Rapids, a town of some 50,000 people, and the natives were said to have been kept on tiptoes there with his stunts.

Frohman Production Takes Well with the Trade

"Once to Every Man," the latest product of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, was shown to the trade last week and judging from the comments made upon it by the press and the trade in general, the company has one more success to its credit. William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has no announcement to make as yet regarding the channels through which the picture will be released. Several large distributing organizations have looked it over and it is known that they received it favorably.

Mr. Sherrill is confident that the picture will be a popular success. "It will be because it is based on a fighting story," he said, "it is based on a man's fight against an inherent longing for drink and this side of the story was forcefully brought out in the original work by Larry Evans, one of the best known authors of the day. Anthony Kelly who made the scenario has faithfully brought out the scheme of the author. But besides this strong element "Once to Every Man" has the benefit of numerous physical combats, the biggest one of which, the fight in the prize ring, is by all odds the most realistic ever screened.

"To insure the realism of these fight scenes," Mr. Sherill continued, "we secured the services of Eddie Kelly and Kid Broad, two of the best known men in boxing circles. They did great work and critics substantiate my opinion that the fight scenes far overshadow anything else done heretofore."

Jack Sherrill and Mabel Withee are the leads in "Once to Every Man," and the former is said to give the best performance of his career.

The last picture produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation was "My Own United States." It has a long list of successes in the producing field including such pictures as "The Conquest of Canaan" and "God's Man."

Gordon Story Enthuses Director Worsely

Wallace Worsely, who is directing Kitty Gordon in a feature drama for United Picture Theatres, Inc., has informed President J. A. Berst that the story is the strongest he has ever produced.

"There is wonderful contrast in the plot," states Mr. Worsley. "Miss Gordon has every opportunity for strong dramatic work and is taking full advantage of her opportunities. It is a human drama of the upper and the lower strata of life and the climaxes are logically drawn out."

Major Beith (Ian Hay) Returns to America

Humphreys Asks Audiences Opinion on Running Official War Review

Woodstown, N. J.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

Now that the work of the "Four-Minute Men" is slowing up, I am wondering if it would not be a good thing if managers, especially in small towns like mine (1,500 population) continued the custom in occasional confidential chats with their audiences. An experience I had this week started my thoughts along this line.

We have been showing the "Official War Review" since reopening, and I had heard comments from some of my audience that they could hardly bear to look at this picture. Having noted in the Philadelphia houses that the audiences seemed less enthusiastic over the war parts of the News reels, since the armistice went into effect, I wondered if the majority had tired of such pictures.

So last night, at the finish of the War Review, I took my audience into my confidence, and in a little talk told them why I was asking for their decision as to whether I should cancel or continue this feature. Told them of the comment I had heard, some for and some against, that the Government was continuing this reel, even though hostilities had ceased, and while one of the most expensive reels on the program, I did not wish to continue it against the wishes of a majority of the audience. The response, when a show of hands was asked for, was surprisingly illuminative. It seemed as though every hand in the audience was held up for the reel, and only one was shown against. Needless to say, we continue the "War Review."

I also asked for a vote as to their wishes on the opening hour, since the change in the clock, and got a hearty vote to open earlier. As my News had seemed a bit ancient, I explained the reason—that the exchanges had handled no News reels during the five weeks closing for the epidemic, and we were making history so fast that a few weeks made quite a difference, and that our News for the following show would be four weeks fresher.

In my opinion any audience will appreciate having their likes and wishes referred to in this manner, and I offer the hint for what it is worth.

Dolores Cassinelli Suggests "Movie Fan" Club for Industry

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

May I be permitted to enlist the co-operation of the "Motion Picture News" for the formation of a Club for "Movie Fans"?

In every town in America, in every city in Europe, we have dramatic clubs, we have theatre leagues, we have opera clubs, etc., etc. Yet, the motion picture industry, although it has outstripped any other form of entertainment in popularity, and although the "movies" are nightly attended by millions of "fans" we miss an organization or a "club movement" which would help to elevate the industry more than anything else that has been attempted in the same direction so far.

I feel sure that the "Motion Picture News" is just the journal to take up such an idea with enthusiasm. What an opportune moment too for the formation of a club.. We could call it "The Victory Club for Movie Fans" and, for instance, take over as a preliminary club house one or two of the Y. M. C. A. huts, such as the one in Bryant Square.

There movie fans who are in the habit of walking about aimlessly for hours in the cold, pending or waiting for the showing of their favorite picture, could sit in a comfortable library, or reading room, could read their favorite motion picture paper, see movie stars in person, because, of course, we should want every important movie star to join such a club. In short, there are countless possibilities for such a club movement. A hundred ideas occur to one at the same time. For instance: Would not a club be an ideal way of forming "movie parties" just like the theatres have "theatre parties."

What an ideal way too of entertaining the boys when they come back from "over there." I feel sure leading picture artists would gladly entertain a few hundred boys. I, for one, would willingly entertain a few thousand at picture theatres when they come back.

As for "club members," I feel certain we could get thousands at once; I personally could bring along over two hundred.

Wouldn't you think it would be advisable to get the opinion of leading people in the motion picture industry on this too all-important subject?

I cannot help but feel that people like Mr. Rothapfel of Rialto and Rivoli theatres, Adolphe Zukor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, will support such a movement, and I feel sure that leading stars like Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Douglas Fairbanks, etc., etc., would join the movement and come from time to time to the club house.

Speaking personally for myself, I shall be very glad if I have given an idea which will tend to elevate the motion picture industry.

I feel sure we must do everything to give the motion picture industry the same standing as the theatre industry has.

Many thanks for your co-operation.

Very truly yours,
DOLORES CASSINELLI.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

Gentlemen:

Just a few words concerning the theatrical business in general and your wonderful little magazine. Every page of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS contains something of value and interest to the exhibitors. Way out here in the "wlid and wooly West," we "small fellows" have a hard time getting the desired and necessary service even from Minneapolis. We take two movie journals, your's and the Exhibitors' Herald; both are essential to our business.

We have read "The Wail from a Small Town Exhibitor" (Mr. King, Leesburg, O.) and will back him up by saying that this is the plain truth. First National sure pulled a green one when they contracted Mary Pickford AT ANY PRICE. No more were they overly wise in contracting the time worn Charles Chaplin, to release him in some war camouflaged Keystone stuff. We will give them credit, though, for grabbing Miss Anita Stewart. SHE is a star!

And turning to Paramount-Artcraft, they really have a few good pictures, but oh! What a price—and THAT contract!

Now that we have showed up a few bad ones (but not all) let us turn to praising those who deserve it.

The Select Pictures Company now has a most complete and satisfactory group of stars. The Misses Norma and Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady, Clara K. Young and Marion Davies are releasing some very wonderfully classy pictures. We can give Select credit for some of the best stage settings put in to regular stuff. Their stars all dress well, their plays have the drawing power and with their specials they are ready to supply the most up-to-date theatre in our United States.

Universal, too, is realizing at last that poor stuff won't get by and they are coming out with some very good stars and plays that more than "get by."

And let us not forget Metro—they are the fellows who know how to treat an exhibitor right. Although we used their service only a few months we can thank them for keeping their books straight and putting out films in RUNNING condition.

Pathe is coming to hold its own; they give good service and always meet you halfway.

We believe in giving the devil his due if he deserves it.

Perhaps again we may write you a more complete letter pertaining to the advertising department. It is just as essential as a good picture, or good projection.

Respectfully,
(Signed) F. B. RILEY.

Two Hearst Photographers to Peace Conference

With the vanguard of the great peace mission that left Dec. 4 for Europe, went two of the fastest, nerviest, cleverest film news photographers in the country, acording to Universal.

They were U. K. Whipple and William J. Hearfield, who will turn cranks on the peace negotiations and incidents for the Hearst News.

Mr. Whipple was one of the earliest photographers in the game for the Universal news weeklies, the Animated and Current Events.

St. Louis Lags Advertisingly

Exhibitors Fail to Make Most of Their Space While Newspapers as Whole Fail to Cooperate

ST. LOUIS is far behind the big city average in motion picture advertising, but we may hold up one finger and announce "There is hope," since there seems a disposition on the part of both the newspapers and the exhibitors to improve conditions. One element that promises to cause a difference is the entrance of William Fox into the field as an exhibitor, for his theatre, the Liberty, has started in to at least use much more space in advertising, and the Royal is going a strong pace with its offerings.

For a city of 850,000 there is not an excessive number of newspapers, five, with three of them publishing Sunday issues. The one thing that stands in the way of heavier advertising is the popularity of vaudeville and burlesque in the Missouri city. Especially in the summer the various gardens where drinks are served and vaudeville, band concerts and dancing, for the patronage is very heavy, and to some extent that interferes with the progress of the motion picture. But in our opinion the greatest bar has been the failure of the vast majority of the houses to do attractive, business building advertising.

There are 115 motion picture houses in St. Louis, of which twenty-two are downtown theatres. St. Louis covers a considerable territory, and therefore the popularity of the neighborhood house is great. With the exception of the Liberty the seating capacities of the theatres are not large, the downtown houses ranging from about 400 to 750 and the neighborhood theatres from 200 to 500.

First run theatres are the Lyric, Royal, West End Lyric (neighborhood), Grand Duchess (neighborhood), Liberty, New Grand Central, Strand and Grand Opera House. Others that may be ranked among the leading theatres are the Mogler, Pageant, New Delmar, American, Park, Shenandoah, and Orpheum. There are quite a few small circuits, or theatres under the same ownership, but there is nothing of the syndicate ownershop that would affect the situation so far as intelligent advertising, or the lack of it, is concerned.

As we have said, there are five English newspapers in St. Louis, and of course one must take into consideration that there is a large German reading population in that city. The papers, with their circulation as given by Lord and Thomas, are:

Globe-Democrat, morning (134,166), Sunday (161,862).
Post-Dispatch, afternoon (165,738), Sunday (360,867).
Republic, morning (96,466), Sunday (128,643).
Star, afternoon (106,679).
Times, afternoon (101,495).

Glancing at the pages opposite, the first thing that challenges attention is the unattractiveness of the great majority of the displays. In fact, the most of them are not displays at all, but a mere mass of type. Use of cuts in advertising is a rare thing, and it is mighty seldom in going over the St. Louis papers have we seen advertisements that gave any evidence of their having been carefully designed with some particular selling point in view. But before going into that point let us see what the newspapers are doing.

Easily the most attractive thing that the newspapers are doing is supplied by the Globe-Democrat, which runs on Sundays a full page of real interesting gossip about the players in colors, on the last page of the magazine section. This is illustrated with half tone layouts that stand out. The matter on this page does not refer directly to local attractions, but undertakes to give the actual news and gossip that is going the rounds of the photoplay world, with intelligent comment. This page also includes "Notes of the Studios" and "Answers to Movie Fans."

We have commented so often on the value of matter like this to exhibitors and on the fact that they do not need to have the name of their theatre mentioned in every item in order to get business that further repetition is unnecessary here, except to urge theatre owners to encourage newspapers that show this tendency to get out and print real stuff.

Turning to the regular news sections of the same paper, we find that the photoplay is carefully given second position to the speaking stage. The layout of first run attractions is carefully made smaller, and even the general heading is in reduced type. We can't help resenting any treatment that puts the motion picture in second place, but still the showing of the paper is so much better than any of the others that we have to accord it first place.

Turning to the advertising, we find a fine conglomeration of legitimate, vaudeville, motion picture and auction advertising all jammed together. The only things that might be called cuts on the page are illustrating legitimate attractions and the advertisement of the Royal. The motion picture houses run to heavy black type. The setting of the displays is very poor, most of them are overcrowded, and a big share of them fails to make any sales talk on the picture.

Royal has the largest display on the page, occupying 5½ inches across three columns and making a splendid display on "Crashing Through to Berlin." The newspaper does the theatre an injustice by giving its largest amusement advertiser the poorest position on the whole page. In all eleven photoplay houses are represented.

Turning next to the Republic, we find a three column layout on the attractions and advertisements of the Royal, Grand Central and Liberty, with five of the smaller houses represented.

In the Sunday Post-Dispatch all of the amusement advertising is again grouped, eight motion picture houses making their appearance. A careful search through several Sunday issues of the Post-Dispatch fails to bring to light a line of motion picture matter, which is a remarkable showing for the paper with the largest circulation, and doubtless the highest advertising rate. Probably the paper considers that it is merely selling advertising and that the motion picture is not due anything for the NEWS interest there is in them.

However, in the Saturday afternoon edition the Post-Dispatch does come across with a four column heading, "What They Are Doing in the Movies," and prints press notices for the larger houses that advertise and some gossip under the old favorite heading, "Flashes from Filmland." Six theatres are represented in the advertising.

The Times carries the advertisements of only three of the larger motion picture houses, and then sprinkles in a bunch of separate cuts more or less grouped together, three theatres being represented in the number.

It remains for the Star to make a showing as the only paper that apparently makes an effort to go out and get the advertising of as many theatres as possible and group them together. Its directory in the Saturday afternoon issue is reproduced. Compare the showing with that of any of the other papers and you can see where intelligent, careful work on the part of the newspaper brings results. Twenty-eight theatres are represented in the advertising.

This directory is run every day, usually with less space than on Saturdays and varying with the announcements that the theatres have to make. For instance, on Friday of the same week we find the announcements of thirty-one theatres, three others of the neighborhood houses being represented. On Thursday there is an even thirty.

On Saturdays the Post devotes a two-column layout to all of the attractions, but we see but one motion picture player represented and that in a very small cut. On Friday, however, there

Some of the most striking lobby display work in motion pictures is being done by Harry Pomeroty at the Holman theatre, Montreal. At the left he has built up the front of the house to represent a "tank" crashing at you, with a soldier standing at the entrance in the center. There is nothing to confuse here and one gets the big idea immediately. At the right is the display on "That Devil Bateete," the main decorations being supplied by skins and forest effects

William Fox Stirs Things Up with Theatre Opening in Minneapolis

THEATRE managers in this section are sitting up and taking notice as the result of the opening of Fox's Schubert theatre, which began its motion picture career with the showing of Theda Bara in "Salome."

Judging from the manner in which "Salome" was presented and the patronage accorded the initial presentations the Fox-Schubert is going to be a success, though the management will have to educate the filmplay public into turning off of Hennepin avenue to the north as well as to the south, where the Strand, Orpheum and New Garrick are situated. Hennepin avenue is the "main stem" of Minneapolis film circle, and the photoplay attending public is used to going just so far on certain "cut off" streets and no farther, hence it can be seen the Schubert, situated in a block that might be termed "untheatrical" is a little off of the beaten path.

During the time the "flu" ban was on the Fox management completely overhauled the theatre, previously used for stock, redecorated both interior and exterior and transformed the theatre into a high class motion picture play center. According to present plans of the theatre about eight reels will constitute each performance and the theatre will be divided into 25, 20 and 15 cent divisions of seats. A complete change of stage effects will be made weekly and the twelve piece symphony orchestra will be maintained permanently.

The program for the opening week followed. Overture—Selections from "Going Up" simultaneously with gradual changing of color scheme on back drop showing distant bay and hills surrounding it as viewed from portico of Egyptian palace. This was followed by an Allied War Review reel and a Mutt and Jeff cartoon entitled "The Kaiser's American Dentists." Corra Green then sang an aria from an American light opera which was well received. "Salome" opened with drawn satin curtains over the screen and these were parted as the titles appeared. Colored effects playing over screen at opening of feature were dimmed as initial titles came to termination.

The following week "Salome" was shown at the Metropolitan, St. Paul, and William Farnum was at the Fox-Schubert in "Riders of the Purple Sage." Evelyn Nesbit in "The Woman Who Gave," Annette Kellermann in "Queen of the Sea," Tom Mix in "Fame and Fortune," Theda Bara in "The She Devil," William Farnum in "Les Miserables," William Farnum in "The Rainbow Trail," Peggy Hylan in "Marriages Are Made" and George Walsh in "On the Jump" are also slated for showing at the Fox-Schubert in the near future.

William Raynor is managing the Fox-Schubert.

TO WELCOME THEM

You'll Get a Good Feature if You Dig Up the Old Film

OUR boys have started coming home from the training camps and from the battlefields of France. The arrival of the first big detachments of them in your community will probably be the signal for a great celebration. You will not be doing your part for your community and your city unless you make your theatre the central feature of it.

Here is a suggestion: Many local film companies and news weeklies made pictures of the soldiers as they started away at the call to arms or in the training camps. If you can dig these up and put them on at this home-again celebration you will interest not only the soldiers themselves, but all of their kin and friends. Everyone will be anxious to see again how they looked "then."

St. Louis Lags Advertisingly

is a two-column layout on motion pictures alone.

During the week the Post-Dispatch carries regularly the ads of six houses; the Globe-Democrat has nine, this time grouped together; the Republic has eight and the Times three.

In brief, with the exception of the cases indicated there is very little to boast about in the St. Louis situation. But it is apparent to us that if one of the newspapers will make a definite effort to land the motion picture advertising and accompany it with reading matter daily, it will get results. The Star is making a good showing now so far as advertising is concerned, but with a total of 115 theatres it ought to have at least half.

"None of the theatres seem to have an exact plan of advertising," writes one St. Louis authority. And that is just what seems to be the matter. What a newspaper there needs is a man who understands motion picture advertising and who can not only go out and sell the advertising, but who can show the exhibitor how to use it. The St. Louis exhibitor has not been developed as an advertiser and it is not altogether his fault, for he simply hasn't had the chance. We would blame some of the exhibitors for saying that advertising does not pay from the way that they go about it and the lack of cooperation on the part of the newspapers is evident.

About all that we can say about St. Louis is that there is a golden opportunity there for some paper.

Franklin Wants Fewer, Better Pictures

By Harold B. Franklin
Manager, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

WHEN a prominent producer and an equally prominent exhibitor deign to discuss such an important question as to what kind of pictures the public want, it shows that the motion picture industry is progressing nicely. Eugene H. Roth, manager of two important theatres in San Francisco wrote a pointed article recently to MOTION PICTURE NEWS which inspired Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Picture Corporation to reply forcefully.

One of the questions set forth by Mr. Goldfish was whether the exhibitor really spoke for his patrons in the booking of pictures. Mr. Goldfish is right in a good many things that he says, but he's wrong when he questions the capability of the exhibitor in voicing his patrons' taste.

The producer should welcome criticism on the part of exhibitors. The exhibitor is better able to judge the kind of pictures his audiences want than the producer, not because of a higher intelligence or a better understanding than the producer, but because the box-office is the best barometer of PUBLIC OPINION that has yet been conceived. We cannot help but agree that box-office receipts are eloquent indeed.

Those exhibitors, who through misjudgment pass up a good picture merely favor competitors who get the picture and reap the reward. The question as to what the public wants is not original with the motion picture industry. The public has always been clamoring for better plays and better books.

The progress made in motion picture stories however is an achievement that the industry ought well be proud of. The novelty of merely seeing persons move on the screen is gone, and the day is past when any kind of a story will do. Compare the crude stories of the earlier days of motion pictures and watch the development it has made up to the present day and it will be readily seen that motion pictures have kept march with progress. Perhaps one of the big things about motion pictures is that it will never reach its highest point of attainment. Progress demands higher ideals.

The triumph of the motion pictures is in its success in revealing in its own inimitable way the big moments of life. Human every day stories of real life appear to have met with greatest favors. Motion pictures have produced many writers and men of creative genius that the industry can well be proud of. These men revealed romance and pathos true to nature.

Glimpse of Shea's Hippodrome and inspiration to Harold Franklin's great success

The successful motion picture must not only have a "good" story, and good players, but to find true expression, should be handled freely and capably by the director, who can bring a far greater interpretation than the author ever intended. D. W. Griffith's handling of "The Birth of a Nation" proves this point conclusively. "The Clansman" was merely a novel and a melodrama. Griffith through the medium of motion pictures made it a masterpiece.

The greatest fault with most features is that they are manufactured—not produced. In order to keep pace with an artificial demand producers turn out features the same way as a tailor would turn out clothes. The star must produce a feature every six or eight weeks. Is it surprising that the story does not always go over big? Really big themes are the birth of inspiration and cannot be turned out to order. It is gratifying to note that Charles Chaplin is pointing the way to true artistry and also financial success. Mr. Chaplin evidently takes as much time as is necessary to complete a picture. The result is a more complete production and greater returns. When producers, stars and directors will make less productions, stop rushing themselves to death, and make those productions good, there will be less complaint of poor stories. The industry will be on a more solid basis than ever and the problem of over production will eliminate itself.

Your Idea and Ours

WE are reprinting here only a portion of an advertisement of the Rex theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., which gives the bill for the week. This is as clear a piece of misrepresentation as we have ever seen. With the reduction that is made here it is hard to read the matter to which we refer.

First the Rex refers to Chaplin as "the million-dollar comedian in his newest and latest scream"—meaning "Triple Trouble," which was made during the time that he was with Essanay. That would be bad enough, but the advertisement goes ahead to use a number of lines connecting the picture up with the war! Apparently a deliberate effort has been made to make it appear that this picture is "Shoulder Arms."

Friends, the temptation to do things like this isn't worth the while. They will as surely kill the public's faith in your house as you are alive. And don't ever think that the motion picture fans of these days do not know what is going on. You may bunk a majority of the public, but it is those who really know who are going to make real enemies for theatres that do things like this.

If you show the "best ever" today, what are you going to offer them the next time?

ALHAMBRA THEATRE, Indianapolis, has even carried out the wireless idea in the border design in advertising William S. Hart in "The Border Wireless." It is a little point that will be caught by everyone who sees the display. The advertisement is well balanced and well typed, but the general idea would have been better carried out if a figure of Hart in uniform had been used in the half-tone. As a matter of fact, in another display which we have at hand there is used a picture of Hart as a "two-gun man." This is just what we would have avoided in this particular case. This "two-gun" stuff has been worked to death not only in current releases but in the flock of re-issues, and when you get a picture of an entirely different appeal we would advise playing that appeal rather than making it appear that this is one of the usual Hart pictures.

No matter how popular an actor may be, the public likes to think that he is going to do something "different." Certainly he does something different in this one and we believe money is lost by not bringing out that point.

Lots of times you have to go out and hunt up Opportunity, but the veteran knockers are always around.

NEWSPAPER space costs a lot of money in Chicago newspapers, but this does not keep the Casino theatre from getting mighty good results without using a large amount of room. Evidently the ad writer for the Casino takes advantage of every opportunity that presents itself.

"KISS OR KILL"

A UNIVERSAL SPECIAL PRODUCTION
NOW PLAYING CASINO 58 W. MADISON
ALSO 2ND EPISODE "THE LURE of the CIRCUS"

In this case the Casino has used a design from one of the one-sheets supplied by Universal. In our special service section on this picture we advised the use of this one-sheet in a teaser campaign and we are mighty glad to see that the Casino has gone us one better and has incorporated this in the newspaper space. When you can get as striking a cut as this it is sure to attract attention provided you are willing to leave a lot of "talk" out of your display. The line that the Casino uses, "The play that keeps you guessing to the very last scene," is mighty good stuff. And the whole thing is only two inches, single column.

HERE is another misleading advertisement. You will note the way that the name of D. W. Griffith is made the most prominent thing in the entire display. Now it is true that Dorothy Gish was formerly with D. W. Griffith, but that fact had no business being displayed in this way unless the designer meant to leave the impression in some minds that this was one of the Griffith productions and to take advantage of the hit that "Hearts of the World" and "The Great Love" have scored in Portland, Ore.

And rather than result in being in any way introductory to Miss Gish, this sort of a display is very apt to leave the impression that the exhibitor didn't think that he had much of a picture and that he resorted to this method of getting the people into the theatre. As a matter of fact, the people's theatre had plenty of selling argument for "Battling Jane," but aside from the use of the striking cut this seems to have been deliberately ignored to make way for camouflage.

A trey of hearts is worth more than a king of clubs—in your theatre.

WE have printed so many specimens of splendid advertising from the Jensen and Von Herberg theatres in Seattle that we are sorry to have to record this one, and we are doing it to point out a lesson to other exhibitors. The greatest fault about this display, which occupies seventeen inches across four columns, is that it is absolutely meaningless.

Never use a cut unless it has some idea to put over. Now the cut here is from a very minor incident in the story, of a killing during the escape of the girl from the Chinese palace. It leaves the impression upon the reader who doesn't know that the girl has just committed murder, and such things are generally revolting in advertising. There are many charming scenes in this picture that might be illustrated, many big points that might be brought out, but they have all been missed in the display and the only thing that could induce people to come to see the picture would be the popularity of the star and the title of the picture.

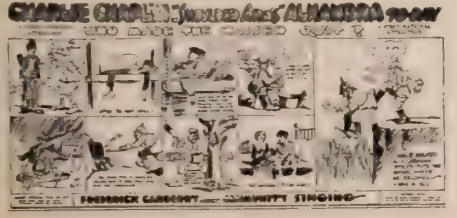
Yes, we like striking cuts, big and with plenty of white space, but the cut is supposed to tell the story. Recall your circus days and remember, after you had admired these bills for days and days, remember what an added thrill you got when the thing that you wanted to see the most became a live event under your very eyes? That's the answer in the use of cuts in advertising.

Victory may be claimed often, but it only has to be WON once.

USING eight inches across the page, Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, has adopted a novel plan for one of its advertisements of Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms." The advertising writer has simply had an artist to sketch a number of the actual scenes of the production, but the whole effect given is that of one of the comic strips that appear in the newspapers. It winds up with Charlie kicking the Kaiser off into the blazes.



There is only one fault with it. The designer has tried to keep this from looking anything like the usual advertisement, but that was scarcely a reason to put the name of the theatre and the title of the picure in lettering that is very difficult to read. But that is only a minor matter and certainly this display got just about one hundred per cent attention from the readers of the Milwaukee papers.

A patron that is staying away is worth the trouble of two that "come anyway."

RIALTO THEATRE, San Francisco, manages to supply some of the cleverest advertising that comes to this desk and the greatest thing about it is that all of the displays are marked with simplicity. When you can pick out the real selling line of a picture, then give it the punch of an illustration, and finally resist the temptation of "talking your head off" you are coming mighty close to the best in advertising.

"A whirlwind of bullets, bravery and horsemanship," is an expression that will get everyone that likes a lot of action in pictures, and the rest of the display is in keeping with that. Instead of using a bunch of adjectives, the writer goes on to say, "It's the speediest thing that Whirlwind Mix has ever done, and that's saying a whole lot." Yes, it is saying a whole lot, and it is saying it well, like you were talking to your next-door neighbor, the sort of stuff that people will believe. Ten inches, three columns are occupied by this display.

we find that it is given a population of 1,028. But the proprietor of the Dixie theatre in that town shows that he is up to the game of keeping the appeal of his pictures right up to the minute, and considering that the only medium the theatre has is a weekly newspaper it has done mighty well.

Ten inches three columns was used in this display. In the center of it was incorporated one of the two-column advertisements furnished by Universal, and then the manager proceeded to bring the appeal of the picture coincident with the news of the day. So he didn't overlook the fact that the war is over and he referred the very first thing to that. "See the Boys Who Did It" is the catch line. Then a few words tell that this picture shows why peace is at hand.

In war or any other sort of pictures there is a whole lot in taking advantage of every opportunity. There is nothing of the fake about this display, but it does show that the manager was thinking.

WHAT DID YOU DO?

We Don't Think that We Have the Only Good Ideas

WITH each issue of the NEWS there appears one or more Special Service Sections, designed to tell the exhibitor how he can get the most out of the various productions so covered. In this number there are three.

Ideas suggested in these pages on other pictures have been followed by exhibitors all over the country. They are not intended to provide special "stunts" or trick exploitation, but to give the exhibitor an idea of the picture and the general policy that he should pursue.

But we don't think that we have any mortgage on the good ideas. Many of the exhibitors are doing novel and interesting things, and we would like to be able to record everyone of the worth while ones.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

THERE is nothing particularly new about the use of a phonograph in a motion picture presentation; in fact, it has been done to death in many communities by simply plastering on the record every time that it is indicated in the picture that a talking machine might be playing somewhere. In fact, our "arm chair" exhibitors find this one of their most popular suggestions.

But the presentation of "Too Fat to Fight" at the Rialto this week shows that there is nothing that cannot be given a novel touch, and just one or two little things make this one of the big features of Rothapfel's presentation of the Rex Beach picture. We are just calling attention to this in the opening, for we want to comment more fully on this when we come to the musical arrangement of the picture.

"Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody" stars this week's bill, all in all one of the best that the Rialto has ever known, and that is saying a great deal. This is played with the lights in gold and includes a czimbalon solo rendered by Belle Nyary. Then there comes another novel effect, for Rothapfel this week deliberately dropped the usual scenic, but served the same purpose and welded it into the first vocal number. Although the uncorrected program did announce a scenic, that is really part of a news reel from Hearst-Pathe showing the Sultan of Morocco entering one of his cities at the head of 10,000. Just at the end of this very short section of film the lights become all blue, with the orchestra bathed in that color, and the curtains over the side displays at either side part showing streams and the wooded country, with the skies blue and scores of stars shining. Then, with the Byzantine setting lighted in blue, Gladys Rice sings "Till I Wake," one of the Indian love lyrics by Alice Woodfore-Finden. You can see how the spirit of the East has been perfectly carried out.

Then comes the Animated, and for the first time the Rialto gets the Official War Review this week. Heretofore it has been shown at the Rivoli only, but, as "Under Four Flags," the third official Government picture, is playing its return engagement there, the review would be out of place. Hearst-Pathe pictures, showing the Mt. Vernon at Charleston, Mass., after she had been torpedoed and the destroyers that formed her convoy, opens the weekly to the music of "Liberty Bell March." Then come pictures of Boston greeting the commander of the Twenty-sixth Division, General Edwards, followed by pictures of five hundred wounded soldiers reaching New York. For these two we have "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" played once through, followed with the trio from "When You Come Back" played very slowly and with a roll of drums.

Pictures of New York City greeting Captain Carpenter, commander of the Vindictive on the Zeebrugge raid, are shown to the tune of "Jack Tar March." Camp Upton boys say farewell to army life and get a big hand, with "Hunkatin" first played and then changing to "Soldier's Farewell Song" as we see the soldiers on their way to their homes. These pictures had all been Hearst-Pathe up to this time, and now comes Gaumont with pictures of "The Lambs," named in honor of the Lambs' work for the War Work Campaign being launched, and here we have all sorts of whistle effects and "Stein Song" played. Gaumont also shows the President inspecting the new wireless phone at Washington, called "America's greatest achievement of the war." "On to Victory" is the music here, with the orchestra coming up strong as the President makes his appearance.

"Pomp and Circuumstance," the most crashing portions of it, is used with the first of the Official War Review, and you will appreciate the excellence of the selection when you see that the picture shows a meeting of King George, General Folk, Marshal Haig and General Petain. Then comes Admiral Roman, U. S. N., on the scene and the audience has another chance to break into great applause. Then comes pictures of the Italians using flame throwers in their preparation for an infantry attack, and here the music changes to "Turbulence," with the noises of battle reproduced as the soldiers go forward. Then we are shown the Americans adding to the number of their prisoners, and the orchestra swings into "Keep Your Head Down, Fritzi Boy." In all of our experience never have we heard a song take so with an audience. There is the relief at the end of hostilities that gives us a lighter look. The audience got to humming and was almost in song, on the evening we saw the show, before the end, for it was continued through a Hearst-Pathe cartoon which showed the Kaiser over a globe declaring he would rule the world, then the globe disappearing and an American soldier appearing with it, and the final observation that "Christmas dinner is cheaper in Holland." It gets a laugh of first dimensions.

Then comes Vincente Ballester, who unquestionably has one of the finest baritone voices ever heard in a popular priced house, singing "I Believe" from "Otello." The only setting for this are the red inner curtains with the center dome blue.

There is a splendid musical setting for the feature, which caused more actual enjoyment than almost any picture that we have ever seen at either of the Rothapfel theatres. The audience was soon radiating its delight. "April Moods" starts off with the first title, which is very long, and where the words "A Mighty Change Has Come" flash on the screen the music changes into "Battle Hymn of the Republic," which continues until the action of the picture begins, at the home of Major Brewster, and then the music returns to "April Moods." Then at the title "Dimples Loved Sweet Things," "Dimples" being the nickname of the hero of the story, and where he meets the girl he loves, there is a single strain of "Sympathy," the theme, turning into "This Is the Life," followed with a trumpet call and "Over There" as he expresses his sympathy for the Allies.

This is where the phonograph gets in its work. With a title beginning "There Was Always Someone" and starting with a dance we hear a phonograph playing "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier," then, as two women pass before the window, we get "Flatterer," pp and very slowly. Now the scene changes to Major Brewster, declaring that the Allies are facing their worst moment, and the music swings into "Rachimanoff Prelude," and with the next title, "They Are Fighting on the Sacred Fields

AT TWO EXTREMES

Rothapfel Shown as Director and Orchestra Leader the Same Day

SUNDAY revealed Rothapfel in two roles, as a director of the orchestra at the Rivoli and as a director of the battle scenes in the Goldwyn feature, "Too Fat to Fight," at the Rialto. Not that either surprised us, but it was rather a coincidence that they should come the same day.

Mr. Rothapfel was formerly a member of the marines and served as a lieutenant during a portion of the war when his services were needed. And everyone knows that he has a mighty good idea of what pictures should be. So Director Hobart Henley, who is responsible for the rest of the excellent production, turned over to him the making of the night trench scenes and the result has been some of the most vivid work that the screen has seen.

And after witnessing this picture we went to the Rivoli and found him leading the wonderful orchestration for "Under Four Flags." No, that is not an error. After trying the experiment of using it at both theatres for a week, something that he had never done before, there was such a demand to see the picture that he brought it back for another week at the Rivoli. In doing this he broke another rule of his houses, never to extend or repeat the run of an attraction, no matter what its quality might be.

But the crowds at the Rivoli showed that the great demand to see it existed. One reason for that is that is that no presentation of a picture in New York has been accorded the newspaper space that was given the Rothapfel showing, both on the Monday after the opening and on the Sunday following, at the conclusion of the run at the two houses. The New York Times devoted the whole of its amusement editorial to his presentation of "Under Two Flags."

And the greatest part of this was the musical setting, which we gave you in full in the Nov. 30 issue.

of France," we have a few bars of "Marseillaise," and then with the title "They Shall Not Pass" two and a half bars of "Marseillaise" with tympany rumble. But all during this we have the phonograph playing all the time as the lighter headed one of the party continues to dance. Now during this we have had the reproductions of the scratch of the starting and sudden stopping of the phonograph, so realistic that when Dimples comes and breaks the phonograph he gets a roar from the audience, and the orchestra breaks into "It's Time for Every Boy To Be a Soldier."

At the title "Like His Country, Dimples Is Unprepared" we have "Keep Going" played, burlesque style, very slowly, turning into "Sailing" as he sits down to the rowing machine, and here the music again helps the laugh along. "Keep Going" is then resumed with a few bars of the theme as he sits down. With the pictures of the boys going over we get two choruses of "Over There." There is another clever touch when we have the question asked on the screen "What Does That Mean?" and the answer comes "Another American Going West," and here we get "Glory, Glory Hallelujah" on the organ with the muted trumpets sounding "Taps."

Then we get a flash of the "Y" man about his early morning duties with "How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning," and then when we are shown also the K. of C. and the Salvation Army workers we get "He's My Pal," followed by "My Doughboy." Then come the scenes of the woman refugee and her children and Dimples going to the rescue, and now we have "Onward Christian Soldiers" played through once accompanied by the organ rumble. Then there follows "Pack Up Your Troubles," with "Sympathy" returning as the girl enters the scenes as an ambulance driver, and then as the ambulance fades away we have again "Prelude Rachimanoff" at agitato, and then as the boys go over the top it becomes "Yankee Doodle," accompanied by the battle effects and then further agitato, and then as Dimples goes to the wounded man and is himself shot we get "Glory, Glory Hallelujah," followed by a numbered selection, and then the theme as the girl sees the wounded man being placed in her ambulance. "My Angel of the Flaming Cross is used for the scenes in the hospital, and then when we have the Hun machines hospital hunting it turns into a numbered selection, and with the title "Kultur," showing the effects of the Huns' bombing, "Rachimanoff Prelude" is again brought into play.

One of the cleverest incidents in the whole picture is where the hero, on the couch, with one of his legs amputated, begins to sing "Hail, Hail the Gang's All Here" to cheer up the others, and the orchestra breaks into this with zest. Then comes "Rachimanoff" and a roll of drums and flourish as Cherub is decorated, and at the end the chorus of "Sympathy."

Lights are down at the start of the second orchestral number and then fade into red and then into blue as selections from "Oh, Oh Delphine" are played.

Mack Sennett has outdone himself with "Her First Mistake," easily one of the funniest comedies ever made. The audience laughed itself sick with the efforts of the baby to capture the slippery soap, the marvellous dog actor, the equally interesting cat and rooster and the host of human funmakers that take part. The selections are, of course, all light and are played in the following order: "Pretty Baby," "Barnyard Blues" with the rooster fight, then "Oh, Lady Lady" for some of the comic love scenes, and changing to "Chicken Reel" with the rooster alarm clock. Then we get "Chimes of Normandy," "Katy," "Themolo Trot," "Tout la Nuit," "I Want a Doll," "Make Way," and at the end "Why Do They Call Them Babies?"

It is certainly a wonderful bill at the Rialto, and Mr. Rothapfel and his chiefs have taken advantage in the fullest of every opportunity offered by the pictures.

At the Rivoli there is "Under Four Flags," playing a return engagement. The presentation is exactly the same as when originally made by Mr. Rothapfel, which was described fully in these columns.

ROTHAPFEL AND GOLDFISH ON TOUR WEST

Exhibitor and Producer to Meet Showmen of a Number of the Larger Cities

READERS of "Seeing the Rialto and Rivoli With Rothapfel" will for the second time since the establishment of that feature really have to see the two theatres without him, for, accompanied by Samuel Goldfish, head of Goldwyn Pictures, he left last Tuesday for the West, combining a rest trip with an opportunity to meet exhibitors in a number of cities.

Their first stop was in Cleveland where they spoke to exhibitors and the next was Chicago where they put in the afternoon and evening meeting leading showmen. Other stops on the program include Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Seattle and Los Angeles where the longest stay will be made. On their return they will stop in New Orleans.

It is exactly a year since Mr. Rothapfel has taken any rest and since that time he has taken on his shoulders the added responsibility of the Rivoli, opened shortly after the first of the year. His only absences from the city have been to make pictures for the U. S. Marine Corps and to stage one of the official government pictures in Washington.

But while he will not be here in person, you will find that the spirit of his presentations remain at the two theatres, for the organization that he has built up is able to do wonders—though we must admit that at times there is something of the Rothapfel touch missing.

English House Sets High Pace in Exploitation

Sun Exclusives, the big English distributing house, has just set a high mark for the exploitation of pictures with the issuance of handsome booklets on "The Way of an Eagle" and "The Elder Miss Blossom." The cut out plan is followed on the covers, so that the pictures of the leading character placed on the third page can be immediately seen.

Each booklet contains a number of scenes from the productions and an attractively told story of the production. One striking thing about this sort of exploitation is that it avoids adjectives and superlatives about the picture, but goes ahead to show you the scenes and tell you the story and let that do the selling—which it is sure to do.

Newspaper Praises Laurence as He Leaves Grand Rapids

Sid Laurence, who was manager of the Majestic Garden, Grand Rapids, Mich., until he resigned a few days ago to become manager of one of the John H. Kunsky string of theatres in Detroit, is one of those who believes in making his theatre an institution. That he has done so is proven by the editorial statements of the local press. This is what one of the papers said of him:

Mr. Laurence is one of the most popular managers who ever took charge of a motion picture theatre in this city. He has created and maintained a pleasant, cheerful atmosphere about the house and meeting his public in a cordial manner has made scores of personal friends besides having added much to the popularity of the theatre.

His originality in creating interesting lobby displays and novel scene sets has gained the attention of various motion picture magazines.

Mr. Laurence also is a good entertainer and in cases of emergency has frequently stepped to the stage and entertained the audience successfully.

Mr. Laurence is a member of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce and has been in touch with many of the city's best interests. Since announcing his resignation he has received various letters from Majestic patrons expressing regret at his departure.

Canadian Theatre Gives Passes to Buyers of Bonds

Iola theatre, one of the suburban houses of Toronto, aided the Fifth Canadian Victory Loan by offering passes for stated intervals to the purchasers of bonds among the patrons. Manager Jankes gave the purchaser of every $50 bond a pass good for a week, and these ranged up to the purchasers of $1,000 bonds, who got five passes good for two months each. Not only did this result in a heavy sale of bonds, but also in attracting renewed attention to the theatre.

Iowa Small City Theatre Again Proves It Pays to Make Your House Part of the Town

IT was almost a year ago that we told you the first story of things that Sisk and James, two crippled boys, are doing with the American theatre, Cherokee, Iowa. Though their city has a census population of only 4,884 they are making the American just as much an institution as the largest house in the land.

Although their only vehicle for advertising is a semi-weekly paper they believe in making the most of that, and they come mighty close to our idea of such advertising by using separate displays for each attraction. In that way they are able to put over the appeal for each distinct picture. By covering three pictures in each edition of the semi-weekly they get over the advertising for the entire week very nicely.

We are reproducing here a portion of one of the Cherokee papers. It will be noted that the larger space is devoted to the first picture that they have to sell, the slightly smaller space to the second and still smaller to the third day offering. The theatre maintains its distinctive border and uses it on all the exploitation and always employs the name plate in the advertising. And let us tell you that it pays even in a small city to be distinctive.

There was another clever little stunt in the way of advertising put over when the American paid for space to let the readers know that Charlie Chaplin had married Mildred Harris. The name of the theatre wasn't even used, but because of the distinctive border every reader knew from whom the news came.

As a matter of fact Sisk and James are always taking advantage of every opportunity to keep their house in the public eye, and so when the celebration of victory came along the theatre took a prominent part in it. The partners recently purchased a large Marimba xylophone, with which they toured a large part of the state, giving concerts for the Red Cross, and this was requisitioned and mounted on a truck and driven through the streets. All sorts of patriotic airs were rendered and it was not long before the boys had a parade of their own going all over Cherokee.

After parading awhile they drove to the center of the town and there obtained the services of a number of girls to lead and there followed regular community singing. Someone started in to take up a collection and then presented it to Sisk and James, who promptly turned it over to the War Camp Fund.

In summing up the results of what they did that day, the boys say: "We received hundreds of dollars' worth of advertising

City Plans to Preserve Its History in Pictures

Dayton, Ohio, is planning to preserve the history of the city in films as the result of a movement just started. This grew out of the recent celebration of the false news of the signing of the armistice. As soon as the celebration started Mark W. Gates, managing director of the Dayton theatre, arranged with the Pyramid Film Company, a local organization, to make pictures of the parade and they were exhibited the same evening at the Dayton.

The matter is now before the executive committee of the Greater Dayton Association and if it is acted upon favorably various big news events and matters of civic interest will be recorded.

Attractive Press Book Issued for Houdini Serial by Rolfe Attractions

EASILY one of the most artistic and useful press books for the handling of a serial that we have seen has just been issued by B. A. Rolfe Productions, giving exhibitors a thorough understanding of the chaptered story and presenting the wealth of exploitation aids that are offered. Sixteen pages, 11 by 15, are devoted to covering this matter.

Vivid colors are used in all the paper, the 24-sheet being particularly striking, representing the automaton figure with a great streak of light emerging from his eyes and striking the chained figure of Houdini. Mystery is carried through all of the designs, which include one, three and six sheets. Rolfe Productions is advising the exhibitors to make special use of the 24-sheets and if these do not attract attention to the serial nothing can.

Ready prepared advertising includes single, double and triple column displays in variety, but most of these bear the automaton figure in some action. There is a large number of cuts of Houdini himself in various sizes up to two columns, and in addition there are three different styles of one column cuts of Margaret Marsh and Ruth Stonehouse, who have prominent roles.

One thing that will commend these to the exhibitor is that they bear no lettering except the name of the player and are without brand names of any sort, so that they will be welcome in any newspaper, no matter how particular it may be. They will find just as ready use in advertising, for the designer has very correctly supplied large heads so that the faces of the two pretty women will speak for themselves.

For display in the lobby there are provided 22 by 28 pictures of Houdini, Miss Marsh and Miss Stonehouse. There will be a series of eight 11 by 14 scene pictures on each episode and in color.

The press matter is different from most of the serial stuff, for it is confined to entertaining stories about Houdini and the two women stars. It is stuff that ought to find a welcome in most photoplay departments.

Allied Generals' Pictures Adorn Theatre Stage

One of the most unique celebrations of the surrender of Germany was carried out by Fox's Terminal theatre, Newark, N. J. Now when the curtain rises at the start of the performances there is revealed a series of pictures of the Allied leaders, each draped with the national flag. In the center is a large picture of President Wilson and on one side pictures of Gen. Pershing, Gen. Foch and Field Marshal Haig. On the other are King Albert, Gen. Diaz and Gen. Petain. The general setting is a garden scene with the flowers represented in abundance. At each showing "The Star Spangled Banner" is played and sung by the audience.

Thomas Tells How Women Defeat Censors

By H. M. Thomas

Manager Rialto Theatre, Omaha, Neb.

I HAVE just had brought to my mind very forcibly the value of co-operation in regard to censorship matter, and some time when you have the opportunity I believe it might not be a bad idea to take up in your valued publication the question of co-operation on this censorship matter, as it pertains to womens organizations and the like.

Citing my own particular case—about three years ago a committee representing the Omaha Womans Club—an organization composed of the various women's clubs of Omaha—called on me in regard to "better and cleaner pictures," as they expressed it.

I asked the ladies in my office, and instead of taking the position that they were "butting in" on my business, I talked the matter over at length with them, explaining that the majority of pictures were clean and inoffensive, and asking them to thoroughly study the situation before making any report, giving them passes to my theatre, and securing passes from other theatres for them as well. These ladies made it a point to visit five or six performances a week, and at the end of a couple of months they told me that they were surprised that so few bad pictures were shown, and so made their report to the club, who also asked various representatives of the picture industry to address their open meetings. These same ladies asked the various theatres to run special children's performances in the morning, which the theatres did (I myself at a loss for many weeks until the ladies suggested I stop), but personally I would have been willing to have stood the loss indefinitely (it wasn't much) simply to have the goodwill of the ladies' organization. Then we suggested have especially picked programs at the suburban houses on Friday nights, these programs to have the O. K. of the women's club, and this is still in vogue.

What's the result? When we had our censorship fight two years ago at the Legislature, these very same ladies were anxious and willing to appear on the floor of the Senate and House and explain that the pictures shown in Nebraska did not need censoring.

I keep on very friendly terms with this committee, and only lately the chairman told me how disgusted she was at state meeting of the federated clubs because the various members throughout the state began condemning moving pictures as being unfit to be shown without being censored, which information my informant told me she was positive these ladies got by hearsay rather than personal investigation.

Now here's my point—if the various managers take these ladies, try to cultivate them, and educate them along the right channels, the first thing they are going to do is to make friends and boosters for the theatre and the motion picture industry, whereas if they pass them up as "meddling old ladies," who have no business "butting in," the first thing we know we have the censorship evil to combat.

A Stunt with Chaplin

I am sorry I did not have a photograph taken of our lobby display on Charlie Chaplin. It was in the form of a trench and we built it of beaver board, with many of the comical signs that were used in the original sets, in fact, my scenic artist tried to copy the trench scene from the picture as nearly as possible, with the result that the front made a very novel and attractive appearance. Then just to draw people down to see the front and the billing, every night I had a band concert from 7 to 8 in front of the theatre, taking the boys from both of our theatres to make up this band, and the results achieved more than justified the expense for the band.

Now I am aware that this may not be the very highest class showmanship, but I believe in picture business, where you are in one town 365 days in the year you have to pull novelties once in a while or your house goes dead. I wouldn't advise a band every night in front of a theatre, or I wouldn't advise one on a "high-brow" picture, but with a comedy such as Chaplin's, which has an appeal to every one, I believe this novelty works out very good indeed. There might also be advanced argument against using special fronts, and I do not use them all the time, but now and then an attractively gotten up front, to my mind, is just as essential as a window display in any large store—the only thing is HAVE YOUR SPECIAL FRONT ON PAR WITH YOUR THEATRE. In other words, do not put out a front unless you are willing to spend money for it.

We had quite a bit of success with community singing during the fall, and our audience seemed to enjoy it very much, but for fear of overdoing it we are not using this stunt any more, though if a house has not tried community singing, provided they get a good leader, I think it's a mighty good innovation to try for awhile.

Slides of Soldier Boys

Another good stunt I got from a fellow exhibitor of mine at Lincoln, Nebraska, namely, having slides made of local boys who were at the front, showing a certain number of these slides at each performance, and advertising in advance when these slides would be shown. Naturally all the friends and relatives of the boys would come down and become boosters of the house from then on. I also ran a slide asking for photographs of boys over

Thomas, of Omaha, Tells Many Things You Can Do

THIS is the sort of a letter that we like to receive. We appealed to H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto theatre, Omaha, Neb., and one of the livest showmen in the world to tell us some of the live things that he has done lately. So he proceeded to sit down and write us in his chatty vein about a few of the things that he has been doing.

You will find something of value in every paragraph of this. If all other exhibitors would be as free to tell what they are doing there would be a whole lot greater prosperity in the industry as a whole.

Winnipeg Newspapers Devote Page Displays to Helping Out Theatres on the Reopening

PROBABLY the reader does not notice it as closely as one sitting at the desk of the Exhibitors Service Bureau, but can you not recall scores of cases where an idea has been reproduced in these columns and where it has been quickly adopted in various sections of the country?

After all that is the greatest testimonial of all for this department, and it supplies the reason why it was launched—that this might be the forum of the best thought of the industry. With the establishment of this department we told you that we were going to print matter here of real value to the exhibitor—not mere praise to satisfy some subscriber or flatter some producer.

We have tried especially to give accounts of constructive work that has been done, and naturally the greatest field for this work has been in publicity. We have been given especial attention to what the newspapers are doing for the exhibitor and what the theatre managers themselves are doing. We have had the pleasure of recording here the start of many movements which have grown until they have swept the country and have resulted in greater prosperity and manifold interest in the motion picture.

One of the most recent of these came with the influenza scare. The NEWS printed the first of the advertisements that appeared dealing with it. It told you how theatres had taken the chance to advertise their freedom from contagion and their cleanliness, in short, how they took this chance to attract new general attention to their houses. Following this we have printed a number of announcements that appeared in the newspapers following the reopening.

Now the movement has spread to Winnipeg, Manitoba, where the Telegram and the Tribune both carried full page displays on the reopening of the theatres beginning with Thanksgiving. Presumably this space was donated by the newspapers themselves as a part of their co-operation with motion picture managers, and we trust that we are right in this conclusion, for it shows a growth in the spirit that should sweep the country. And evidently such is the case, for the advertisement of the Tribune calls attention to the motion picture advertisements that it carries.

The Tribune referred to motion picture advertising incidentally

All the signs are good. We hope that all of the exhibitors of the country will keep us posted on the new ideas and the new movements that are developed. We do not claim to have originated any of these. All we do claim is that this department has made good in affording a forum of the best motion picture thought, and we want it to grow until it represents one hundred per cent of it.

ABOUT LOCAL PICTURES

Just a Suggestion to Save Time for Yourselves

WE have been receiving many inquiries about various pictures taken at army camps in various sections of the country. We are always mighty glad to give quick response to any requests of this sort, but here is a little suggestion that will save you exhibitors' time and probably get better results.

Practically all of these pictures are purely local—that is, they were made for circulation in the States that are represented in the particular training camp. Therefore, they have no national interest and naturally do not come into New York or into the general releasing field.

We would suggest that the exhibitors write directly to the exchange with which they do business, if they are in a hurry, as in the end we have to go to that source to get the information before we can transmit it to the exhibitor, and therefore some time is lost.

Thomas Tells How Women Aided in Defeating Censorship

there to be left at the box office for the purpose of making slides. Now possibly this plan would not work in a city as large as New York or Chicago, but I think is a good plan in other large cities as well as the smaller ones.

Then on the Monday night we celebrated armistice signing I ran all the slides, and told the audience to make all the noise they possibly could, and I want to tell you 2,500 people cheering as loud as they could is one grand sight, and then when I had them all stand and sing the "Star Spangled Banner," it surely proved to me the beauty of community singing.

For War Work Meetings

Another thing I did to help make our houses popular, and that was to turn them over in the mornings, whenever I was asked to, for special war work meetings. Of course, I lost the revenue up to twelve o'clock noon, but I never could have received the amount of favorable advertising for the money it cost me to remain closed, and I made friends for the house—people who will stay with you when a fight comes on for censorship, Sunday closing and the like. Let's take the closing down for "flu." While in some towns the papers fought the opening of the theatres, and the business men's organizations did likewise, in Omaha the papers were on our side from the very start, as well as the various business men's organizations, etc., and as a result Omaha was one of the very first towns to open up, which simply proves conclusively to my mind that the closer the theatre men associate with the interests of the city the better off they will be in time of need.

I could write page after page telling of many "stunts" I have pulled, some which went over big and some which flopped just as bad, but my own personal opinion is that it pays to keep on pulling novelties, for while all of them may not make good, almost any scorekeeper will tell you that a real baseball player has more errors charged up to him than a poor one, for the simple reason that he accepts more chances.

Exploits Mrs. Charles Chaplin, Clipped from Feature

How great is the interest of the public in seeing pictures of Mrs. Charles Chaplin (Mildred Harris) has just been recorded at the Strand theatre, Minneapolis. Charles G. Banham, manager of the theatre, had the manager of the local Jewel exchange clip out some close-ups from "The Price of a Good Time," in which Miss Harris was the star, and placed that portion of film in his news weeklies. It was then advertised in bigger type than the feature or any of the other subjects.

So successful was the plan that the Jewel exchange arranged to get more copies of the close-ups and is distributing them to any exhibitors in the territory that desire to show Mrs. Chaplin.

Comedy and Song Demand From the War

By Edward L. Hyman
Director Film Division, War Office Commission on Training Camp Activities

IT would be silly presumption for me, as well as a glaring exhibit of bad taste, to even venture an attempt to map out the peacetime entertainment tastes of a nation, despite the fact that for eight months my task has been to personally see that the proper film was selected for soldiers in camps of the United States.

It is an overwhelming question, this proposition of figuring out just the sort of photoplay that is going to bring the returned soldier and those who have remained at home to keep the proverbial domestic fires burning, into the movie theatre.

Producers are even now considering the problem from every angle, and it is due to keep the exhibitor guessing and experimenting for some time to come. One element that is making it more difficult right now, is that supply has caught up with demand. Careless booking NOW, it would seem to me, is doubly more dangerous than it ever was before.

Comedy a Life-Saver

The soldier just had to laugh in order to be content with his wartime lot, and the comedy was the lifesaver whether it was shown in a Liberty theatre, in a town house or in a welfare hut.

The happiest soldiers known in the Great War were the Americans. Sometimes it was hard to grin and the film comedy helped 'em over the rough spots.

American men have learned to smile in every conceivable depressing, disastrous situation.

And now that the dove of peace has lighted, they are going to smile and laugh more than ever before, and the natural deduction is that their entertainment will have to be the chipper, wholesome straight comedy or comedy drama. Film comedy and outdoor dramas, I figure, will lead in popularity.

Hail, the day of the screen comedy.

Exit, padded cinema tales of deprivation, sacrifice, depression, heart aches and longing.

If you have been even quartered in a camp 1,500 miles from home and Her and the Kids, you will have had your fill of this.

They Like Animals

Novelty comedies with animals and children in them have pleased the soldiers. Before the war the comedies of home life held most fascination for the women fans, but separation from the home abode has made the American soldier appreciate these ties more than ever before and while on guard duty or on K. P. stretch, he often looked back and coddled the funny little incidents of his home life that before never had entertained for him more than a cynical, perhaps bored smile.

I believe that the producer and exhibitor who makes 'em laugh is bound to go over the top in peace time. While comedies are sure to be popular the simple, quiet, home dramas are bound to have their day, too.

Proof of the soldier's love of song and comedy: Minstrel show given by the boys at Camp Meade, Maryland, on an outdoor stage

More vocal music, good, bad and otherwise, has been let loose in cantonments in this country in one week than ragtime New York, spilled in a year, yes, two.

And more instrumental melody has floated over barracks streets in seven days than Boston separated itself from in a dozen grand opera seasons.

I've seen twenty thousand men singing in camp with a nerve that would have turned the Kaiser sky blue with dejection.

They Want to Sing

And I've also had them packed in a Liberty theatre entranced by a song leader to the point that they swayed the building with their lusty conception of "Over There" or "Pack Up Your Old Kit Bag."

But what has that to do with the film business?

A blamed lot, old top!

Songful Americans who never before gave music more than a third or fourth thought have learned what it is and what it can do for a fellow who is tired and out of sorts.

And those soldier Americans have had the music they liked served up to them in Liberty theatres and in welfare huts almost whenever they craved it.

They are going to your theatre the more often if you have a good orchestra and "bust" up your film program once in awhile at least with some one who can sing, or play an instrument, with snap and feeling.

Why, it was only necessary to have the regimental band give a concert in front of a Liberty theatre and they'd follow the bass drummer and the cornetist into the house much like the kids in the fable trapezed after the Pied Piper of Hamlin.

I don't say that you will have to swell out your orchestra to ten and twenty men. No, not that. But it looks to me as if you will have to have your men in the pit play together better than they did before we got into the war.

I have been in houses where the music dragged and was waily and exasperating and irritating and where the orchestra men spent most of the time leaving the pit to get a smoke back in the dressing room.

The men in the camps have had a lot of bum music dished up to them and a whole lot of good. And they have been discriminating and will recognize the pleasant and soothing music when they hear it.

And don't forget that tip about a soloist once in awhile. The men in the orchestra have been used to lifting their voices with a camp song leader, and they'll appreciate it if a soloist now and then invites them to join in the chorus.

Of course you realize that it is an old trick to make a man entertain himself.

Striking Advertising Prepared for Exploitation of "The Common Cause"

IN issuing its press sheet on the J. Stuart Blackton special, "The Common Cause," Vitagraph calls special attention to the value of newspaper advertising. What is said we all know to be true, but the twist that is given the statement adds to the interest and we quote a few paragraphs.

One of the two-column "ready-made" displays

"With the end of hostilities in the theatre of war there came the dawn of a new era in the theatre of business. Every business man of acumen—manufacturer, jobber, retailer—is playing a part in the newer drama—trade reconstruction. And they all speak the same language—advertising. There have been great advertising epochs in the past, but the world never saw such gigantic advertising as is now under way by the business-getters of the world.

"The motion picture theatre is, collectively, one of the biggest business enterprises in the world, and competition is just as keen in this field as in any other. Consequently, it is up to the exhibitor who would be successful to join the advertising march, and we offer here a series of newspaper ad. cuts for use in your campaign on 'The Common Cause,' which are certain to bring you big box-office returns.

"One of the mightiest factors in the success of a motion picture, as in that of any other product, is newspaper advertising. Newspapers are the most regular and the most widely read media in the world, and consequently a man having something to sell only uses sound business judgment and intelligence when he avails himself of the wide circulation of newspapers to make a success of his enterprise."

Unusually attractive electros have been prepared ranging from four columns down to singles. All of these bear scenes from the production and brief sales talks on the picture. They are hand drawn and will attract attention on any newspaper page. All the exhibitor will have to do is to fill in the name of his house, the date of showing and his prices. In the series are two four-column ads., one three, two twos and a single.

Worth while half tones in singles and doubles

In addition to this there are mighty attractive cuts of the two featured players that will show up to great advantage in the advertising that exhibitors prepare for themselves. They are striking full length figures of Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer in one column sizes and then the heads of the players in both single and double sizes. These are without reading matter of any sort and therefore can be used in either the text of the newspapers or in the displays. Besides there is a great variety of scene cuts in both single and double column.

"The war story with a laugh, a thrill and a sob" is the excellent selling line that has been adopted for the ready-made advertising for exhibitors.

Front and interior of lobby at Broadway theatre, where Mr. Kashin got a triple display effect

Triple Effect Used by Kashin at Broadway Bringing Out 2 Pictures and a News Event

THREE elements are combined into one lobby display by Maurice A. Kashin at the Broadway theatre this week, where "After the War," the Argosy Film special is the feature with Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" held over for a fifth week.

But the thing that commends the display most is that Mr. Kashin took advantage of the news events of the day. The New York papers were full of the accounts of the arrival of the first returning soldiers and so he brought in that point. As a matter of fact the actual soldiers to which the newspapers referred were not released in New York in time to see the particular display, but sent to quarantine, but that is a little thing that the public overlooks.

The thing that the public GETS is that the exhibitor is alive and up to the minute, and so with the big electric sign under the central arch of the lobby, "Welcome Home, Boys." And so half of the people that passed up and down Broadway during the week stopped to look at the details of the display and a large share of them went into the theatre. More than that, it made a walking advertisement out of every soldier, who took the electric sign as a mark of appreciation, which it was.

The display itself is very simple. No part of it was brought out to the sidewalk, but the first of it, with the exception of some posters, was started with the three arches just inside the lobby. On one side was the now familiar picture of Chaplin in uniform and a rifle on his back and on the other side was another medallion with the picture of a thoughtful American and an equally grave German, both in attitudes of thought, and below these was "Grace Cunard in 'After the War.'" The shield at the side of this picture read: "Now that the war is over, what comes next?"

At the back of the lobby there was carried out the same idea that was used in the 24-sheet on "After the War." Here large paintings of the principal characters including Grace Cunard, the Hun, the American, the Hun's wife, the ambassador and the mysterious character. In the center was a striking photograph of Miss Cunard and below this there was repeated the line, "Now that the war is over, what comes next?" All of these pictures were in a shadow box Cupid figures on the doors, remindful of the marriage of Charlie Chaplin, which was featured last week, were still retained over the doors. All Broadway is still talking about the combination display that was used on the two Chaplins and the word traveled so far that during the present week men who failed to take the precaution of consulting the newspaper came to the theatre expecting to see pictures in which the comedian and his bride appeared.

But as a matter of fact the Broadway displays are attracting general attention these days. It is no uncommon thing to hear some one ask a friend, "Have you seen the front of the Broadway theatre this week?" and then an animated discussion follows. There were many wiseacres that insisted that the lobby didn't amount to anything so far as New York theatres were concerned, but the answer is that they have been largely responsible for converting the house from one where empty seats were generally the rule to crowded houses under the new regime.

Lobby displays will pay anywhere, if they are worked out with a purpose and not merely intended to be something blatant—to ballyhoo the crowds into the theatre.

Models Give Atmosphere for "Even as You and I"

M. W. McGee, manager of the Majestic in Detroit, believes that while a program should have variety the "big punch" should be a scenic or musical prelude to serve as an introduction to the feature picture. Mr. McGee has done this consistently for several seasons and an evidence of it is his staging of "Even as You and I," the Universal-Lois Weber offering this week. Incidentally, it might be remarked, that this feature has never been shown locally before.

As much of the action of "Even as You and I" takes place in an artist's studio, it was only natural that an artist studio should form the background for the special settings. When the curtain rises the audience finds a painter in his smock at work on a bit of canvass while grouped against the background are three models, representing Love, Youth and Honor, posed and draped so that the models in the film shown a few moments later, seem to be merely duplicates.

Of course the singers employ numbers which further carry the audience into the atmosphere of the play and it seems the most natural thing in the world to view the open scenes of the drama.

Remember the old joke about "In flew Enza." It'll be all worth while if some real ideas fly in now.

COINCIDENCE?

Second Member of the Advisory Board Gets Detroit Post

SHORTLY after the announcement of the appointment of A. J. Moeller, then manager of a theatre in Ann Arbor, Mich, as a member of the Advisory Board, we received notice of his appointment to the directorship of the handsome new Theatre de Luxe, Detroit.

Another one of the new members of the board has been Sid Laurence, manager of the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich. Scarcely had the legendary ink become dry than there comes the news that he has accepted a post with the John H. Kunsky interests in Detroit. The name of the theatre that he will manage has not yet been announced.

Is this a mere coincidence? Or is it proof that the men that we have selected to be members of the board represent the best in theatre management, without regard to the size of the city, and that this is recognized by the big men in all departments of motion pictures? We have our own idea.

Live News from the Producers

Serials Strike The Popular Chord

Exhibitors, Who Formerly Never Used Them, Are Now Eulogizing Serials, According to Information Compiled by Vitagraph

THERE have been numerous indications of the growing hold which serials are getting on the motion picture fans, but none is quite so convincing as the increasing number of houses which are making this form of entertainment a feature of their programs.

One of the recent recruits is the Iris theatre of Denver, a house seating 1,100 persons, of which A. H. Haagen is manager. In a letter to the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, Mr. Haagen says that on Vitagraph serial days he never plays to less than 5,000 admissions and frequently to more. In his letter he also wrote:

"The writer is so constituted that he is always ready to kick if he does not get what he thinks is rightfully his; and he is just as ready to speak a word of praise when same is deserved. Therefore he wishes to acknowledge that he made a wise move when he first started booking Vitagraph serials, beginning with 'Vengeance—and the Woman,' and congratulates himself on having displayed considerable 'horse sense' in booking each succeeding Vitagraph Serial."

The letter has taken its place in the Vitagraph archives, which, they say, are beginning to bulge with tributes to the latest Vitagraph serial, "The Iron Test," in which Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway are the featured stars.

The Moreno-Holloway combination, which will alternate with William Duncan on the Vitagraph serial program, has already found great favor with the serial house patrons, according to report.

In the Screen theatre of New York City the serial not only broke box-office records, but caused the fans to break down the doors. Harry Fogarty, the manager, in writing to Vitagraph about it, said:

"After running two episodes of 'The Iron Test,' I am satisfied it is even stronger than 'A Fight for Millions,' and on the strength of it am signing a contract now for your next serial. On the first and second episodes we went back to the old days and gave out the red checks. Not only did it break box-office records, but the crowds broke my doors."

Samuel Sheer, Jr., manager of the Victoria, Palace and Hyperion theatres of Corona, L. I., thinks "The Iron Test" the best of all the Vitagraph serials, and thinks it so strongly that he has booked it for all of his houses.

W. E. Nichols, manager of the Imp theatre of Elgin, Texas, says that in spite of some of the very best Texas rain he has ever seen "The Iron Test" has crowded his house for three episodes. On every night that the picture was shown, he said, there was a downpour, but the people were more determined than the rain and they turned out in such crowds as to surprise and delight the exhibitor.

Saul S. Harris is the general manager of four theatres in Little Rock, Ark., and he recently made glad the heart of the Vitagraph manager in Dallas with the following:

"Thought I would drop you a few lines and give you my opinion, or, to be exact, the opinion of the audience, on 'The Iron Test.' It has met with instant approval, and from the favorable remarks in and about the theatre, I am sure that it will be a better drawing card than any other Vitagraph serial—and that is saying quite a bit."

Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs Active in Chicago

Jewel Productions' big film "The Yellow Dog" is still being exploited by the Anti-Yellow Dog clubs as a particular weapon to advance their efforts.

A demonstration of large proportions is said to have taken place recently in Chicago, when one of the 93 Anti-Yellow Dog clubs of that city assembled near the Milford theatre carrying banners and expressing otherwise their opinions of Bolshevists.

Ziegfeld, Chicago, Shows "Lafayette We Come" Successfully

"Lafayette We Come," the big victory spectacle produced by the Affiliated and released through the Exhibitors-Mutual Distributing Corporation, was shown at the Ziegfeld, one of the prominent Michigan avenue houses in Chicago, the week of November 23-29.

"Lafayette We Come" is a dramatization of the memorable speech of General Pershing at the tomb of Lafayette. The production was made under the direction of Leonce Perret, the French director, and features E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli. It is a portrayal of the spirit of gratitude evidenced by America to France for Lafayette's assistance in America's time of need and the cementing of the bond of friendship between the two great republics of the world.

New Song Dedicated to Norma Talmadge

Fast on the heels of the news that Norma Talmadge had been created an Indian princess by a band of Comanches while working in the West on her forthcoming Select picture, "The Heart of Wetona," word comes from Pittsburgh that this star has again been honored by having a song dedicated to her in recognition of her portrayal of the role of "San San" in "The Forbidden City."

The song was written by Danny Nirella, a composer whose numbers have pleased music enthusiasts generally.

Intensive Exploitation for New Serial

Saturday Evening Post and Extensive Billboard Campaign to Help Put Over Next Pathe Serial, "The Lightning Raider," Featuring Pearl White

IN an effort to make its forthcoming Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," the most successful in its long list of serial releases, Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that it will start on December 28 an extensive advertising campaign in The Saturday Evening Post. The first advertisement which will precede the release of the first episode of "The Lightning Raider" by about a week will be a double page display.

This will be the first instance on record of a serial being advertised in this publication which admittedly has more readers than any other weekly. Pathe executives hope by this campaign to greatly increase the already enormous army of serial fans throughout the country. That it will furnish ready-made audiences for "The Lightning Raider," with its famous star, Pearl White, goes almost without saying.

Double Page Display

Following the first ad will be a complete double page display on "The Lightning Raider" in the Saturday Evening Post's issue of January 4, one day before the release date of the first episode. A peculiar innovation and one that will certainly redound to Pathe's credit with exhibitors will be introduced with the advertisement of January 4.

A coupon will be incorporated in the ad which when clipped and presented to the nearest picture theatre will entitle the holder to an autographed photograph of Miss White. Pathe will furnish these photographs to exhibitors who book "The Lightning Raider" and it is a service feature which is expected to increase business enormously.

In addition to the Saturday Evening Post campaign, the new Pearl White serial will be backed by one of the widest billposting campaigns ever put on the boards. The new Pearl White posters are declared to be the finest ever produced by the Pathe Poster Department and the showing has been arranged after weeks of study on the part of the firm's advertising department.

Every state in the country will be covered and special attention will be paid to posting the central points where they will do exhibitor the most good. Weather conditions have also been closely watched in arranging the display and heavier billing placed in sections where the absence of ice and snow will allow people to go about more freely and look at the billboards.

Just Fifteen Episodes

"The Lightning Raider" will positively not be extended beyond its original length of fifteen episodes, according to an announcement from Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Mr. Brunet states that for some unaccountable reason the opinion has spread through the trade that this serial might be extended. A number of exhibitors have written to the branches and to the home office in New York making inquiry on this subject and Mr. Brunet wishes the impression corrected that there will be any extension.

He realizes that exhibitors should know the exact length of a serial in order to make their plans and his statement will set at rest for all time the rumors that have been circulated.

Judging from advance bookings on "The Lightning Raider" it will be the most popular serial ever released by Pathe, and the most successful of the many Pearl White serials, according to report.

W. E. Raynor, of the New York Pathe branch has just booked the Fox Circuit, and the advance bookings from Pathe branches throughout the country indicate a record breaking business everywhere for this serial.

The usual exceptional advertising and exploitation helps will be used by the Pathe Exchange on this picture in addition to the nation-wide billing and magazine campaigns.

"Venus in the East" Finished in the West by Washburn

Bryant Washburn is finishing up "Venus in the East" in the West. It was started in the East, and on his return to Hollywood the shutdown period offered the star an opportunity to rest up a bit.

His director, Donald Crisp, did some acting on his own account meanwhile, for D. W. Griffith, had injured his foot in the process. But he is able to go on with the new Paramount film nevertheless.

There is said to be a notable cast in "Venus in the East," which Gardner Hunting adapted from the story written by Wallace Irwin in the Saturday Evening Post. Margery Wilson, a charming actress, who has starred in many films, is leading woman, while Anna Q. Nilsson has an important role also.

"High Pockets" Purchased for Louis Bennison

Betzwood Film Company acquired the rights to William Patterson White's story "High Pockets" for its Louis Bennison star series. "High Pockets" was the featured novel in a recent issue of Adventure.

Within twenty-four hours from the time the issue appeared on the newsstands of Philadelphia the screen rights of the story had been bought and paid for. Incidentally, the picture has already been completed and will be released following "Oh, Johnny," the first of the Bennison series to be released through Goldwyn.

Norman Jefferies, who transacted the purchase, is now commissioned to negotiate immediately for several other stories suitable for Louis Bennison.

Los Angeles Run for Sweet Film

First Run for "The Unpardonable Sin," Starring Blanche Sweet, Is in Los Angeles, Says Harry Garson

THE much heralded Garson-Neilan production, "The Unpardonable Sin," in which Blanche Sweet is the star, will be shown to the public for the first time in Los Angeles.

It has been known for some time that Mr. Garson's representatives in the East had been quietly looking around for a big first-class theatre in New York to house this picture, it was the original intention to give it a Broadway run previous to its being released elsewhere.

In the meantime, the Clunie interests, nosing another big feature that would possibly duplicate the successful runs of some of those that this theatre has housed in the past, made overtures to Mr. Garson which finally decided him to launch the picture in Los Angeles.

The engagement is declared to be a significant one, not only for the fact that it is said to be about the best effort of Director Marshall Neilan, but also serves to bring back to the screen Blanche Sweet after a year and a half's absence from the studios.

"The Unpardonable Sin" has been nearly three months in the making, and while no serious delays occurred at one time it looked as though production would be held up on account of the "flu" epidemic that prevailed in violent form in Los Angeles.

However, by hard work and the utilizing of many underground channels, Mr. Garson got the necessary permits from the authorities to take the big scenes, so in the midst of police, physicians, gas-masks and atomizers, the big scenes were taken.

Much interest is attached to "The Unpardonable Sin" from the fact that there was said to be quite a controversy over the book between the publishers and the New York Library, it first being rumored that Major Rupert Hughes' story was too strong—or too anti-German.

Anyway the controversy became of enough importance for the New York Times to come out in a strong editorial supporting the book.

The story originally ran as a serial in the Red Book, and to the astonishment of the editors of that magazine, it is declared that the Red Book almost completely sold off the news-stands on the days of its appearance. Later Harper and Brothers published the book.

The story is also to be syndicated among the most important daily newspapers throughout the country. The picture is eight reels in length and is described as containing many stirring scenes and situations.

Immediately after the launching of the picture in Los Angeles Mr. Garson will come East to arrange for a Broadway run.

Roy Stewart Rides for Triangle Dec. 8

Roy Stewart is the featured player in "The Silent Rider," a Triangle play released December 8, and Ethel Flemming makes her second appearance as Stewart's leading lady after her recent portrayals in several pictures with William Desmond.

Written by C. N. Clarke, "The Silent Rider" is described as a vigorous narrative of the great ranch country dealing with rangers, rustlers and round-ups. As the name implies it gives Roy unusual opportunities for the display of his skill as an expert horseman.

Cliff Smith, who has lately been directing William Desmond, handled the megaphone on this production with Steve Rounds as the cameraman. L. S. McKee and Leo Willis are members of the supporting cast.

"The Spreading Evil" Has Special Announcement

"The Spreading Evil," the new seven part James Keane production, will most probably be released on the State right plan, and the word "Special" is the slogan according to the following declaration from the management:

"Full right and title to the term 'Special' feature is claimed by the management for this picture on the grounds that 'The Spreading Evil' is a distinct 'Special' in every sense of the word. 'Special' theme, 'Special' treatment of the theme, 'Special' line of advertising, and 'Special' method suggested and extended to the distributor for exploiting the picture in a 'Special' way, thereby helping his friend and customer, 'Mr. Exhibitor,' to secure 'Special' admission prices from movie fans, whose gaze would be instantly attracted by the 'Special' movie front provided by the 'Special' high-class advertising matter, which will be furnished at manufacturer's cost so that the 'live wire' exhibitor, who realizes the necessity and advantage of a big display front, may go the limit for half his competitor's expense. Let's help the 'Special' feature buyer, help the exhibitor to get 'Special' money to help the 'Special' producer make 'Special' pictures of 'Special' quality."

C. K. Young's Last Select Declared Surpassing

Clara Kimball Young in her latest and forthcoming Select offering, "The Road Through the Dark," is declared to have risen in acting ability to heights surpassing anything she has done in the past.

This new feature is the first in Miss Young's Second Select Series. It was made by the star during two months' intensive work in studio and on location at Hollywood, Cal.

The photoplay is based on a story written by Maud Radford Warren and published in a recent issue of Metropolitan Magazine.

Houdini Rights Selling Fast

B. A. Rolph Productions Announces That the Houdini Serial, "The Master Mystery," Has Sold Three More Territories

"THE MASTER MYSTERY," the fifteen episode super-serial, starring Houdini, the handcuff king, produced by B. A. Rolfe for Octagon Films, Inc., is to be released in three additional territories this month, according to separate announcements issued by the respective exchanges.

B. A. Rolfe Productions of Atlanta released the first episode in its territory on Dec. 2; B. A. Rolfe Productions of Dallas follows suit on Dec. 15, while B. A. Rolfe Productions of Eastern Pennsylvania announces that the first showings in its territory will be held on Dec. 30.

The two other territories—New England and New Jersey—are already showing the serial. In the former territory, controlled by B. A. Rolfe Productions of New England, "The Master Mystery" was released Nov. 18, while in the latter territory booked by B. A. Rolfe Productions of Northern New Jersey, the release date was Nov. 25.

Reports from the territories already playing are declared to indicate that Houdini in "The Master Mystery" is drawing unusually heavy business.

Joseph L. Friedman, who is at the head of The Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago, in referring to the Houdini serial, said:

"When prints of the early episodes of "The Master Mystery" arrived in Chicago they were brought first to me for a private screening.

"I had had considerable correspondence with Octagon Films, Inc., relative to handling the distribution of the serial in his territory, but had emphatically stated that the price was so high that I felt that I could not distribute the picture with profit to myself.

"When I saw the early episodes I admitted I was conquered, and signed a contract to distribute the serial. The territory obtained by the Celebrated Players Film Corporation covers Illinois and Indiana."

B. A. Rolfe Productions, of Northern New Jersey, with offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, announces that "The Master Mystery," which it has just released, has opened auspiciously in its territory and that the bookings are coming in at a rapid rate.

A remarkable number of bookings is said to have been secured, a few of the important houses being Keeney's theatre in Newark; the National, Jersey City; Savoy, Newark; Majestic, Paterson; Fulton, Union Hill; Bishop's, Hoboken; Colonial, Newark; Colonial, West Hoboken; Keith's, Jersey City, and the Montauk, Passaic.

"The Iron Test" Making Vitagraph Record

WITH the reopening of territory all over the country, Vitagraph's newest serial, "The Iron Test," is sweeping into what is indicated will culminate in a record career for Vitagraph, judging from the enthusiastic reports coming from their offices

This new Vitagraph chapter-play is said to have scored the largest pre-release write-up of any in the history of Vitagraph serials, and this early promise of success is declared to have already passed the initial stages of fulfilment

For the past two weeks it appears to be the opinion that "The Iron Test," will eclipse its predecessors, "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance—and the Woman," "The Woman in the Web," and "A Fight for Millions."

"The Iron Test" is the product of the pens of Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady and they have given this serial a radically different turn and twist in theme and treatment than their earlier serials. This novelty is said to have found great favor with exhibitors and is stressed in the testimonial of Saul E. Harris, general manager of a chain of theatres in Little Rock, Arkansas.

"It has met with instant approval," writes Mr. Harris, "and from the favorable remarks heard in and about the theatre, I am sure that 'The Iron Test' will be even a better drawing card than any other Vitagraph serial—and that is saying quite a bit."

Harry Fogarty, of the Screen Theatre, New York City, also reports that "The Iron Test" has caught prosperity on the rebound.

"We went back to the old days with this one," says Mr. Fogarty, "Not only did we give out the red checks, but the crowds broke my doors trying to get in."

Robertson-Cole Arrangements Are Discussed

ONE of the main topics of conversation in film circles of late has been the arrangement between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, by which Robertson-Cole furnishes all pictures for the Exhibitors' Mutual 29 exchanges in the United States and Canada.

The full significance of the arrangement is now becoming more apparent, for the move came without blare of trumpets, and now the importance of the arrangement is manifesting itself.

The Robertson-Cole Company, one of America's leading exporting concerns, stands in the position of banker or agent for a number of producers. By applying the methods of big business to the supervision of production, they are said to be bringing systematization into the screen world.

Stars releasing through Robertson-Cole will make no more than eight productions a year. This means that exhibitors will get the full value of these stars, that there will be no mad rush to provide vehicles, no frenzied pace of hurried filming.

This places the productions coming, via Robertson-Cole, through the Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges in a position wholly unique in the film world. Since productions must meet a certain standard to be accepted by Robertson-Cole, a definite level of excellence is guaranteed.

"It is the thing the motion picture business has needed for years," said one official. "Step by step the industry must discard the old-fashioned way of doing business—the way that came naturally from a business that outgrew itself a hundred times over in a few years. To go on, indeed to even exist, we must have sound business methods."

Vitagraph West Coast Players Manage to Keep Very Active

William Duncan and members of his company, including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, have been on "location" in San Francisco's Chinatown the last week making scenes for the next Vitagraph serial, "The Man of Might." As is usual, Duncan insisted on having the real thing in his picture. Up to date "Dunc" has used Mexicans, Yaqui Indians, Japanese, Chinese and a few other types in his serial.

During the recent layoff the Vitagraph Big V Special Comedy stars, Lawrence Semon and Montgomery and Rock, devoted their time to doping new stuff for their work. Semon stole away to Riverside and came back with a full-drawn set of plans for a mimic city, while the Montgomery-Rock team hid themselves away in a cave in the mountains.

Although they do not get much chance to wear finery in their serial work, Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, stars of the Vitagraph serial, "The Iron Test," are continually buying clothes. "Tony" has about as many suits of clothes as had the late Berry Wall, while Miss Holloway, who is in her quieter moments a musician of rare accomplishment, has one of the finest wardrobes in the motion picture fashion colony.

Deciding to do something to which there would be some tangible result during the recent period of rest from studio activities, Earle Williams, Vitagraph Blue Ribbon star, made a trip to Catalina Island and returned with a twenty-five pound tuna fish. Some people are just naturally lucky.

"Wanted for Murder" Circulars Cause Excitement

During the posting of the startling "Wanted for Murder" circulars on Broadway, New York, preceding its presentation at the Broadway theatre, Sunday, Dec. 8, such crowds flocked to read this sign as to cause a block of traffic throughout the city.

This bill-posting idea was created by Mr. M. Kashin, manager of the Broadway theatre, who is presenting Mr. Rapf's production on Sunday, Dec. 8, in his usual cyclonic style.

It is described as one of the most novel advertising stunts yet put on for photo-play presentation.

Martin Johnson's remarkable "Cannibals of the South Seas" had its Canadian premiere at Massey Hall, Toronto, November 23.

Massey Hall, which seats 2,950, was declared to be jammed for the opening of the adventure series. The premiere, arranged by the Robertson-Cole Company, which handles the world rights, was said to be a success in every way, and were presented in practically the same way that they were offered in the ball room of the Hotel Astor in New York recently.

"Hitting the High Spots" Is Next Lytell

"HITTING the High Spots," starring Bert Lytell, is Metro Pictures Corporation's All Star Series release for the week of Dec. 9. Mr. Lytell is the author as well as the star of the picture, which is said to contain adventure, suspense, comedy and romance.

The states and picturesque regions of Mexico are the backgrounds used for the scenes of this feature, which was one of the last screen stories made by Lytell before he obtained his release from Metro for the duration of the war to enter an officers' training camp to qualify for a commission in the army.

Lytells role is that of a young live-wire American engineer, Bob Durland, who risks his life among Mexican insurrectos to save the life of the father of the girl he wants to marry. It is an adventure story, and gives the star full scope for his talents. His delineation of Bob Durland is said to be forceful and winning.

What is declared to be a cast of gifted and nationally known screen and stage favorites supports the star. Eileen Percy has the role opposite Lytell, and is said to give one of the most pleasing performances of her career. Among the other players of note as members of Mr. Lytell's company are Winter Hall, Helen Dunbar, Gordon Griffith, Fred Goodwins, Stanton Heck, Al Edmonson, William Eagle Eye, William Courtright and Ileane Hume.

In addition to these over a thousand Mexicans take part in the big scenes of the picture. George D. Baker and Mr. Lytell adapted the story for the screen, and the direction was under Charles Swickard.

Ascher Chain Gets "For Freedom of the East"

GOLDWYN announces that Ira M. Lowry's patriotic screen spectacle, "For the Freedom of the East," distributed as a special, has been given a blanket booking in the Ascher chain of twenty-eight theatres in Chicago.

Its first run showing already has been had at the Metropolitan, where Chicago saw the first Chinese star of the screen, Lady Tsen Mei, in this drama of the rout of the Hun in Siberia.

The Ascher booking follows on the heels of the blanket booking of the production granted in New York by the Marcus Loew Circuit, whose bookers programmed the picture at sight with the observation, it is said, that it was one of the most remarkable and timely of war dramas.

"For the Freedom of the East" has not been adversely affected by the signing of the armistice. The first pages of American newspapers today are featuring the latest developments of the struggle of American and Allied soldiers in Siberia, where the coming of winter has made fighting the Bolsheviki a more trying job than it might ordinarily be.

There has been no diminution of interest in the absorbing romance of the scotching by America and the Allies of the serpent that sprung from German propaganda in Russia, and the picture is profiting accordingly everywhere, it is said.

The Loew houses in New York are making special preparations to give "For the Freedom of the East" a unique and distinctive setting. The lobbies of all the houses where the production is shown will be elaborately decorated in Chinese effects.

Christie Forces Plan to Expand

Squelch Rumor of Change in Distributing Plans by Announcement of Adding Two Reeler a Month to Schedule

CHARLES CHRISTIE, business manager of the Christie Film Company, comedy producers, announced this week that early in the new year his company will inaugurate production of a two-reel comedy each month in addition to the one-reel subjects it now turns out.

Mr. Christie, who has been in New York for the past two weeks and who plans leaving shortly for the coast, states that sixty per cent of the territory for these new comedies has already been closed. The remainder he expects to dispose of on his trip back to the headquarters of the company in Los Angeles.

That there is a big market for polite two-reel comedy—the same sort of comedy that the Christies have produced for many years in one-reel form—Mr. Christie, together with other film men, is a firm believer. These pictures will be modeled on the lines of the present one-reel subjects as to general character but it is the plan of Al Christie, the producer, to secure stories of five-reel calibre for two-reel production.

"There are enough two-reel stories being stretched into five these days," said Mr. Christie, "to warrant the reversal of the practice. We will make a sincere effort to get the best comedy stories for our new pictures, even as we have done in the past for the one-reelers. We are constantly in touch with the leading authors of comedy plots, men who know the style of polite comedy that we want. From these men and others we feel confident that we can secure the best comedy material that the field offers. I want to make it emphatic that the regular one-a-week single reel release will not suffer because of the added output. It will continue as before."

While in New York Mr. Christie expressed himself as immensely pleased with independent exchanges that have handled his product. They have succeeded in putting Christie comedies into the best of theatres throughout the United States. "Such men as J. L. Friedman of Chicago who handles ten states in the middle west, E. H. Emmick who has charge of distribution in the San Francisco and Los Angeles territories, Harry Charnas of Cleveland, Harry Scherlle, in Philadelphia, and the officials of the First National Exchange in New York have given Christie comedies wide distribution," said Mr. Christie, "and it is mainly due their continued reports as regards a demand for two-reelers that we are getting ready to furnish them."

Charles H. Christie, Business Manager of the Christie Comedy Company

Mr. Christie will still market the Christie comedies through the independent market. During his stay in New York there were several reports circulated to the effect that he intended handing the comedies over to some program house for distribution. This, however, is untrue.

The players to appear in the new two-reelers will be announced later. The casts are assured to be of the high Christie quality. Al Christie will personally direct the new pictures, thus insuring the exhibitor the sort of comedy that has made the name of Christie a box office attraction.

Alice Brady Makes a Record on Broadway

ALICE BRADY recently celebrated her one hundredth performance as a legitimate star on Broadway and in so doing established a unique record and one that gives every indication of developing into a remarkable one, of interest alike to those fond of the stage and the screen. Miss Brady's success at the Central theatre in "Forever After" has firmly established her one of the most brilliant and successful of the younger generation of American actresses, and the record she is establishing in that play is unique in that she is the sole motion picture star of international fame who has returned to the legitimate stage to score a substantial and lasting hit behind the footlights in New York.

Miss Brady's achievement as a star of the speaking stage gains in interest through the fact that her legitimate activities have in on wise interfered with the continuation of her work before the motion picture camera. In duplicating on the stage the wide following she has won on the screen, Miss Brady is by way of being one of New York's busiest young women, devoting her nights to the footlights and her days to the studio. And that her motion picture activities may in no way interfere with her legitimate work, and with an all season run on Broadway in "Forever After" ahead of her, Miss Brady recently consummated an arrangement with the Select Pictures to continue in films.

Fox Directors Receive Assignments

SEVERAL changes have been announced by William Fox in the assignments of his directors who are still in the East.

Richard Stanton will direct William Farnum in his next de luxe production, which will be filmed in the East. Frank Lloyd, who has directed the popular Fox star in most of his big spectacular and dramatic films has gone to California.

Charles J. Brabin, who recently completed "Buchanan's Wife" with Virginia Pearson in the title role, will direct Evelyn Nesbit in her next picture. At present Miss Nesbit is being directed by Kenean Buel in "Woman, Woman!"

Edmund Lawrence, who has been ill but now is fully recovered, again will direct Virginia Pearson. Mr. Lawrence was scheduled to direct "Buchanan's Wife," but because of his sudden illness the story was given to Mr. Brabin to film.

J. Gordon Edwards has started his thirty-first photoplay for William Fox. After the completion of the film, a super-production which is temporarily titled "The Scarlet Altars," Mr. Edwards will start for the Fox studios at Hollywood.

Mrs. Charles Chaplin (Mildred Harris)

PROBABLY never before in the history of motion pictures has such a unique opportunity been offered for the exploitation of a series of pictures as has resulted from the marriage of Mildred Harris, the Jewel Production star, to Charles Chaplin, the most famed comedian that stage or screen has ever known.

Whether she will retire from the screen is uncertain and no official word has come from her or her husband to that effect. But it remains that Jewel Productions has on hand already released four of her productions directed by Lois Weber, one other will be announced shortly while two others have been completed.

"The Price of a Good Time," "The Doctor and the Woman," "For Husbands Only" and "Borrowed Clothes" are the features that have already been released. "When a Girl Loves" is the striking and timely title of the new picture which will soon be announced by Jewel Productions. On account of the renewed demand that has sprung up for these pictures arrangements have been made to place new prints in the various exchanges.

UNQUESTIONABLY right at the present time Mildred Harris is the most talked of woman on the screen. People that have seen her before will want to see her again now that she is Mrs. Chaplin and the hundreds that haven't seen her, the thousands that rarely visit a motion picture theatre will flock in to get a chance to see what the girl the million dollar comedian secretly married looks like. And she can be legitimately advertised as Mrs. Charles Chaplin, and that isn't going to take anything away from the popularity of the great funmaker, but rather add to it.

So far as we know, M. Kashin, managing director of the Broadway theatre, was the first exhibitor in the country to take advantage of the chance to present the couple on the same screen. He was playing "Shoulder Arms" at the time and he immediately arranged for the showing of Miss Harris in "Borrowed Clothes." He announced the fact by means of a trailer with a wedding announcement the week previous to the showing and during the showing of the two features he carried the same trailer.

Full details of the way that the two pictures were put over at the Broadway and photographs of the lobby display will be found on page 3217 of the November 30 issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The plan can be followed by any other exhibitor and with little expense.

BUT whether you use the Chaplin pictures with the Mildred Harris pictures or not, you want to feature her as

Mildred Harris, in bridal garb, as she appears in "Borrowed Clothes"

Mrs. Charles Chaplin in all of your advertising. Jewel has prepared a striking series of advertisements to accomplish this purpose. They will be reproduced in the next issue of the NEWS, but suffice it to say that they are meant to carry out the idea of mystery. The name is not mentioned in this and it remains for you to decide whether you wish to add that or not.

None of this advertising features the full face of Miss Harris on the theory that this might weaken the appeal to the curiosity of those who want to see what she looks like. This is a good policy in your advance advertising, but after you have worked the curiosity up to a certain pitch there is no reason why you should not use striking scenes from the production of hers that you are playing in the newspapers.

Certainly the day after the opening of the run of the picture you ought to be able to get your local newspaper to carry a good story about the comedian's bride. The fact that they have been married has doubtless been published in your paper, but how much else does the public know? A live newspaper will be glad to co-operate if it has the interests of its readers at heart.

WE would not use anything of the teaser character. Where you are trying to put one idea you do not want to do anything that will get away from that one ida. It would be a great deal better, if necessary, to drop the suspense interest in the particular picture, but that it is not required if you will couple up the other facts.

On another page we are giving you special suggestions which have been framed with the special idea of the "Mrs. Chaplin" appeal. These do not allow the suspense to entirely drop, but they do associate the ending of the picture with the romance of the million dollar comedian and the Jewel star.

Keep anything of the morbid and the sensational out of your advertising. That doesn't mean that your lines cannot be piquant. Every one of these pictures has a punch to it, but they are all clean. There are no attacks, no illegitimate love or anything that needs to be explained in the end. There may be times when situations are a little suggestive in themselves, but they are quickly explained away.

Make "Romance" the dominant thing. Leave each picture with the impression on your readers that here is a love story that is different. The mystery element may be kept strong as desirable, but don't let too much of the sordid creep in. People will not want to come to look at a bride in whom they are interested if they have first reached the conclusion that she has a role in a specific picture which would not be clean and convincing in real life.

DUE to the fact that she did not attract great attention until she came under the direction of Lois Weber in Jewel Productions, most people are under the impression that she is new to the screen, but as a matter of fact, though she is only a little more than seventeen she is a veteran in point of service. She was born in Cheyenne, Wyo., in 1901, and as a little girl came to the screen. In fact with Vitagraph and the New York Motion Picture Corporation she was often seen in the role of the star of the production in infancy.

With Vitagraph she was seen in "Pride of the South" and "Wheels of Destiny," and then appeared in many of the two reelers with NYMP. She got her first real chance to show what she could do after the Fine Arts Company had become part of Triangle and she scored a hit with Sir Beerbohm Tree in "Old Folks at Home" and then was seen in "The Prodigal" and a number of other pictures. Her first big Lois Weber success was in "The Price of a Good Time."
